I appeal also to the experience of the members of the Judiciary Committee and of the Appropriations Committee if all this pretext about the obstruction to the rooms is not wholly without foundation. Nobody is obstructed; nobody is interfered with; and I hope, therefore, that as we are called upon to vote on this matter the Senate will agree to vote down this amendment and allow the section to stand as it came from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MORRILL. It is perfectly obvious that every Senator who has a committee-room near where this elevator is proposed to be located is very acute in discovering that it will be no annoyance to anybody else to have it placed somewhere else. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] is exceedingly anxious that this should not be anywhere near his magnificent room that he has on the right hand side of the eastern entrance to the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope the Senator will allow me just a moment. I said distinctly that if that was the only objection, I would gladly exchange with the Senator from Vermont and take his committee-room for the one I occupy.

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, but the Senator from Kansas went on to say that it was no possible inconvenience to any of the committee-rooms on the other side. I think he is a better judge of what is his own convenience than he is of that of some others.

Mr. HALE. The Senator will allow me on that point——

Mr. MORRILL. I wish to occupy only a moment more.

Mr. HALE. The Committee on Appropriations have an elevator at their door, and they would not want it removed. It does not inconvenience the room in the least.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] has the floor.

Mr. MORRILL. I should like very much that Senators could have an opportunity to go and see the place that the Architect of the Capitol at last agreed was the most appropriate place for this elevator, as I understood him.

Mr. INGALLS. Where was that?

Mr. MORRILL. Where it would not interfere at all with the beauty of the Capitol nor with any committee-room whatever.

Mr. INGALLS. Where was that?

Mr. MORRILL. Just at the entrance on the left-hand side coming in from the eastern door.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, it is pretty evident that if this matter depends on who has seen the Architect of the Capitol last, the Senator from Vermont ought to have another chance. The Senator from Iowa and my colleague have evidently been interviewing him since the Senator from Vermont has seen him, and they have been talking with him, and got him at very great disadvantage. I think now we ought to postpone this matter long enough at any rate to give the Senator from Vermont a chance to see Mr. Clark, who has shown himself very flexible, and will be able to give us another report by to-morrow morning.

The fact is, that an elevator in front of any committee-room is more or less a burden to the occupants of the room, especially to the occupants of a committee-room like that of the Judiciary or the Finance Committee, where there is very serious public service. That might be said also in regard to the Committee on Public Lands; but I do not care anything about that matter, because that is not in a place where people are constantly coming and going, as they would be in front of the door of the Finance Committee. The situation is very greatly different there from what it is either in front of the Appropriations Committee-room or the Judiciary Committee-room. There is a constant surging of people backward and forward there which will impede the ingress and egress, so far as the elevator is concerned, and will be a perpetual annoyance to the members of the Finance Committee in every way.

My colleague sees the disadvantage of this, and is willing to surrender his committee-room rather than to be discommoded by this elevator. I hope we shall have the same courtesy for the Senator from Vermont, that we shall not discommode anybody for that which is to-day practically without testimony in its favor. I have never heard a word said in favor of an elevator. There has never been any public complaint, there has never been any complaint on the part of any member of the Senate that I have ever heard of, except by two or three members of the Appropriations Committee. I have always supposed that really it was intended finally to result in taking that elevator away as soon as we got this one established over here, and that an amendment would be introduced to take away the one now annoying to the members of the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on the Judiciary. That, I have no doubt, was the scheme, to load up one set of committee rooms at the expense of another.

Mr. HALE. I do not look upon this matter in the light that some Senators have viewed it. I do not think it is an inconvenience to any committee-room to have an elevator at its door. I spend a good deal of time in the Committee on Appropriations, go in and out there a great many times a day, come up from below, and go down from above, and I have always considered it a convenience to have the elevator there. The Senator from Vermont who has conservative ideas, not wanting any changes, does not wish an elevator near the door of his committee-room, but in a month after it is in he will never know the difference.

The need of this elevator is simply to accommodate the public. The throng is increasing here every year. There are a hundred people visiting the Capitol every day now to ten five years ago, and it is increasing all the time. They fill up the corridors, they throng about the elevator, and one elevator is not enough. There ought to be another for the accommodation of the public. So far as my knowledge goes, that was the one object in view by the Committee on Appropriations, to accommodate this constantly increasing throng, and as a Senator said just now, it is not a pleasing spectacle when a thing of this kind is sought to be done for the public benefit, to find every man leaping to his feet and objecting because it is going to interfere a little with him. If you wait until nobody objects you will never have an elevator, you will never have this throng accommodated, they will crowd around this single elevator, and Senators, no matter what committee-room they belong to, will have no opportunity of using it. They go down to lunch, but they can not get in the elevator, it is filled three or four or five deep, and they have to come up the stairway. It is a nuisance that ought to be abated, and to my mind there ought not to be any objection raised here because it is going to be in one place or another. I insist that it does not inconvenience the Committee on Appropriations to have the elevator there. I never want to see that one removed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now recurs on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. PLUMB. I call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have already been ordered.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask that the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After line 1279, the Committee on Appropriations propose to insert:

Elevator for Senate wing of the Capitol: For the construction of an elevator in the south end of the eastern corridor of the Senate wing of the Capitol, $15,000; and the Architect of the Capitol is directed to have the same completed for use by December 1, 1887.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that mine is the same amendment which was first proposed by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and it would leave the place for the elevator where it would be no obstruction to any committee whatever, and as convenient as any spot in the Capitol. If it is placed where it is now proposed, it will be an inconvenience to no less than three committees, and will be an obstruction to the light of all the corridors.

Mr. PLUMB. I think the Senator from Vermont mistakes the question. His amendment was voted down. The question is now on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MORRILL. I renewed the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. HALE. That was just now voted down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Vermont did not understand the question, the Chair will again put it on his amendment; but the Chair put the question on his amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I know my amendment was voted on, but I renewed the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was the amendment the Chair last submitted to the Senate, but the Chair will again put the question on the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, similar to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa some time ago. The question is on that amendment to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment as reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PLUMB. I make a point of order on the amendment. It is not covered by the estimates, it increases the appropriation, and it is new legislation.

Mr. KENNA. Is it not too late to raise a point of order to that amendment after an amendment to it has been voted upon?

Mr. HALE. I take it the Senator can put on any clause increasing the conveniences at this end of the Capitol; it can put an elevator in or change a rule; it is only regulating the use of the Capitol.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas raise the point of order?

Mr. PLUMB. I make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that after the amendment has been received, and the yeas and nays have been ordered upon it, it is too late to raise the question. The Chair, however, is required under the rules to submit all questions of relevancy to the Senate, and the Chair will submit this question to the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not think the question of relevancy is raised at all. The point of the Senator from Kansas is that it is new legislation and does not appear in the regular estimates. The question of relevancy is not involved in the question of order, either directly or remotely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the question of order to the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Before that question is submitted I desire to ask the Chair if he understands the rule to be that the Committee on Appropriations can not add, for instance, a page to the number of pages in the Senate unless there is a prior estimate for that?

Mr. COCKRELL. The rule does not relate to Senate expenses.

Mr. ALLISON. This, I suppose, is a part of the regular expenses of the Senate. If there is anything we can regulate, it seems to me we can provide for our conveniences; but I may be entirely mistaken.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Chair kindly state again what the point of order is?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order raised by the Senator from Kansas is that the item with respect to an elevator for the Senate wing of the Capitol is not in order on the ground that no estimate has been made for it by any Department; that it is a new item of appropriation not contained in any estimate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Chair will decide it, as it has been a settled matter for twenty years. The rule has expressly for twenty years—I remember it that long—been that the question of estimates applied to amendments proposed by a Senator, that a single individual in this Chamber should not stand up and suddenly spring an amendment on any appropriation bill for which no Department had made an estimate. Then, in order to guard against the danger of that and not put everything in the hands of the Executive Department of the Government, the rule went on to provide that after having that right as to estimates, there should be a right to move amendments to carry out an existing law or treaty stipulation, or an act or resolution already passed through the Senate and not yet a law. Now, it comes to another alternative:

Or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

Now you have got all branches of the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator will read the next few lines he will see the point now raised. It is not on the first clause of Rule XVI, but on the second clause, as the Chair understands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I will read the second clause.

2. All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least one day before they are considered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

I have gone far enough, I suppose, to cover the point.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me suggest that that amendment was not referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is just what I was going to say, and that is really the only point. Here is an amendment that is not estimated for by the Secretary of the Treasury, who is supposed, or has been supposed under all former administrations, and I presume under this, to have no very special concern with how the two Houses of Congress regulate their Chambers and conveniences within their own administration. I suppose everybody has always agreed to that.

So we come to a case where naturally there would not be and should not be an estimate from the Secretary of the Treasury as to what it was desirable the Senate should do about its contingent expenses, for instance, whether it would pay $100 to the widow of an employé who was killed by an explosion in this wing of the Capitol to bury her husband or not. It is none of his business. So, then, the rule as applied to this case comes right down to the question of whether this amendment is proposed "by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate." That is the only test; it is not estimated for; it is not to carry into effect a treaty or a law; it is to co-ordinate the comfort and convenience of the Senate, and that is all.

Now, the amendment is moved by direction of a standing committee, it is reported by a standing committee, but it was not referred to that commitee two days before, or one day before, or whatever the time required by the rule is. There is the point, and literally, but absurdly, we should be bound to hold, if we had not construed it for twenty years the other way, that if the Committee on Appropriations wished to do anything about this Senate they must first consider the proposition, report it as an amendment to a bill that they have under consideration themselves, and send it back to themselves two days before they report it, which everybody has known for twenty years is absolutely absurd.

The construction of the rule has been the common-sense one for twenty years, that any committee reporting an amendment to an appropriation bill that was otherwise proper had the right to report with that bill any amendment that they saw fit to recommend, because the spirit of the rule requiring a reference of an amendment to the Committee on Appropriations was that they should have time to consider it, and nothing else.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for information. Has the contingent fund of the two Houses ever been estimated for, and, if so, by whom?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suppose not. It never ought to have been; and yet, on every side, from every committee of the Senate, for twenty years past, to my personal knowledge, amendments have been reported for which there was no estimate, and for which the rule provided that any committee had a right to call to the attention of this branch of Congress—and that is enough for us—a matter of public expenditure that the Department might be entirely opposed to. That is our affair.

Mr. KENNA. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. KENNA. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the proposed amendment, as recommended by the committee, was reached in the consideration of this bill; subjected to discussion; that one or two or three amendments to it were presented, debated, and voted down; and then, and not till then, the point of order was made against it. I submit to the Chair and to the Senate whether, without reference to the question he is discussing, it is not too late, after the failure of a Senator to perfect an amendment according to his own ideas, then to come in and make a point of order against it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It probably and undoubtedly is too late, but I do not wish to put it on the ground of blockading the capacity of the Senate to legislate on the careful report of a committee, whether we agree to it or not, upon any proposition that a Senate committee brings to this body. I do not put my discussion of this point upon that ground, although it is a perfectly good one; but I say that the construction of this rule has been for twenty years that the committee to whom other committees submit amendments, having amendments of its own to propose, having considered them (which was the only object of the reference of matters from other committees), may report them with the bill, and it is within the rule.

Mr. HARRIS. I beg to suggest to the Senator from Vermont that when he presided over the deliberations of this body, and when every other gentleman has presided over them for the last ten years, as I know, under this rule there has not been a single session of Congress that the Chair has not ruled amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations to be out of order because they contained new legislation. Our rules having formerly prescribed that the Presiding Officer of the Senate should have charge of the Senate end of the Capitol, and now that the Committee on Rules shall have control of that portion of the building, I have been seriously in doubt, and for my life I can not imagine who should make estimates for an elevator in the Capitol. I do not know what officer would be called upon to make the estimates.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend will allow me on his reference to when I was Presiding Officer, I undoubtedly held—I certainly ought to have held—that the Committee on Appropriations in respect to new legislation had no more authority than anybody else, than a Senator, or any other committee of the body; but it is clear to my mind, as has been held here and acquiesced in by the Senate for all these years, that an item of appropriation for an object which did not exist in the law anywhere, but which provided for an expenditure of money in the ordinary course of the Government, was not new legislation in the sense of making it obnoxious to a point of order on the ground that it was legislation.

I do not understand the Senator from Kansas to make a point that this is legislation on an appropriation bill, because as to the Navy, when there was a stress, we have held by acquiescence that you may provide on the naval appropriation bill for any number of new cruisers (and I wish you might provide for one hundred at the present session)—that such an amendment was not out of order on the question of legislation.

Mr. HARRIS. I remember that decision on the new cruisers, and it was one to which I did not assent myself. I should be very glad to find ground on which this amendment is in order.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Vermont is clearly right in holding that the rule which requires amendments to be referred to a committee and reported therefrom when it is applied to the Committee on Appropriations itself authorizes that committee, in spirit though not in letter, to make reports on the bill without going through the form of a previous reference. That has been the custom, as the Senator from Vermont says everybody has known for twenty years. I should say everybody has made it known for ten years according to my knowledge.

But I wish to enter a caveat against the opinion of the Senator from Vermont that it is too late to make an objection because there has been a vote in committee upon an amendment or there has been a consideration of it or there has been an amendment proposed to it. We are now in Committee of the Whole, and I conceive that an amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole might be held out of order, if out of order, by the Senate when the bill was reported to the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That I admit.

Mr. HOAR. So that that part of the Senator's suggestion I do not concur with. The other seems to me very clearly right.

Mr. BECK. I have observed that nothing produces so large a debate in the Senate as a point of order, and I have ascertained also after a long experience that there is but one rule that I have ever been able to understand, and that is that the Senate always does whatever a majority desires should be done, and I think this whole thing can be settled by submitting it to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is clearly of opinion that within the plain language of this rule the Committee on Appropriations have no more power to propose amendments than any other committee of the body, and the inhibition in the second clause of the rule applies to the Committee on Appropriations as well as to any other committee. Clause 2 of Rule XVI provides that:

> 2. All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least one day before they are considered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and when actually proposed to the bill, no amendment proposing to increase the amount stated in such amendment shall be received.

But it seems to the Chair that it has always been the practice of the Senate to allow the Committee on Appropriations to report amendments, and without that power they would be limited only to the estimates made by the Departments. Such a restraint on the power of the Senate can scarcely be tolerated under our rules. Nor does the Chair believe it was the real intention of the rule to prevent the Committee on Appropriations from reporting in favor of new items of appropriation, or to increase or diminish the amount of an appropriation. Otherwise the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate would be practically limited and would be almost nugatory. They would have to follow the estimates of the Departments literally; they could not increase the amount, nor could they add new items. That is rather a strained construction of the rule. Therefore the Chair desires to submit the question to the Senate for a vote, whether or not it will enforce this rule, in so many words, against the Committee on Appropriations. The Chair submits the question of order to the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Chair please state precisely the question of order submitted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question of order is: Is the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations in order? As many as are in favor of that proposition will say "aye;" the contrary "no." [Putting the question.] The "ayes" seem to have it. The "ayes" have it. The amendment is in order.

Mr. SAULSBURY. As the amendment now reported by the committee is to be submitted to a vote, I shall vote against it.

The present elevator was constructed on motion of the then Senator from Indiana, Mr. Morton. Prior to that time we had no elevator. Our predecessors who occupied seats here walked up and down. Now we propose to construct a second elevator. We have one elevator at this end of the Capitol. I understand they have one elevator at the House of Representatives, where there are three times the number of members there are in this body. There are twice as many people who occupy the galleries of the other House as occupy the galleries of the Senate. This amendment proposes an expense of $15,000, and then an additional expense adding two persons to the force of the Senate to run the elevator. I shall vote against the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays will be called on the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired for to-day with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]. Otherwise on this important question I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HAMPTON. I was requested by the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT] to say that during his absence he was paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]. I do not see him in the Chamber. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] has said he was paired with the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] being detained from the Senate by illness, sent word to me this morning asking me to pair him and therefore I spoke to the Senator from North Carolina. I do not suppose it is of the slightest importance in this matter, however. The Senator is at liberty to vote on this question.

Mr. VANCE. That being so, I will vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Hoar,	Sawyer,
Beck,	Evarts,	Ingalls,	Spooner,
Blackburn,	Farwell,	McMillan,	Vance,
Blair,	Gibson,	Manderson,	Van Wyck,
Call,	Gorman,	Mitchell of Oregon,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hale,	Palmer,	Williams,
Coke,	Hampton,	Payne,	Wilson of Md.
Conger,	Harris,	Pugh,
Dolph,	Hawley,	Ransom,

NAYS—15.

Aldrich,	George,	Plumb,	Walthall,
Berry,	Gray,	Saulsbury,	Whitthorne,
Cameron,	Morrill,	Sherman,	Wilson of Iowa,
Frye,	Platt,	Teller,

ABSENT—27.

Bowen,	Cullom,	Jones of Nevada,	Morgan,
Brown,	Dawes,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Butler,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Camden,	Fair,	Mahone,	Sewell,
Chace,	Harrison,	Maxey,	Stanford,
Cheney,	Jones of Arkansas,	Miller,	Voorhees,
Colquitt,	Jones of Florida,	Mitchell of Pa.,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was after line 1285 to insert:

Building for Library of Congress: For continuing the work of construction of the building for the Library of Congress, $250,000; and the Library Commission is hereby empowered to make leases and to collect rents for such houses on the library site as in its judgment may remain temporarily without obstructing the work, the proceeds from such rents to be paid into the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "expenses of the collection of revenue from sales of public lands," in line 1304, after the word "pay," to insert "office-rent and;" so as to make the clause read:

Salaries and commisions of registers and receivers: For salaries and commissions of registers of land offices and receivers of public moneys at district land offices, at not exceeding $3,000 each, $500,000. And hereafter all fees collected by registers or receivers, from any source whatever, which would increase their salaries beyond $3,000 each a year, shall be covered into the Treasury, except only so much as may be necessary to pay office-rent and the actual cost of clerical services employed exclusively in contested cases; and they shall make report quarterly, under oath, of all expenditures for such clerical services, with vouchers therefor.

Mr. PLUMB. I make the point of order on that amendment. It is new legislation.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the point is not well taken, unless the law be pointed out.

Mr. PLUMB. That certainly is legislation. There is no law now authorizing the retention by registers and receivers of the money which they receive for fees, for the purpose of paying office rent. It is not only that, but it is entering upon a very dangerous class of expenditure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator say that these words change existing law?

Mr. PLUMB. They do change existing law undoubtedly. There never was such a law as that proposed to be enacted.

Mr. ALLISON. I care nothing about this amendment, except that last year this limitation of $3,000 was inserted in an appropriation bill. Until that time the fees and compensation of registers and receivers was fixed by law; they were entitled to receive certain fees. We limited their compensation to $3,000, and all the excess was required to be paid into the Treasury. Under the phraseology adopted in the sundry civil bill of last year, it was held by the accounting officers that registers and receivers could not pay out of these fees the necessary rent of their offices, and at the request of the Department these words were inserted. I care nothing about it. I am perfectly willing that it shall be voted up or voted down, or ruled out or in.

Mr. PLUMB. The question is what the rules are. There never has been a provision of law the equivalent of what is now proposed authorizing the registers and receivers to pay the rent of their offices out of anything that came into their hands, as the fees or commissions that came by reason of the rendering of service. All the expenses of the office have heretofore been paid, and are required to be paid, out of the Treasury, upon allowances made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. This authorizes a retention by the receiver of moneys that come into his hands as commissions to pay office rent where the rent itself is not authorized by law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair, assuming that the construction of the law stated by the Senator from Kansas is correct, is clearly of opinion that the amendment is not in order, as it changes existing law.

Mr. CALL. I do not think that is a proper construction of the law. As I understand the matter, it has always been the habit of the registers and receivers of the land office to pay the office rent out of the fees received in the office. I know I have a letter from the register and receiver at the land office in Florida stating the fact in that regard, and that very great inconvenience has been caused to the people of the country who have been entering lands in obtaining plats, for the lack of an appropriation or the means of furnishing the information. I have long letters written to that effect from the register and receiver in Florida, contrasting the practice under the present administration with that of previous administrations of that office, and I have no doubt it is correct, and that it has always been the law that they should pay this office rent out of the salaries or fees allowed them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to line 1365.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. MAHONE. Before that motion is put I report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds an amendment intended to be proposed to the pending bill. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD ATTORNEYS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending the motion of the Senator from Iowa it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters, or having received grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States.

The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 1, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 31, 1887.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read and approved.

PORT OF ENTRY, LEWES, DEL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the Senate announcing disagreement to the amendment of the House to a bill (S. 2256) to create a port of entry at Lewes, Del., requesting conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and stating it had appointed as managers of said conference on its part Mr. GORMAN, Mr. MCMILLAN, and Mr. GRAY.

There was no objection, and the request for a conference was agreed to; and the SPEAKER appointed as managers of said conference on the part of the House Mr. O'FERRALL, Mr. CRISP, and Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania.

DEFENSE OF SEABOARD CITIES.

On motion of Mr. MORROW, by unanimous consent, a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., was read in favor of placing seaboard cities in a state of defense against maritime attacks. It is as follows:

MEMORIAL.

To the honorable the Senate of the United States and the House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco desires by every consideration of national self-interest and patriotic pride to impress upon you the absolute necessity for placing our seaboard cities in a state of defense against maritime attack.

An efficient torpedo service and modern guns in modern fortifications and on board high-speed armored cruisers are necessary to effect this.

Years are needed to complete economically such a system of national defense. To use the money accumulated by the self-imposed taxation of a patriotic people for such a purpose is but to return it to the channels of labor and the mechanic arts from whence it came.

It is a true economy which will receive the support of your fellow-citizens irrespective of party.

Every maritime nation of Europe, South America, and the Orient is possessed of charts of our coast; their naval officers are personally familiar with our harbors and their defenseless condition.

The young English-speaking nation of the Southern hemisphere, anticipating the evil day, is now fortifying the harbors of Sydney, Melbourne, Auckland, Wellington, and Dunedin.

When the time of danger comes, what member of Congress will be pleased to have it charged against him that he voted against the national defense? Who knows how long that time may be deferred? Has the aggressive policy of foreign powers been discarded? Are they, like ourselves, unprepared? Are they unaware of our defenseless condition and of our ability to pay ransom?

Any day the various international questions which arise may involve us in war, and, in our present defenseless condition, in disgrace.

The port of San Francisco is the only first-class harbor from Puget Sound to San Diego. Here center our railways, here our only Pacific-coast naval station, here a national mint and subtreasury, frequently containing nearly one hundred millions of dollars, surrounded by a taxable propery within range of modern guns amounting to two hundred and thirty millions.

From its unique position, San Francisco is more defenseless than any seaboard city on our Atlantic coast. The enemy's ships can throw shell from the Pacific Ocean into the building wherein your memorialists unite in this appeal.

The possession of one first-class cruiser armed with long-range ordnance controls this property and can exact a ransom of millions more than would render our harbor and its approaches impregnable. True economy and patriotic duty demand that we should be prepared.

While San Francisco is specially exposed, your memorialists respectfully urge the same policy in regard to our seaboard cities on both sides of the continent; let them also share your attention and solicitude.

The facts we have briefly presented impress upon us the conviction that if we continue unprepared we shall sooner or later receive a castigation which will prove to our Government that it is true economy in time of peace to prepare for war.

With much respect, your fellow-citizens, the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco,

[SEAL.]

WILLIAM L. MERRY, President.

THOS. J. HAYNES, Secretary.

SAN FRANCISCO, January 18, 1887.

CATHARINE L. CHANEY.

On motion of Mr. STRAIT, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the pension case of Catharine L. Chaney, no adverse report having been made.

ISAIAH HUMERICKHOUSER.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Isaiah Humerickhouser without leaving copies.

MISSION INDIANS.

The SPEAKER. Mr. LA FOLLETTE asks leave to print in the RECORD the bill (S. 52) for the relief of the Mission Indians in the State of California, and the report thereon of House Committee on Indian Affairs, together with the special message of the President, and accompanying letters of the Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of Indian Affairs, requesting Congressional action on same.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the object of printing those papers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Does that require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Then I object.

RICHARD H. AND JAMES PORTER.

Mr. VAN EATON. I now ask, by unanimous consent, to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1368) for the relief of Richard H. Porter and James Porter, and the same be put upon its passage.

The bill and report were read.

Mr. NELSON. I object.

Mr. SYMES. I ask to take up for consideration at this time Senate bill 1592, which I ask to have read.

Mr. STORM and Mr. RANDALL objected, and demanded the regular order of business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the regular order of business is the call of the States and Territories for the introduction and reference of bills and resolutions. Under this call, resolutions and memorials of State and Territorial Legislatures are in order; also resolutions of inquiry addressed to heads of Departments; and resolutions for amendment of the rules.

PROPOSED CHANGE IN HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. WHEELER submitted the following resolution; which was read and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That on and after Thursday, the 3d day of February, the House of Representatives shall convene at 11 o'clock a. m.

LOUISE E. A. BRINGIER.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 10915) for the relief of Louise E. A. Bringier; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

COAST DEFENSES.

Mr. LAWLER submitted the following resolution of inquiry:

Whereas the belligerent tone of the Canada press and the announcement that Great Britain will shortly dispatch a fleet of war ships to cruise in the vicinity of our northeastern coast line indicate hostility toward the United States, growing out of our position on the fisheries question; and

Whereas Admiral Porter has directed special attention of the country to the fact that twenty-seven of our Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific harbors are absolutely defenseless, eleven of these, namely, New York, San Francisco, Boston, the lake ports, Hampton Roads, New Orleans, Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore, Portland, Me., and the Rhode Island ports of Narragansett Bay are in urgent need of immediate defenses; and

Whereas it is alleged that Great Britain and Canada are in possession of charts and exemplifications of all our harbors and coast defenses: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, to inform the House of Representatives at an early day what steps, if any, are necessary, in his judgment, to provide for this emergency.

Mr. LAWLER. I ask the reference of this to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BRAGG. Is it not rather in the nature of treason, when we are in such dangerous times as these, to advertise to the enemy our unprotected condition?

Mr. WHEELER. It is not advertising our unprotected condition, because they are already in possession of the facts.

Mr. LAWLER. They know our condition better than we do ourselves. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. REED. We will be in perfectly safe hands if it goes there.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

FREDERICK BISCHER.

Mr. MURPHY introduced a bill (H. R. 10923) granting a pension to Frederick Bischer; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2436) to amend sections 2474 and 2475 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, setting apart a certain tract of land lying near the headwaters of the Yellowstone River as a public park.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN FISHERMEN.

Mr. BOUTELLE submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs are hereby instructed to report back to the House forthwith Senate bill 3173 to authorize the President of the United States to protect and defend the rights of American fishing vessels, American fishermen, American trading and other vessels in certain cases, and for other purposes.

COPIES OF CERTAIN MEDALS.

Mr. FINDLAY introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 248) authorizing and requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to have struck copies of certain medals and to deliver the same to certain Departments and the various States and Territories; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. FINDLAY. Naturally the joint resolution would go to the Committee on the Library; but I have had a conversation with the chairman of the Committee on the Library, and there are special reasons why it should have another reference.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

There was no objection, and the joint resolution was accordingly referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

PROTECTION OF PERSONS EMPLOYED ON VESSELS.

Mr. FINDLAY also introduced a bill (H. R. 10938) for the protection of persons employed on vessels enrolled and licensed by the United States; which was referred to the Select Committee on American Shipbuilding and Ship-owning Interests, and ordered to be printed.

TREATMENT OF AMERICAN SEAMEN IN CANADIAN WATERS.

Mr. LOVERING also presented the following resolutions of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, concerning the unjust treatment of American seamen in Canadian waters; which were read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Whereas American fishermen in Canadian waters have been, and are, subjected to unjust, and in some instances inhuman, treatment at the hands of the officials of the Dominion Government, by which the comity of nations has been denied to vessels bearing the American flag;

Whereas the Dominion Government has recently enacted non-intercourse and hostile legislation; has interpreted existing treaties to deny to our fishermen the right to purchase supplies in Canadian ports, and other hostile acts unbecoming a friendly nation;

Whereas the just rights of our fishermen is a question of great and especial moment to the people of Massachusetts;

Resolved, That if the Canadian Government shall continue to refuse redress, the Legislature of Massachusetts, now in session, favor the retaliatory legislation proposed in Congress by the Government of the United States, to the extent, if need be, of denying to the Canadian vessels in American ports the right to purchase supplies; and the further exclusion of all Canadian products by land or sea from being imported into the United States until such offensive legislation and interpretation of existing treaties and violation of national comity shall have been withdrawn and discontinued.

Resolved, That a copy of this preamble and resolutions, if adopted, be forwarded to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

SENATE, January 25, 1887.

Adopted. Sent down for concurrence.

E. HERBERT CLAPP, Clerk.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 27, 1887.

Adopted in concurrence.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION.

Be it resolved by the senate of the State of Michigan (the house concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to use their best endeavors to secure such legislation by Congress as will result in the United States acquiring the title to and the ownership of the ship canals connecting the waters of Keweenaw Bay by way of Portage Lake, with the waters of Lake Superior in the Upper Peninsula, for the purpose of a harbor of refuge, and of making them free for the navigation and commerce of the great lakes, in accordance with the recommendation of the special board of engineers appointed by the Secretary of War to examine into and report on the desirability of their purchase by the General Government.

Resolved further, That the governor be, and he hereby is, requested to forward copies of the foregoing resolution to our Representatives in Congress.

JAMES H. MacDONALD,
President of the senate.
DANIEL P. MARKEY,
Speaker of the house of representatives.

Approved January 27, 1887.

C. G. LUCE, Governor.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. MILLARD offered the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That each morning during the remainder of this session, immediately after the approval of the Journal, there shall be set apart one hour for motions to take up and consider such bills or resolutions on any of the Calendars of the House, or on the Speaker's table, or bills favorably reported from the Calendars undisposed of, as the member making the motion may designate. And the bills or resolutions so designated shall be immediately considered unless objected to by at least ten members. But no bill or resolution taken up for consideration under this order shall be debated for more than ten minutes, which time shall be equally divided between the supporters and opponents of the measure. If the yeas and nays shall be ordered on any such bill or resolution, or any proposed amendment thereto, and the call of the roll shall be commenced before the expiration of the said one hour, the same shall be completed before the regular order of business is entered upon: Provided, That while this order remains in force the Speaker shall not entertain any requests for unanimous consent to consider any bill or resolution at any other time than herein provided; but he may entertain such requests to refer bills or resolutions to committees, or to dispose of Senate amendments to bills which have passed the House; that before asking for objections to the bill or resolution indicated it shall be in order for the debate provided for to be had, and thereafter there shall be no further debate.

Mr. FORAN introduced a bill (H. R. 10964) granting arrears of pension to Miriam Gazeley, widow of James Gazeley, late private Company G, Forty-second Ohio Volunteers; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TOWNSHEND). This bill will be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. TAULBEE. The Chair will allow me to say that, although bills of this character, granting arrears of pension, have usually been referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, that committee has uniformly decided that such bills are not within its jurisdiction, but belong to the Committee on War Claims. To obviate the trouble of having this bill reported back and referred to the Committee on War Claims, I move its reference now to that committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rules and practice of the House, bills relating to arrears of pension, where the pension is based on services in the late war, are sent to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. TAULBEE. But our committee has invariably reported back such bills, and they have been referred to the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman move to refer this bill to the Committee on War Claims?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir; to save the trouble of changing the reference hereafter.

Mr. FORAN. I have no objection to the reference which the gentleman proposes.

The bill was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM TYLER PAGE.

Mr. TUCKER also submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to pay William Tyler Page out of the contingent fund of the House the sum of $250, the difference between the pay of a page and that of a messenger, for additional service rendered in the present Congress.

UNAUTHORIZED WEARING OF MILITARY BADGES.

Mr. BRAGG introduced a bill (H. R. 10995) to prevent unauthorized persons from wearing badges, buttons, decorations, or devices, indicating enlistment or commission and muster into the military or naval service of the United States during the war of the rebellion; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

LIFE-SAVING STATION, KEWAUNEE, WIS.

Mr. HUDD introduced a bill (H. R. 10996) providing for the establishment of a life-saving station at the harbor of Kewaunee, Wis.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

Mr. BEAN introduced a bill (H. R. 10997) to amend section 9 of chapter 341 of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 23; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH CŒUR D'ALENE INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. HAILEY introduced a bill (H. R. 10998) granting to the Washington and Idaho Railway Company the right of way through the Cœur d'Alene Indian reservation; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This completes the call of States and Territories. If there be no objection, the Chair will recognize gentlemen who were not in their seats when their States were called.

There was no objection.

AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. CRAIN introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 249) proposing amendments to the Constitution changing the time for the commencement and limitation of the term of the President, Vice-President, and members of Congress, and altering the date of the annual meeting of Congress; which was read a first and second time, the first reading being in full, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH FORT CRAWFORD MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. SYMES introduced a bill (H. R. 10999) granting the right of way to the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad Company through the Fort Crawford Military Reservation; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PORTRAIT OF ANDREW JACKSON.

Mr. KING introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 250) authorizing the Committee on the Library to purchase a picture of Andrew Jackson on trial before Judge Hall at New Orleans, La., in 1815; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

PAY OF ARMY.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, introduced a bill (H. R. 11000) to amend section 1198 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the pay of the Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF THE RED CROSS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, also introduced a bill (H. R.

11001) to incorporate the American Association of the Red Cross; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

HARRIET RENWICK.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, also introduced a bill (H. R. 11002) for the relief of Harriet Renwick, widow of John W. Renwick; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL APPOINTMENT ON THE RETIRED-LIST.

Mr. HENLEY introduced a bill (H. R. 11003) authorizing an additional appointment on the retired-list of the Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

EDUCATIONAL BILL.

Mr. CLEMENTS submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That Wednesday, February 9, 1887, be set apart for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7266) entitled "A bill to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools," which was referred to the Committee on Labor and reported with amendments; and that its consideration be continued from day to day until finally disposed of. If the consideration of said bill be displaced, then the next day not previously set apart shall be devoted to its consideration, and so on until the same shall be disposed of.

AMENDMENT OF PENSION LAWS.

Mr. MILLIKEN introduced a bill (H. R. 11004) relating to pensions to dependent and destitute parents of deceased soldiers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH C. GRINDLE.

Mr. MILLIKEN also introduced a bill (H. R. 11005) granting a pension to Elizabeth C. Grindle; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ILLINOIS AND MICHIGAN CANAL, ETC.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed immediately for the use of the House one thousand copies, without the maps, of Executive Document No. 79, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, being a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the Board of Engineers upon the proposed acquisition by the Government of the Illinois and Michigan Canal, and construction of the Hennepin Canal.

JOHN BROWN.

Mr. McCOMAS introduced a bill (H. R. 11006) to increase the pension of John Brown, late a soldier of the war of 1812; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WRITS DE LUNATICO INQUIRENDO, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. McCOMAS also introduced a bill (H. R. 11007) to regulate proceedings under a writ de lunatico inquirendo in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN M'MAHAN.

Mr. THOMPSON introduced a bill (H. R. 11008) for the relief of John McMahan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF PENSION LAWS.

Mr. THOMPSON also introduced a bill (H. R. 11009) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to pensions; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ELZA MAZE.

Mr. THOMPSON also (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 11010) granting a pension to Elza Maze, of Gallia County, Ohio; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DUTIES ON IMPORTED MALT LIQUORS.

LUCY J. M'GRAYEL.

Mr. MATSON introduced a bill (H. R. 11012) granting a pension to Lucy J. McGrayel; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DIETERICK GLANDER.

Mr. MATSON also introduced a bill (H. R. 11013) for the relief of Dieterick Glander; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

LICENSE TO RETAIL LIQUOR DEALERS.

Mr. MORRILL introduced a bill (H. R. 11014) to restrict the issue of license to retail liquor dealers to persons unless first empowered under State and municipal laws to engage in such business of retail liquor dealers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

ROBERT SHARP.

Mr. MORRILL also introduced a bill (H. R. 11015) granting a pension to Robert Sharp; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McRAE. I desire to introduce a bill to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grants of lands or pecuniary aid from the Congress of the United States, and ask that the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress to accept employment as attorney at law, or payment for services of any kind, from any railroad company or any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States; and any person who violates this provision shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000, and imprisoned not more than one year, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. McRAE. That is a copy of the bill known as the railroad attorneys bill, and I ask consent that it may now be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. That can not be done under the call for the introduction of bills, &c.

Mr. HOLMAN. Has not that call been exhausted?

The SPEAKER. It has not. The Chair, under an order made by the House, is now recognizing, for the introduction and reference of bills, gentlemen who were not in their seats when their States were called.

Mr. McRAE. Then I withdraw the bill for the present.

WILLIAM CLOSE.

Mr. STRAIT introduced a bill (H. R. 11016) for the relief of William Close; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This completes the call of States and Territories for the introduction and reference of bills.

RAILROAD ATTORNEYS.

Mr. McRAE. I now introduce for present consideration the bill which was read a few moments ago.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11017) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grants of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States.

Mr. PARKER. This is a bill which should have proper consideration. I take the responsibility of objecting.

Mr. McRAE. Then I ask that it be referred.

Mr. PARKER. I have no objection to that.

The bill was read twice, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

RALPH T. MOSES.

Mr. TRIGG. I desire to make a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper be authorized to employ Ralph T. Moses as assistant folder in the seal room of the House of Representatives at the rate of $2.50 per day during the present session, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The Clerk read the report of the Committee on Accounts, as follows:

That the Committee on Accounts, having considered the accompanying resolution, find that an assistant folder was employed in the seal room throughout the last session and is now employed there, although not on the House roll. The work is necessary, and the committee reports the resolution favorably and recommends that it be passed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution reported by the Committee on Accounts.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 20.

Mr. TRIGG. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TRIGG], and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be again reported.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TRIGG] how many more men are employed by the House now than were employed during the last session of Congress?

Mr. TRIGG. That is a question I can not answer at present. I did not introduce this resolution. It came before the Committee on Accounts, of which I am a member, and on investigation the committee found that this man was employed last session, and is again employed this session, as an assistant folder.

Mr. STEELE. Under the authority of the House?

Mr. TRIGG. The committee found that his services were absolutely necessary and indispensable.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will take their places.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think we will not get a quorum to vote on this resolution unless we understand it. I ask the gentleman from Virginia what is the immediate necessity for the employment of another clerk in the folding room for the rest of this session?

Mr. TRIGG. This man is the clerk who has been employed all the time. This is not a resolution to authorize the employment of any one else. He was there during all of the last session of Congress. A resolution was then passed providing for his payment, and this is a similar resolution for the same purpose for this session. If this resolution is not adopted the party named in it who has performed this service for Congress will absolutely have received nothing for his services.

Mr. SPRINGER. Do I understand the Doorkeeper has power to employ a person in that room without authority of law, and that this man has been performing service without such authority?

Mr. TRIGG. I understand the facts to be as I have stated them.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not true that this young man is employed under the authority of a resolution of the House.

Mr. TRIGG. That is what I understand to be the fact.

Mr. SPRINGER. If so, he will get his pay under that resolution, will he not?

Mr. TRIGG. He will get his pay under this resolution.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I understand that a resolution was passed by the House authorizing his employment of this man, but that it did not make any provision for his pay.

Mr. SPRINGER. If that be true there will be no objection to providing for his pay.

Mr. SPOONER. That is not quite correct. This assistant in the seal-room has been a session employé, I think, ever since I have been a member of Congress. He has been appointed each session by a resolution of the House for the session only. It was so during the last Congress, I am sure, and also during the first session of this Congress. The employment is a necessary one, and the man has been constantly engaged in the duties of the position during the present session. Although this resolution was referred to the Committee on Accounts quite seasonably, it is reported back a little late, owing to the want of a quorum for some time in that committee.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is this a unanimous report?

Mr. SPOONER. I so understand it.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is not this the boy that is working now in the seal-room?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUNHAM. And working for nothing?

Mr. TRIGG. Unless this resolution is passed.

Mr. DUNHAM. Then let us pay him.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. TRIGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MEXICAN AND DEPENDENT PARENTS' PENSION BILLS.

Mr. BARKSDALE, from the Committee on Printing, submitted the following report:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 24, 1887.

Resolved, That 5,000 additional copies of the bill known as the Mexican pension bill, which passed the House on January 17, 1887, be printed for the use of the House; also that 5,000 additional copies of the bill (H. R. 10457) for the relief of dependent parents, &c., which also passed the House on January 17, 1887, be printed for the use of the House.

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the foregoing resolution, recommend the adoption of the same. The estimated cost of printing said bill is $38. The Public Printer states that the amount of printing previously estimated upon, ordered by Congress within the present fiscal year, is $134,648.02.

The committee recommend the passage of the resolution.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know who offered that resolution. Is it not the fact that both the bills described in the resolution have passed both Houses, and that we shall get copies of them as laws within a few days; which will be much more desirable than to have them in bill form?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the resolution was offered by the gentleman's colleague [Mr. MATSON].

Mr. STEELE. I should think, Mr. Speaker, it would be useless to reprint those bills when we are going to have them in the form of laws within a short time.

Mr. MATSON. The bills as they passed were unchanged in form. The passage of the Mexican pension bill by the House was merely a concurrence in the action of the Senate, and the House bill has passed the Senate without any change.

Mr. STEELE. Well, both bills have passed both Houses and are now laws, or will be within a few days unless the President should veto them, and I think it would be much better for us to have copies of the laws than copies of the bills.

Mr. MATSON. I am willing, Mr. Speaker, that the resolution shall be amended.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the resolution by substituting the word "law" for the word "bill."

The SPEAKER. But they are not laws yet. The Chair suggests that the gentleman withdraw the report, and withhold it until it is known whether the bills are to become laws or not.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the report for the present.

PUBLIC BUILDING, STILLWATER, MINN.

Mr. WORTHINGTON, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 577) for the erection of a public building at Stillwater, Minn.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, LA FAYETTE, IND.

Mr. OWEN, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 531) to provide for the erection of a public building at La Fayette, Ind.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, WINONA, MINN.

Mr. OWEN, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7063) limiting the cost of the erection of a public building at Winona, Minn.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, NEWARK, N. J.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with amendments the bill (S. 3055) for the extension and repair of the public building at Newark, N. J.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, CHESTER, PA.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 2303) for the erection of a public building at Chester, Pa.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EMPLOYÉS IN GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

Mr. FORAN, from the Committee on Labor, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10734) to revise the rates of wages of certain employés of the Government Printing Office; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM M. BRYANT.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Patents, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 10456) for the relief of William M. Bryant, of Washington city, D. C.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

THOMAS F. TOWNSEND.

Mr. MATSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 10679) to increase the pension of Thomas F. Townsend; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MATILDA STOCKDALE.

On motion of Mr. MATSON, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3328) for the relief of Matilda Stockdale; and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK, PORTLAND, OREG.

Mr. McKENNA, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (S. 84) for the relief of the First National Bank of Portland, Oreg.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. McKENNA, from the Committee on Claims, also reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 3620) for the relief of the First National Bank of Portland, Oreg., for money advanced the Portland Iron Works, the contractor in building the United States revenue cutter Thomas Corwin; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

COMPILATION OF DISTRICT LAWS.

Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 10758) to provide for the compilation of the laws relating to, and in force in, the District of Columbia, and for the appointment of a reporter for the supreme court of said District; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ROCK CREEK PARK, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. ROWELL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2584) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to condemn land on Rock Creek for the purposes of a park to be called "Rock Creek Park;" which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

STREET RAILROADS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BARBOUR, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10899) to regulate the construction of street railroads and of the pavements between and adjacent thereto, and for other purposes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION IN 1892.

Mr. SINGLETON, from the Committee on the Library, reported back favorably the following concurrent resolution of the Senate; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint committee of five members of the Senate and eight members of the House of Representatives be appointed to take into consideration the expediency of holding in 1892, in commemoration of the discovery of America, an international exhibition of the industries and products of all nations; and if such an exhibition should be deemed expedient, to consider the time, place, circumstances, and general plan thereof, and to report by bill or otherwise.

PRINTING OF STATISTICAL ABSTRACT FOR 1886.

Mr. FARQUHAR, from the Committee on Printing, reported back favorably the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 15,000 additional copies of the Statistical Abstract of the United States for the year 1886; of which 5,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, and 10,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

PUBLIC BUILDING IN SAVANNAH, GA.

Mr. WILKINS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10378) to provide for condemning a site for a public building in Savannah, Ga.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NEW YORK NATIONAL-BANK ASSOCIATIONS.

Mr. WILKINS, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back adversely the following resolution; which was laid on the table:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to ascertain whether any national-bank association located in the city of New York has, during the present month, loaned its surplus money or deposits to brokers or other persons operating in stocks and bonds, without security and merely upon the receipt of interest on the same, for the purpose of enabling speculators to lock up and prevent the use of money in business transactions, and thereby produce a scarcity of money and greatly increase the rates of interest on loans. And also whether during said period any of said banks, for the purposes aforesaid, knowingly permitted the total liabilities of any person, company, corporation, or firm to exceed the amount limited by the statute in such cases. And that the said Secretary report all the facts to this House as soon as practicable, with such recommendations as he may deem proper.

PETER MILLIS.

Mr. KETCHAM introduced a bill (H. R. 11018) to relieve Peter Millis of the charge of desertion; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CALIFORNIA SCHOOL LANDS.

Mr. HENLEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back a bill (S. 990) to enable the State of California to take lands in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections found to be mineral lands; which, by unanimous consent, was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the bill and accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH moved that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. MATSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the title of the first general appropriation bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10396) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I move that that bill be passed over for the present on account of the necessary absence of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The next business on the Calendar was a bill (H. R. 10912) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. HATCH. I ask, by unanimous consent, that the first reading of the bill, for information, be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. HATCH. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. HATCH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Agriculture respectfully submit the following report:

The bill herewith submitted appropriates the sum of $563,730, which is $90,985 less than the total sum appropriated for the present fiscal year.

There is no new legislation contained in the bill, nor any increase of salaries over that contained in the appropriation bill of the present fiscal year. Some slight changes have been made in the arrangement and classification of the working force of the Department, which will increase the appropriation in certain divisions and decrease it in others. The appropriation to the botanical division is increased $7,240, deemed necessary by the growing and important work of this division and urgent recommendation of the Commissioner.

Slight increases are made in several of the other divisions to meet the enlarged scope of the work performed and to provide additional material and facilities for carrying it on. Others, amounting to $42,950, recommended by the Commissioner, were disallowed by the committee as not of such imperative importance as to justify the increased appropriation at this time.

Mr. HATCH. I now ask by unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be closed, and the bill be read by paragraphs for amendment under the five-minute rule.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, for the purposes and objects hereinafter expressed, namely:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Office of Commissioner:

For compensation of Commissioner of Agriculture, $4,500; chief clerk in said Department, who shall be superintendent of the Department buildings, $2,500; chief of division of accounts and disbursing officer, $1,800; one assistant disbursing officer, who shall act as property clerk, $1,400; one clerk to disbursing officer, $1,000; one stenographer, $1,800: one engraver, $2,000; one draughtsman, $2,000; two clerks of class 4, $3,600; two clerks of class 3, $3,200; four clerks of class 2, $5,600; seven clerks of class 1, $8,400; eight clerks, at $1,000 each; six clerks, at $840 each; one librarian, $1,400; one engineer, $1,400; two firemen, at $720 each; one assistant fireman, at $500; superintendent of folding-room, $1,200; four assistants in folding-room, at $600 each; one clerk in folding-room, at $660; two night watchmen, at $720 each; messengers, carpenters, laborers, and charwomen, $10,000; in all, $71,280.

Mr. HATCH. I am instructed by the Committee on Agriculture to move in line 11 to strike out "$4,500" and insert "$5,000;" so it will read:

For compensation of Commissioner of Agriculture, $5,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order that changes existing law.

Mr. HATCH. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to withdraw the point of order until I can make a brief statement.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly I will withdraw the point of order to hear what the gentleman has to say.

Mr. HATCH. The point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana is well taken, no doubt, but after careful examination of the duties and responsibilities of the Commissioner the committee were unanimous in recommending this amendment to the House, and to ask the House, in view of the fact that all the other commissioners who have not anything like as much to do as the Department of Agriculture receive $5,000 a year, that this distinction shall not be kept up any longer against the Commissioner of Agriculture.

If the bill which passed the House shall pass the Senate and become a law this amendment will be unnecessary, but if the bill should fail to pass the Senate then, if this amendment is adopted, the Commissioner of Agriculture will receive the next fiscal year an adequate salary of $5,000. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to withdraw his point of order and let the House vote on the proposition.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will say my friend from Missouri misapprehends the actual state of things. The Commissioner of the General Land Office is the most important commissioner under the Government—the most important in many respects—and yet his salary is only $4,000.

Mr. HATCH. It ought to be $5,000, and I hope it will be increased to that figure.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is proposed to make that salary $4,500, which is the same as that now received by the Commissioner of Agriculture. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs receives only a salary of $4,000, and that is equally an important office.

Mr. HATCH. What office does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. HOLMAN. I refer to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Both positions are responsible, and the salaries now allowed are lower than the salary provided for the Commissioner of Agriculture. It is far better to try to adopt some general principle which will apply as well to other commissioners of the highest importance—of an importance approaching, if not exceeding that of the Commissioner of Agriculture——

Mr. HATCH. I agree with the gentleman from Indiana that the salary of the Commissioner of Public Lands and of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs should be increased to $5,000. The salary of the Commissioner of Patents is $5,000, and the salary of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is $6,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Those salaries were fixed as it is proposed to fix the salary of the Commissioner of Agriculture in this bill, and that is in an irregular way. These salaries should really be $4,000 salaries, all belonging to the same class; but by sort of fragmentary legislation some have been increased and others have been allowed to remain where they are. I think it would be better to allow the salaries to remain as they are for the present until some general principle can be adopted to equalize them.

The salary fixed at $4,500 would be up to what is proposed for the other officers corresponding to this in other Departments.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist upon the point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sericulture: For disseminating information relating to silk-culture; for purchasing and distributing silk-worm eggs, and purchasing cocoons, and for conducting at some point in the District of Columbia experiments with automatic machinery for reeling silk from the cocoon, $15,000. And the Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby authorized to sell in open market any and all reeled silk and silk waste produced in these experiments, and to apply the proceeds of such sales to the payment of the legitimate expenses incurred therein; and the Commissioner of Agriculture shall make full report to Congress of the experiments herein provided for, and also of all sales and purchases made under this paragraph.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. What was the amount of the estimates of the Department for this branch?

Mr. HATCH. Just the amount appropriated by this bill, $15,000. We did not change it in the least.

Mr. PETERS. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Seed division: For the purchase, propagation, and distribution, as required by law, of seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, and expenses of labor, transportation, paper, twine, gum, printing, postal cards, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same, and to be distributed in localities adapted to their culture, $100,000.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to come in after the subdivision just read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 181 insert:

"Provided, That no discrimination shall be made in the compensation paid persons employed in the seed-room for the same class of work."

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order upon that amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I wish to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Missouri who makes the point of order first.

Mr. HATCH. My point of order is that this is new legislation; that it changes existing law, and that it does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I did not make the point of order when you proposed to increase the salary of the Commissioner of Agriculture $500, which certainly was not in the line of retrenchment, while it manifestly changes existing law.

The amendment I have offered simply proposes to equalize the pay in that particular department and to get rid of what is now a specially favored class. It is to provide that the persons who sit at the same table and do exactly the same class of work shall receive the same compensation; that the lady in her silks shall not receive $55 a month while the poor woman sitting at her side and doing exactly the same kind of work receives but $1.50 per day.

It will be seen that this amendment applies only to cases where the work is identical, and it is in the line of retrenchment; in it is a common-sense application of practical reform in the conduct of the affairs of this Government.

This abuse did not originate with the present Commissioner of Agriculture, but has been handed down to him from former administrations, and the present Commissioner is not responsible for it; but the time has come to correct this evil. It is simply doing exact justice to the employés in that branch of this department, and the members of this House well know the need of it. They know that there is a specially privileged class which has been carried on year in and year out, and as a rule they are not the most needy and deserving of those employed there. I have personal knowledge of the fact that during the present winter a poor, delicate woman employed in that department, whose poverty compelled her daily to walk to her work and return, through the snow and the rain, unable to take from her little earnings the amount necessary to purchase car tickets, all her means being required to put bread in the mouths of her four little fatherless boys, and she receives the paltry pittance of $1.50 a day, while at the same table sits a lady doing the same work receiving $55 a month, who, I am informed, is not dependent upon her employment.

Members of the House must see that if such an abuse exists it is time to correct it, and I want to direct public attention to it to-day, and let those gentlemen who are opposed to this needed reform exercise their privilege of making points of order against it. I reiterate that there is a specially favored class employed there who receive $55 per month for work which is identical with that done by those who are paid but $1.50 per day, about $37 per month, and the members of this House well know it.

I do not think it is subject to the point of order. It is in the line of retrenchment, and there is no law on the statute-books that applies to this class, hence it does not amend any existing law. If we can not correct an abuse of this kind when our attention is called to it and it is known to exist, then it is simply idle for us to talk about reform in the conduct of public affairs.

The amendment, Mr. Chairman, I wish to state, need apply only to this appropriation. If adopted it will furnish a law for the future.

Mr. HATCH. If any such abuse as that stated by my colleague from Missouri exists——

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I wish to state again that it is not the fault of the present Commissioner; it is a practice which was handed down to him.

Mr. HATCH. I say that if any such abuse as that exists there is no authority of law for perpetuating it, and if there be such an abuse an appeal should be made to the Commissioner to correct it. If it exists at all it is an abuse in the execution of the law. There is nothing in the law requiring favoritism on the part of the Commissioner; and I am opposed to any restriction placed upon an appropriation which would interfere as this would interfere with the proper discharge and execution of the duties of his office.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. We can not shirk our responsibility by referring the matter to him. When we recognize a wrong it is our duty to correct it.

Mr. STEELE. Is there anything in the law requiring a woman to wear a $55 silk dress? [Laughter.]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the $55 referred to is the salary, not the cost of dress. Concerning the latter, I only used that as descriptive.

Mr. HATCH. I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. STEELE. Why don't you move to reduce the $55 salary to $45?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would have been glad to have further argument upon the point of order.

Mr. HATCH. If the Chair has any question about the propriety of the point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has serious question about it.

Mr. HATCH. Then I will say the amendment as read from the Clerk's desk clearly changes the existing law on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. It would if there is any law providing for discrimination in pay.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the amendment be again read, so that it may be seen whether it is a change of existing law or a restriction on the appropriation.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That in the expenditure of the money herein appropriated no discrimination shall be made in the compensation paid to persons employed in the seed-room for the same class of work.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] desires the amendment to be modified so as to apply it only to the expenditure of the money in this paragraph of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands it. The amendment has been modified so as to apply only to the expenditure of the money appropriated in this paragraph. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] will be heard if he desires on the point of order.

Mr. HATCH. I do not care to take time in discussing the merits of this proposition. I think it is subject to the point of order, but if the Chair overrules the point of order I am quite willing the committee should vote on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. STEELE. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making an inquiry.

I see that for salaries in the Department of Agriculture this bill appropriates $161,490. In this paragraph, which has just been read relating to the seed division, there is an appropriation of $100,000:

For the purchase, propagation, and distribution, as required by law, of seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings and plants, and expenses of labor, transportation, paper, twine, gum, printing, postal cards, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same, and to be distributed in localities adapted to their culture.

This $100,000, then, besides what is paid for the purchase of seeds, &c., includes the expense of labor, transportation, paper, twine, gum, printing postal cards, and all necessary material and repairs, &c. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture about how much of this amount is to be expended for seed?

Mr. HATCH. If the gentleman will read the report which accompanies the bill he will find the present Commissioner has reduced the amount of expense on this fund very considerably. Heretofore it has run from 30 to 33 per cent. of the entire amount, which is less, I believe, than the proportion of expense in the case of any large wholesale seed establishment in the United States. But within the last two years the substitution of paper bags for the cotton bags and other improvements that have been made—there having been in one year a saving in the item of gum alone of $4,000—have reduced the expense until it is now but a little over one-fourth, I believe, of the whole amount.

Mr. STEELE. The total appropriation in this bill is $563,730. I infer from what the gentleman from Missouri states that from $63,000 to $70,000 of this amount is expended for seed. Now, this being the most important function of that Department, in my estimation, it seems to me it would be better to expend the $63,000 for labor and the $500,000 for seed. It would do the people more good.

The Department has expended a great deal of money in trying to find out what was the matter with the hogs, and a great deal of money in trying to find out what is the matter with the cattle. They found out after all their learned research that the only thing to do with the cow when she gets sick is to kill her.

They do not pretend that they can distinguish between pleuro-pneumonia and wolftail; and even when a cow is killed they can not tell the disease of which she was sick.

While we have been spending a great deal of money upon this Department, and although it is one that should be the most easily approached, it appears to be one of the most unapproachable of all. In the district I have the honor to represent 47,000 voters at the last distribution of wheat were able, owing to the graciousness of the Department of Agriculture, to get 32 quarts of wheat. That was the amount distributed to 47,000 voters, representing a population of about 250,000.

They paid about $500,000 for labor in distributing these seeds and finding out the only thing to do with a cow when she gets sick is to kill her. And they have utterly abandoned the hog-cholera question.

I have yet to find a Representative in this House who does not say the seeds distributed as a rule failed to propagate. They are kept in a warm house and the germs are destroyed. In my opinion the distribution ought to be direct from the gardens where they are purchased. In that event there would be a little better showing. They are purchased from the great gardeners of the country, and it would appear after those great gardeners have sent out the seeds that are worth anything they take their last year's seed and sell it to the Agricultural Department. I do not know this to be true, but I am afraid it is. The character of the seed would indicate it was so.

I do not wish to take up more of the time of the committee; I only wish to call attention to the fact that the distribution of seed is the most important function of this Department and the one that is most neglected. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out the last word, that I may ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] a question. My recollection is that a year ago when this bill was under consideration the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] and the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. PRICE, since dead, agreed that there was a very serious abuse in this Department growing out of the employment of a larger force than was necessary in connection with this appropriation.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman from Illinois is mistaken. The question then was as to the statistical division, and we reduced the appropriation, which had formerly been made to the statistical division, and appropriated $55,000. The Senate added $10,000. We have reported in this bill $55,000, the same as last year, but ten or twenty thousand dollars less than was formerly appropriated.

It was the statistical division that the late gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] had so thoroughly investigated and in which he was satisfied that the force was too large for the amount of work performed.

Mr. CANNON. My recollection is that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] both stated that the employment of that force was without warrant, and the gentleman from Missouri said, I think, that the report the committee had made would correct the matter. I desire to inquire now if it has been corrected?

Mr. HATCH. The subcommittee have sat at the Department as many as a dozen times since this session of Congress began, and as far as we are able to judge, from a very careful investigation, we are satisfied that there has been a very decided improvement as to the quantity and quality of the work done in that division, and, therefore, we have made the appropriation $65,000.

Mr. CANNON. Then the desire for places on the part of those having influence with the Department is not gratified?

Mr. HATCH. Not by any means. The pressure is about as heavy as it ever was, and it comes principally from members of Congress.

The Clerk read as follows:

An equal proportion of two-thirds of all seeds, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall, upon their request, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents; and the person receiving such seeds shall inform the Department of the results of the experiments therewith: Provided, That all seeds, plants, and cuttings herein allotted to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates to Congress for distribution remaining uncalled for at the end of the fiscal year shall be distributed by the Commissioner of Agriculture: And provided also, That the Commissioner shall report, as provided in this act, the place, quantity, and price of seeds purchased, and the date of purchase. But nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent the Commissioner of Agriculture from sending flower, garden, and other seeds to those who apply for the same. And the amount herein appropriated shall not be diverted or used for any other purpose but for the purchase, propagation, and distribution of improved and valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants: But provided, however, That the Commissioner shall not distribute to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate seeds entirely unfit for the climate and locality he represents, but shall distribute the same so that each member may have seeds of equal value, as may be, and the best adapted to the locality he represents

Mr. STEELE. I move to strike out the last word. I see that in lines 187 to 191 it is provided "that all seeds, plants, and cuttings herein allotted to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates to Congress for distribution, remaining uncalled for at the end of the fiscal year, shall be distributed by the Commissioner of Agriculture." I wish to ask what is the purpose of distributing seeds after the end of the fiscal year? Are those seeds distributed for the following year, or does the Department reissue them year after year [laughter], and are there now accumulated seeds which have been left over from time to time by members of Congress, and are we trying to exhaust the old crop of three or four years ago?

Mr. HATCH. I have no recollection upon that subject, Mr. Chairman. If the gentleman knows anything about it he can give his information to the House.

Mr. STEELE. I have not.

Mr. HATCH. If the gentleman is simply taking up time talking about things he does not know anything about——

Mr. STEELE. I agree with the gentleman; I do not know anything about it, and I am sorry to find that the chairman of the committee does not know any more than I do. [Laughter.]

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation has been in the bill for several years, and I have never before heard it intimated that seeds have been carried over from one year to another, or old seeds distributed.

Mr. PARKER. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the assertion ought not to go out to the country without contradiction that stale seeds are palmed off upon the people through members of Congress by the National Government. I am informed, and I have no question at all about the fact, that every species and assortment of seeds is thoroughly tested practically before being allowed to go out.

Mr. STEELE. Do you mean the next year's seeds, or those of the preceding year?

Mr. PARKER. I mean that the seeds to be sent out at any given time are, within a reasonable time before they are sent out, thoroughly tested by the Department.

Mr. HATCH. One of the most valuable men in the whole Department is an expert who remains in the seed-room and tests, under the microscope and by every means known to agricultural science, every sample of seed that is offered to the Department before it is bought, and the Commissioner never buys seed of any kind until it has received the indorsement of this expert. That has been the rule for years.

Mr. STEELE. And yet the fact remains that a very large proportion of the seed sent out does not grow.

Mr. PARKER. During an experience of three Congresses I have found that there has been no complaint as to any seeds distributed, except, perhaps, a single assortment, and I wish now to bear testimony to the honesty and good faith of the present management of the Department of Agriculture, as well as of that which preceded it, to say that it has been honestly and faithfully administered in all these respects, and that there is no ground or reason for complaint against it.

Mr. STEELE. Now, I wish to ask the gentleman whether or not any of the seeds for the Department are purchased from his part of the State of New York?

Mr. PARKER. I can say to the gentleman that I have no knowledge or information——

Mr. STEELE. Information is what I am hunting for.

Mr. PARKER. I say that I have no knowledge or information that any of the seed distributed by the Department of Agriculture is now, or ever has been, obtained from that portion of the country.

Mr. STEELE. I am aware that the soil of Indiana is too rich for New York or Southern seeds——

Mr. PARKER. The gentleman himself is an exemplification of that. [Laughter].

Mr. STEELE. I am glad that the gentleman has got a point. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CLERK read as follows:

Salaries and expenses Bureau of Animal Industry: For carrying out the provisions of the act of May 29, 1884, establishing the bureau of animal industry, $100,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, it is not my wish to criticise this bill in any particular, yet I feel that I ought to direct the attention of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] to this paragraph. It appropriates a large sum of money and is very indefinite so far as details are concerned. It occurs to my mind that the number of officials employed in that branch of the service and the salaries they receive should be indicated, and also what proportion of the appropriation is for other expenses apart from salaries. The amendment adopted a little while ago at the instance of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] was, in my judgment, wise, and I think it might well be followed in some particulars in connection with this paragraph. It strikes me that this is a loose mode of appropriating money. I make these remarks merely by way of suggestion to the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman is aware that the act of May 29, 1884, prescribes the salaries of the principal officers of the bureau, and limits the force to not exceeding twenty men at any one time.

Mr. RANDALL. Then, why not embrace that provision in this bill?

Mr. HATCH. That is in the law as it now exists upon the statute book, and this bill simply provides for the salaries and expenses as fixed by law.

Mr. RANDALL. How much are salaries and how much expenses?

Mr. HATCH. I do not understand just what the gentleman means by "expenses."

Mr. RANDALL. Under the act of 1884 how much is required for salaries and how much for other expenses?

Mr. HATCH. It depends upon circumstances, upon whether there is an outbreak of pleuro-pneumonia, and what section of the country it occurs in, and the extent of it. That would determine how much the Commissioner would have to expend at any one time.

Mr. RANDALL. But we know that he can not exceed $100,000. Now, if the act of 1884 fixes the number of employés and their salaries, some of the details should be stated, I think, in this bill.

Mr. REED. Are persons employed by the year in this bureau?

Mr. HATCH. Some have annual salaries and others are employed only for the time being, as emergencies arise.

But under that act there are quarantine expenses——

Mr. RANDALL. I shall not offer any amendment, but I suggest to the gentleman——

Mr. HATCH. The act itself guards this matter as well as it is possible to do here by any amendment which would not utterly destroy the efficacy of the appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. The act itself, as I understand, not only gives a discretion to the commissioner as to the number of employés, but as to twenty persons it gives him a discretion in fixing their salaries.

Mr. HATCH. But the principal officers are fixed by law.

Mr. RANDALL. I think it might have been better to have given the appropriation more in detail.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH]. The language of this paragraph is "for carrying out the provisions of the act of May 29, 1884." Now, is the meaning of this language necessarily that the money shall be expended in conformity with the provisions of that act?

Mr. HATCH. Of course. Not a dollar can be expended in any other way.

Mr. HOLMAN. It occurred to me it might be safer to provide that the expenditures should be in conformity with the provisions of the act referred to; but if this means the same thing——

Mr. HATCH. There is no question about it. And there has never been a dollar expended outside of the provisions of that act.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to inquire whether the expenditure of the $100,000 here provided for will be necessary if we should appropriate the $250,000 proposed to be appropriated by the pleuro-pneumonia bill?

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. As these officers are upon the rolls of this bureau they must, of course, be paid. There are a chief and some clerks who receive annual salaries. So far as the remainder of the $100,000 is concerned, it will be spent if the expenditure be required; otherwise not.

Mr. STEELE. But the other bill to which I have referred proposes to appropriate $250,000. I want to know whether the expenditure here proposed will be necessary if we pass that bill?

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. The appropriation we are now considering is for a department of the Government established by law. The other appropriation to which the gentleman refers will, if we pass that bill, be expended so far as may be necessary. So far as the present appropriation is concerned the salaries of the chief officer and the clerks must be paid out of it; and the balance can be used in the employment of persons, not exceeding twenty, for the purpose of investigating and stamping out pleuro-pneumonia.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But if we pass the other bill we shall have appropriated altogether $350,000.

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. If you pass the Miller bill you will have two commissions, one operating through the Department of Agriculture, and the other under the Miller bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I am not speaking of the Miller bill, but of the House bill now pending in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. That bill makes an additional appropriation, to be expended if necessary.

Mr. RYAN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri how much was appropriated for this item for the current year?

Mr. HATCH. One hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. RYAN. How much for the last year?

Mr. HATCH. Last year there was more than $100,000 subject to expenditure, because there was part of an appropriation coming over from a previous year; but what was left over was covered into the Treasury. We appropriated for the present fiscal year $100,000; but there was a proviso put upon the bill which gave the Commissioner the authority to expend any portion of that sum in the purchase of diseased cattle, for the purpose of stopping the spread of disease from one State to another. That authority, which the Commissioner has not under the general law, we have not attached to this bill, because we hope to pass that as an amendment to the general act.

Mr. RYAN. Now, I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri whether he has an itemized statement of the expenditure of that money for the last fiscal year?

Mr. HATCH. There will not be an itemized statement until the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. RYAN. I refer to the last fiscal year.

Mr. HATCH. A detailed statement of the expenditures for the last fiscal year is included in the report of the Commissioner, which can now be obtained in the document-room. It shows every dollar and every cent expended, the mode of expenditure, and every person employed.

Mr. STEELE. I omitted to ask the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, at the proper place, in regard to the distribution of "seeds, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants." During the six years I have been in this House I have not received any notification that there were any of these things subject to my distribution. I want to know whether the provision for this distribution is placed in the law as a mere formality, or whether there is in fact any distribution of that kind?

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman can ascertain that if he will sit down and write a note of inquiry to the Commissioner.

Mr. STEELE. Then I can not get the information I desire from the chairman of the committee.

Mr. GLASS. I think I can answer the gentleman. Mr. Sanders, the superintendent of the propagating department, informed me that he had put out about one thousand rose-cuttings, and that when the department had used what they desired the balance would be given to any members who might call.

Mr. STORM. Any members who may happen to find out they are there.

Mr. GLASS. Only one thousand have been put out, as he told me. I applied to him in person for my quota, and he said there was no quota specifically allowed to members, but that after the department used what it desired the balance would be given to such members as might call for them.

Mr. STEELE. I am glad to get that information, and I have no doubt a great many other members are. It appears that if we want anything we must go to the department and ask for it.

Several MEMBERS. Of course.

The CHAIRMAN. No amendment is pending. The Clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses: For stationery, freight, express charges, fuel, lights, subsistence and care of horses, repairs of harness, for paper, twine, and gum for folding-room, advertising, telegraphing, dry-goods, soap, brushes, brooms, mats, oils, paints, glass, lumber, hardware, ice, purchasing supplies, washing towels, actual traveling expenses while on the business of the department, and other miscellaneous supplies and expenses not otherwise provided for, and necessary for the practical and efficient work of the department, $15,000.

Mr. HATCH. I find, Mr. Chairman, some clerical errors which I ask to have corrected. On page 5, line 88, the word "class" has been omitted. It reads "three clerks of 3;" it should be "three clerks of class 3;" so it will read:

STATISTICAL DIVISION.

One statistician, $2,500; two clerks of class 4, $3,600; three clerks of class 3, $4,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Page 6, line 124, the word "agricultural" should be struck out and "agriculture" inserted; so it will read:

Entomological division: For investigating the history and habits of insects injurious and beneficial to agriculture, arboriculture, and horticulture.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I now ask, by unanimous consent of the Committee, to offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the bill:

The bond of the Commissioner of Agriculture shall be in the penal sum of $25,000.

I will state that the Commissioner of Agriculture, under existing law, is compelled to give a bond of $10,000. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will give his attention. I ask to increase that bond to $25,000. Under his bond of $10,000 he is only allowed to draw that amount to pay under all these appropriations at one time, and he has to keep a man trotting from the Agricultural Department to the Treasury to keep him in funds. I ask he be permitted to give a bond of $25,000, so he may draw at one time that amount to pay under these appropriations.

Mr. HOLMAN. There can be no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I now ask the gentleman from Indiana whether he will not withdraw his point of order to the amendment increasing the salary of the Commissioner of Agriculture from $4,500 to $5,000 a year.

Mr. HOLMAN. I appreciate highly the Commissioner of Agriculture and the efficient way in which the duties of the Department of Agriculture are performed. But I am not prepared to say at this time that this salary should be increased from $4,500 to $5,000, when the other officers of equal importance receive a much lower salary than is now paid to the Commissioner of Agriculture. I ask this matter be allowed to remain as it is until some general principle can be adopted.

Mr. HATCH. I ask the gentleman from Indiana, if the House decides to fix the other two salaries at $5,000 will he object to giving the Commissioner of Agriculture $5,000?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is proposed to fix the other salaries at $4,500, which is the amount received now by the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. HATCH. But the House may take it out of the hands of gentlemen and fix the salaries at $5,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will not press this matter now.

Mr. HATCH. I move the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MATSON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration a bill (H. R. 10912) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HATCH. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HATCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. 222) to amend section 1661 of the Revised Statutes, making an annual appropriation to provide estimates and equipments for the militia; when the Speaker signed the same.

STATE CLAIMS.

Mr. SPRINGER. We have not yet had the hour for the consideration of bills.

The SPEAKER. The hour begins at 20 minutes before 3 o'clock p. m., and the Committee on Claims is still under call.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. If there is no business, I move the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. If that committee does not respond the next committee must be called. The bill heretofore called up by that committee is before the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move the House resolve itself into the committee to proceed with its consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. BLOUNT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2498) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to examine and settle the accounts of certain States and the city of Baltimore growing out of moneys expended by said States and the city of Baltimore for military purposes during the war of 1812.

Mr. TRIGG. A motion had been made that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, and pending that motion the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] asked for some information as to the amount involved in its passage. My colleague [Mr. TUCKER] had the floor making an explanation of the bill when the morning hour expired, and the committee, under the rules of the House, rose. Since then I believe my friend has had ample opportunity to examine the bill and the report, and if so I presume it will hardly be necessary to make any further extended explanation of its provisions.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. But perhaps some other members might want information upon the subject.

Mr. TRIGG. Mr. Chairman, I will state briefly, in order that the House may be informed exactly as to the character of the contemplated legislation, the basis of this proposed settlement. It is a bill which not only affects the State of Virginia, I will say, but several other States as well—New York, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Virginia, and South Carolina—and it originally affected also the States of Maryland and Massachusetts, as well as the State of Maine, which at that time formed a part of Massachusetts. All of these States advanced to the General Government in the war of 1812 and 1814 large sums of money for the prosecution of the war. In other words, they equipped their troops and furnished certain munitions of war, and borrowed money, every one of them, I believe, without exception, for this purpose. The General Government recognized its indebtedness to each of the States to the full extent of the moneys expended by them, and commenced as early as 1815 to repay to the States the amounts so advanced. In the case of the State of Virginia $1,807,000 had been advanced up to the year 1814, and there has been repayed to the State about that sum of money, but the mode of repaying it under the rule adopted at the Treasury Department in settling with the States is this: that when a payment is made, we will say, of $100,000, as was the case with Virginia, that sum, instead of being credited upon the interest which had then accrued and which the Government recognizes as due, was credited upon the principal of the debt, thereby reducing the principal and leaving the total accumulated interest untouched. This was the plan adopted with reference to all of these payments, by crediting each payment upon the principal until the total amount was repaid, leaving a large balance in the way of interest, upon which, of course, the States were not under the law permitted to receive interest.

Mr. ROWELL. Let me ask the gentleman, is it not true that there was no authority under the original law to pay interest at all?

Mr. TRIGG. That is true; but the States complained of that provision, and the State of Maryland was the first to get relief from it, and was allowed the interest, the allowance being regarded as just and proper.

Mr. ROWELL. Is it not further true that subsequent acts were passed to repay the interest that had been paid by the States themselves, and that these accounts have been adjusted with reference to these subsequent acts?

Mr. TRIGG. No, sir; it is true that Maryland had a law passed for her relief; and subsequently, in 1870, Massachusetts also had a law passed granting the same relief, that is to say, to make a settlement upon the same basis made under the law of 1858 with Maryland, which was that the payments should be applied under the law as settled by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. ROWELL. Has any interest been paid to the States under the subsequent acts?

Mr. TRIGG. My friend does not understand me fully. Interest has been paid, but not according to the rule which is adopted in all commercial transactions of applying it first to the interest accumulated, and then the residue of the payment, if any, to the principal of the debt.

Mr. ROWELL. I understand you to say that under the original law they were paid the principal of the indebtedness.

Mr. TRIGG. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROWELL. But that was the only law authorizing any payment. Under the subsequent law they have been paid interest, but it did not go back and credit the original payments on the principal as payments on the interest.

Mr. TRIGG. That is about the condition of affairs, except, let me state again, in the case of Maryland. All the States complained when this action was taken that it was not just, since all the States had been compelled, as Virginia was compelled, to borrow the money and pay interest upon it. Maryland, as I have said, got relief under the act of 1858, and the bill passed directing the interest to be computed in her case as it is in every contract with individuals throughout the country, and according to the law as laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Then, subsequently, Massachusetts got relief exactly the same as that awarded to Maryland. In the case of Massachusetts the amount they got under the law, I think, was some $600,000, applying their payments first to the extinguishment of the interest and then to the principal of the debt.

Now, this bill simply proposes to do for the other States the same as was done for Maryland and Massachusetts.

Mr. ROWELL. Let me ask the gentleman another question. Is it not true that all moneys advanced during the recent war have been reimbursed to the States without interest, and that there are millions of dollars of accumulated interest not provided for by law at all?

Mr. TRIGG. I can not answer the gentleman, and I do not think his question touches the subject under discussion. I can state this, however, for his information—for it is a hardship, I think, but I have agreed to submit to it with the balance of my committee—that so far as any war debt from my State is concerned, if this law shall be passed, then that war debt will be set off against this indebtedness. In other words, we are compelled to pay the war tax said to be due by Virginia under the direct tax passed for that purpose in 1861.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. What does the gentleman mean by war tax?

Mr. TRIGG. I refer to the direct tax imposed upon the States during the year 1861.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If my friend will permit me, I think he states the fact a little too broadly. It does not compel Virginia to pay the tax, but simply leaves that sum in the Treasury for further adjustment after a general law is passed applying to all of them.

Mr. TRIGG. The gentleman has stated the facts more fully. I believe it was done at his instance; and, as I have said, there is no objection to it.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TRIGG. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. In the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth lines of the bill are these words:

Also making a deduction as of the 8th day of July, 1870.

My question is, why the interest should not be computed down to the time of settlement?

Mr. TRIGG. I will state why that is. I think the gentleman will find this is directly for the benefit of the Government instead of for the benefit of the State. To illustrate: This money was advanced by the State of Virginia in the years 1812–1814. In the year 1860 the Government owed the State of Virginia over $1,000,000. The State had then for years, as shown by the record here in Congress, been endeavoring to get what she now asks—a just settlement of the account. At that time she could not get the settlement, and borrowed from the Government the sum of $580,000, in round numbers. Now, then, the agents of the State of Virginia contended before the Committee on Claims that there should be a settlement at that time, and that the money which the State had itself been compelled in her extremity to borrow from the Government should be credited as of 1860.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Will the gentleman from Virginia state how the State borrowed money from the General Government?

Mr. TRIGG. It was borrowed from the Indian trust fund.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Did Congress by an act permit that?

Mr. TRIGG. Yes, sir. Several of the States borrowed money at that time; among them the States of Virginia and South Carolina, which are embraced in this bill.

Mr. EDEN. May I ask the gentleman from Virginia a question for information?

Mr. TRIGG. Certainly.

Mr. EDEN. For what length of time, under the adjustment proposed by this bill, will the Government be required to pay interest on money advanced?

Mr. TRIGG. I do not quite catch the gentleman's question.

Mr. EDEN. What length of time will we have to pay interest under the adjustment proposed by this bill?

Mr. TRIGG. We will have to pay interest from the time the advance was made by the State, July, 1814. The payments commenced to be made in 1816.

Mr. EDEN. So that under this bill the Government would be required to pay interest since 1816?

Mr. TRIGG. Yes, sir; as it did to all the other States.

Mr. EDEN. At what rate?

Mr. TRIGG. At the rate of 6 per cent.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Now, as the gentleman from Virginia has been answering everybody else, will he be kind enough to complete his answer to my question?

Mr. TRIGG. When we get to 1860, the State of Virginia borrows as well as the State of South Carolina from the Indian trust fund, which is now a part of the Government funds, $580,000. It was insisted, and according to the principles of equity and justice it could be well insisted, that that settlement could be made in 1860. But the Committee on Claims fixed July 8, 1870, because that was the date when the act was passed for the relief of the State of Massachusetts. They said it would be unjust, clearly, to come down to the present time and require in the case of a State with interest in her favor of $700,000 on a million of indebtedness to have it liquidated with $500,000 of indebtedness.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman permit me a moment further?

Mr. TRIGG. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. What I have to say is this: I do not care whether one settlement or the other benefits the Government or benefits the State of Virginia. I do not think that ought to enter into consideration. What you want is a just settlement. Now, why should not the interest on the money loaned to Virginia by the Government be legally computed from the time the money was loaned down to the time of settlement, and also the interest on the money that was advanced by Virginia be computed from the time it was paid down to the time of settlement and the balance struck? Why is not that just? I do not care which side it hits, whether Virginia or the Government. That should not enter into account at all.

Mr. TUCKER. With the permission of my colleague [Mr. TRIGG] I will say to the gentleman from Maine it would seem to me manifestly unjust for this reason: In 1860, say, there was due to Virginia $1,000,000; of that $300,000 was principal and $700,000 interest. Virginia then borrows $580,000 principal, which is less than the amount of interest that the Government then owed to her. Now you say, borrowing the interest which the Government owes to Virginia, Virginia is to pay the interest on her own interest as if it were the principal of a debt owing to the Government.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not say anything of the kind.

Mr. TUCKER. I beg pardon of the gentleman if I have misstated his position.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I say the interest ought to be computed on the amount which was due to the Government from Virginia from the time it was due down to the present time, just as you compute the interest on a promissory note, reckoning the interest from the time the debt was contracted up to the time of the first payment, subtracting the payment made of any interest down to the present time; and then the interest should be computed on the amount due by the Government to Virginia.

In other words, legal interest should be computed upon the two distinct debts from the time they were contracted down to the time of settlement, and the balance struck. I do not know on which side the balance would come out, but that makes no difference.

Mr. TUCKER. I do not think that mode of settlement has ever been adopted between private parties, and I think it ought not to be adopted between two governments. The principle I contend for is simply this: Virginia loaned $1,000,000 to the Government of the United States during the war of 1812, and she was entitled to interest upon that loan by recognition of the Government of the United States. From time to time the United States paid large sums back to Virginia. On the books of the Government here the sums so paid to Virginia were credited on the principal of the debt and not first upon the interest. The consequence was that, coming down to about 1858–'59, there was due to Virginia in round numbers $300,000 of principal and $700,000 of interest. Under those circumstances Virginia borrowed from the Federal Government $580,000. Now the Federal Government charges Virginia interest on that $580,000, but does not allow her interest on the $700,000 of interest that had been accruing for fifty years upon the original loan of Virginia to the United States.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But my proposition would give her interest on that.

Mr. TUCKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have made the computation and it amounts to this: If you make the settlement in 1860, that is to say, if you take the $580,000 as a credit upon the principal and interest due to Virginia at that time, the amount due to Virginia to-day would be, including interest, more than a million dollars. If you make the settlement by computing interest on the debt due from Virginia to the United States down to 1870, and on the principal due to Virginia down to 1870, the amount will be about $400,000. But as the principal due from Virginia to the United States is nearly twice as great as that due from the United States to Virginia, it is easy to see that all you have to do is to continue to let the account run long enough, and the claim of Virginia against the United States will be eaten up by the interest on the much larger principal due from Virginia to the United States.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I understand the gentleman's argument very well; but my proposition is simply this: That the interest upon the debt due to Virginia from the United States Government should be reckoned from the time the debt was incurred up to the first payment to Virginia; that that payment should be subtracted from the amount, just as you would deal with a payment on a promissory note, and then that interest should continue to be computed up to the next payment, and so on down to the present time. The amount of interest on the debt due to Virginia from the time it began down to the time of settlement would be thus computed just as you would compute interest on a promissory note, and the amounts that have been paid would be subtracted and the balance struck. That is the legal and the just way. I do not know whether it would affect Virginia favorably or unfavorably, but that question does not enter into the case; Virginia should have what is justly due her, and that is all.

Mr. TUCKER. But, as I understand the gentleman, he means that instead of taking the $580,000 loaned by the United States to Virginia in 1860 and crediting it upon the debt, principal and interest, then due to Virginia from the United States, he would compute interest upon that sum from that time against Virginia, and would also continue to compute interest in favor of Virginia upon the $300,000 of principal then due her, but would not compute interest on the $700,000.

Mr. MILLIKEN. No; the gentleman does not understand me. My proposition gives Virginia interest upon the debt from the time it was contracted; and if the Government, prior to the time to which the gentleman refers, had credited its own payments to Virginia upon the principal amount, they should be credited upon the interest first, and if the payment was more than the interest at a certain time, then the difference should be ascertained at that time, but, if it was not more, then you should go on until you reached a time when it was more than the interest before applying it to the principal.

Mr. TUCKER. Then you would take the $580,000 paid to Virginia in 1860 and credit it upon the interest due her at that time?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Certainly, and give Virginia interest up to that time, making the computation exactly in the same way as if this were a transaction between individuals.

Mr. TUCKER. I understand the proposition of my friend from Maine, and I agree with him as to the justice of that plan. But when that was urged in the Committee on Claims, a majority of the committee, as I understood, insisted upon this mode, which Virginia was willing to accept.

Mr. SOWDEN. And which would give to Virginia less than by the mode of computation which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] proposes.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not want to force upon Virginia any money that she does not want; but in a matter of this kind, if a particular method of computation appeared just, I would not consider for a moment whether it would give Virginia more or less.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to occupy the attention of the House on this matter for only a few moments. I took occasion to go to the Treasury Department this morning to get some data on this subject. It seems that Virginia, as has been stated, loaned to the Government of the United States various sums of money at different times from 1812 to 1814, upon which indebtedness the Government of the United States paid back to Virginia various sums at different times, so that in 1829 there was a balance of $298,369 due the State of Virginia from the United States. It is claimed by gentlemen representing the State of Virginia in this matter that in making the computation of interest an erroneous theory was adopted by which that State was wronged; and this bill, therefore, authorizes a recomputation of interest. It is claimed that instead of applying the payments in the first instance as they were applied upon the principal, the interest upon the debt due by the United States to Virginia should have been computed up to the time of the payment, and the payment applied first to the discharge of the interest; and this method of computation has been settled by the Supreme Court to be the correct one. Now it is asked that upon the balance of $298,369 due in 1829 we shall pay interest from that time until 1887, making in interest $1,038,316.

Mr. PERKINS. At what rate per cent.?

Mr. BURROWS. At 6 per cent., making the total debt due Virginia in 1887 (allowing interest from 1829) $1,336,685. This is the amount due Virginia, according to this method of computation of interest, which is conceded to be correct at this date.

Now, in 1860, the Government of the United States (and here is where the contest comes in) loaned Virginia $581,800, at 6 per cent., taking her bonds for the indebtedness. Those bonds will become due in 1894. Virginia has never paid a cent of interest or of principal on those bonds.

Mr. TRIGG. That is a mistake. The interest was paid on those bonds up to 1870.

Mr. BURROWS. Then I am misinformed. But, be that as it may, in the settlement of this account between the Government and Virginia, we would very naturally compute interest on the $581,800 from 1860 up to the time of settlement, and strike a balance. But the amount of Virginia's claim against the Government, with interest up to the present time, is, as I have stated, $1,336,685; and the claim of the United States against Virginia on the loan made by the Government to that State is $1,524,316, leaving Virginia in debt to the United States Government $187,631. So that, if the interest be computed on the debt due by Virginia up to the time of settlement, and on the debt due to Virginia up to the present time, the State of Virginia will be in debt to the United States, and the Government of the United States will owe Virginia nothing. But, in order to bring the United States in debt to Virginia, it is said, "You should take the $298,369, the balance due from the United States to Virginia in 1829, and compute interest on it at 6 per cent. until 1887, fifty-eight years, making an interest indebtedness of $1,038,316; then, add the principal to that, and you have $1,336,685 as the present indebtedness of the Government to Virginia. Then the bill provides that instead of computing the interest on the debt due by Virginia to the United States up to the time of settlement it shall be computed only up to 1870, throwing off seventeen years' interest.

In this way there will be something due to the State of Virginia. Taking the $581,800 loaned to Virginia in 1860, and computing interest at 6 per cent. up to 1870—and this bill authorizes the computation of no interest beyond that—the amount due to the United States from Virginia on that account is $930,880, which, deducted from the indebtedness due by the United States to Virginia, would leave $405,805 due by the Government to that State. In order to reach this result, as I have said, no interest is charged since 1870—or for seventeen years—upon the amount loaned by the Government of the United States to Virginia.

Mr. LONG. Upon what theory is that done?

Mr. BURROWS. The theory is this: That in 1870 there was a settlement with Massachusetts and some other States, and it is claimed that now, in order to be perfectly fair, the Government ought only to charge interest on its loan up to 1870. Very well; if that be so, upon what principle do you charge interest on the indebtedness due by the Government to Virginia up to 1887, while the interest due by Virginia to the United States is computed only up to 1870?

Mr. SOWDEN. Allow me right here——

Mr. BURROWS. Not now. If you wish to adjust this claim on the basis of 1870, on which the other claims were liquidated, compute interest on the debt due Virginia from 1829 to 1870, compute interest on $581,800 the Government loaned Virginia from 1860 to 1870; settle as you did with Massachusetts, and we will be owing Virginia $83,569 in 1870. Then add interest on this balance until date of final settlement.

Mr. PERKINS. Have you in your computation computed the interest on the direct tax claimed to be due from Virginia to the Government?

Mr. BURROWS. Oh, no.

Mr. PERKINS. I say the bill does not charge any interest on the direct tax levied on that State for war purposes, and why should not she be charged like every other State with the payment of that money?

Mr. BURROWS. Because it is expected the bill which is pending to wipe out all that direct tax will prevail.

Mr. PERKINS. It provides Virginia shall be charged, but does not allow any interest on it.

Mr. BURROWS. The whole matter is in a nutshell. In order to bring the General Government in debt to Virginia it is necessary to compute interest for seventeen years on her claim longer than you compute interest on the claim of the United States.

Mr. PERKINS. Upon what amount is interest claimed?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Should not interest be computed from the time the claim accrued down to the present time?

Mr. BURROWS. That would bring Virginia in debt to the United States.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not know how it would bring her.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to the House, in conclusion, there is no reason why we should compute the interest on the claim of Virginia up to 1887 and on the claim of the United States against Virginia only to 1870.

Mr. TUCKER. If the United States owed to Virginia in 1816 a principal debt, why, in God's name, should not interest be allowed upon it?

Mr. BURROWS. I will answer the gentleman's question in a moment. You claim the Government of the United States, when it paid back to Virginia, paid on the principal only and let the interest accumulate.

Mr. TUCKER. Very well.

Mr. BURROWS. But your bill provides for a recomputation.

Mr. TUCKER. Let me say a few words to the House as a matter of justice between man and man and between government and government. It is conceded in 1860 the amount of principal due to old Virginia by the United States was about $300,000, and of interest was $700,000. If the United States had paid the interest due and running for over fifty years at that time, Virginia would not have had to borrow $580,000 from the Government of the United States. But she borrowed from the Government of the United States nearly twice as much as was still due by the United States to Virginia and less than the interest due by the United States to Virginia. But my friend says the true way to settle it is to let Virginia compute interest, not on her accrued interest, but only on the principal of $300,000, and let the Government of the United States calculate interest on the $600,000 paid by Virginia, which is $300,000 more of principal that is to be due, and in that way by accumulating interest against our creditor we will pay off the principal and interest due!

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is the way the Pacific Railroad wished to pay the interest due to the Government of the United States.

Mr. SOWDEN. I ask the gentleman, what was the amount of principal with interest due by the Government to Virginia at the time the Government loaned Virginia $580,000?

Mr. TUCKER. Over a million of dollars. At the time she paid $580,000 there was due $700,000 in interest. Now the ground of the Government is, we will not pay interest on the interest we withheld from you, but we will charge interest on the money we loaned you.

Mr. BURROWS. Why do you say interest due? This bill provides for recomputation. Allow me——

Mr. TUCKER. I beg your pardon.

Mr. BURROWS. This bill provides for recomputation, and compels the Government to apply every payment to the liquidation in the first place of interest, so when you come to 1860 it is the principal which is left, the interest having been paid.

Mr. TUCKER. No; on the contrary, it is $300,000 of principal and $700,000 of interest, and if you had paid the $580,000 instead of loaning it to the State of Virginia, and credited it upon the debt, according to your own mode of computation the $580,000 would not have extinguished the interest then due to the State, and there would be still the principal due of more than $300,000.

Now, we say that when the Committee on Claims insist upon the hard measure, as we think for Virginia, of charging up against this amount the amount of the direct tax of 1861, then we say compute the interest on the same up to the time you settled with Massachusetts, and we are willing to accept that as a proper mode of canceling the obligation.

And I will say here, Mr. Chairman, that tradition has it, and I get this from credible sources, that when Mr. Charles Sumner, in 1870, passed that bill in the Senate in reference to Massachusetts he said that whenever Virginia was ready to accept the same terms of settlement as that accorded to Massachusetts he would cordially aid in bringing it about. Now, all we ask is the same measure of justice that was accorded to Massachusetts.

Mr. BURROWS. In settling with Massachusetts did the United States have any claim against Massachusetts?

Mr. TUCKER. None at all, sir.

Mr. BURROWS. Then, here is a new element in the case.

Mr. TUCKER. Very well, that is true; but I say to the gentleman that we take into consideration that element and propose a fair and reasonable settlement.

We say take the $580,000, credited in 1860, and compute interest on that up to 1870; deduct the one from the other, and let the balance be paid as it may be shown to be due.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that this whole thing is vicious.

Mr. TUCKER. I hope the gentleman will permit me to make a motion that the committee rise in order to limit debate. We have but one hour.

Mr. ROWELL. I only want ten minutes.

Mr. TUCKER. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2498) had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. TRIGG. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of this bill, and pending that I move that all general debate be limited to five minutes.

Mr. BURROWS. I move to strike out "five" and insert "thirty."

Mr. TUCKER. If that is done, it just kills the bill because the hour will be exhausted.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BURROWS, the House divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 66.

Mr. BURROWS. We will need to have a quorum on this vote.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. BURROWS and Mr. TRIGG were appointed tellers.

Mr. TUCKER. I would ask that by unanimous consent the time for the consideration of this bill be extended one hour.

Mr. HERBERT. I demand the regular order.

Some time subsequently:

Mr. TUCKER. I again ask that by unanimous consent the time be extended for the consideration of this bill for one hour.

Mr. RANNEY. I object.

Mr. STRAIT. I demand the regular order.

Mr. TUCKER. Then I ask for a half hour.

Mr. STRAIT. I object.

Mr. TUCKER. Then permit me to ask, Mr. Speaker, that to-morrow morning one hour be allowed for the consideration of this bill, as it is manifest the hour will be exhausted before we can secure a vote upon the measure.

Mr. RANNEY. I object.

Mr. GALLINGER. As a member of the Committee on Claims, having investigated this matter very carefully and satisfied myself upon the subject, I ask unanimous consent that a half hour may be given to-morrow morning for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. RANNEY and Mr. STRAIT objected.

Before the result of the vote was announced by the tellers the hour expired.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill H. R. 2498 had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to further consider the special order, being the bill (H. R. 7635) to consolidate certain bureaus of the Department of the Navy.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 60, noes 15.

Mr. BOUTELLE. No quorum.

Mr. HERBERT. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 141, nays 63, not voting 113; as follows:

YEAS—141.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. GOFF. I object.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice—

Mr. COX, of New York, with Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana.

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. WADE.

Mr. COMSTOCK with Mr. HIRES.

Mr. CANDLER with Mr. BUNNELL.

Mr. BALLENTINE with MR. LAIRD.

Mr. REAGAN with Mr. HISCOCK.

Mr. BLAND with Mr. GOFF.

Mr. PINDAR with Mr. DAVENPORT.

Mr. GREEN with Mr. SWINBURNE.

For this day:

Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. HOLMES.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York, with Mr. HERMANN.

Mr. LOWRY with Mr. ELY.

Mr. ROGERS with Mr. LYMAN.

Mr. BENNETT with Mr. HANBACK.

Mr. LE FEVRE with Mr. BRUMM.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, with Mr. WAKEFIELD.

Mr. MURPHY with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, with Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts.

Mr. COMPTON with Mr. ROCKWELL.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, with Mr. BAYNE.

Mr. TUCKER with Mr. BUTTERWORTH.

Mr. BOYLE with Mr. DINGLEY.

Mr. HUTTON with Mr. JOHNSON, of New York.

Mr. BELMONT with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. MULLER with Mr. RYAN.

Mr. MAHONEY with Mr. LINDSLEY.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, with Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, for this vote.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland, with Mr. WHITING.

Mr. MCRAE. I desire to announce that my colleague from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. GLOVER. I voted "aye," but withdraw my vote, finding that I am paired.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] is absent on account of the death of his brother, and asks leave of absence. In the absence of objection that will be granted.

Mr. COWLES. My colleague from North Carolina [Mr. BENNETT] was required to leave the Hall on account of sickness. I was out of the Hall on other business when the vote was taken, and did not return in time, otherwise I would have voted "aye."

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had adopted a resolution, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, ordering that there be printed for the use of the two Houses of Congress 6,000 additional copies of the report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations touching our fisheries, numbered 1683, one-third thereof for the use of the Senate and two-thirds for the use of the House; also that there be added at the end of said report numbered 1683, Senate Executive Document No. 55, and that said documents be bound in paper covers.

The message further announced that the Senate had adopted a joint resolution of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A joint resolution (S. R. 88) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia.

CONSOLIDATION OF NAVAL BUREAUS.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7635) to consolidate certain bureaus of the Department of the Navy, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. Forty-two minutes of the time allowed for general debate remain to be occupied by those in favor of the bill.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not propose to occupy that time, my wish being to go on with the consideration of the bill by sections. But I desire, first, very briefly, to recall the attention of the House to this bill and to the discussion upon it. It will be remembered that the committee reported the bill ten to three; out of thirteen members of the committee ten, without regard to party, favored the bill. It has been shown here that Secretary Chandler expressed himself more than once as in favor of the reform, the one great reform which is the principal purpose of this bill; that Secretary Whitney is in favor of it; that the Admiral of the Navy is also in favor of it; that he has said substantially——

Mr. GOFF. Do I understand the gentleman from Alabama to say that ex-Secretary Chandler was in favor of this bill?

Mr. HERBERT. Not of this particular bill, but of the principal purpose we propose to effect by it.

Mr. GOFF. The recommendation of Mr. Chandler was as to the Bureau of Steam Engineering, and did not allude to the Bureau of Yards and Docks.

Mr. HERBERT. If the gentleman will not interrupt me I will sooner get through. But I will say now, in answer to his suggestion, the principal purpose of this bill is by consolidation to put under the charge of one bureau everything which has to do with the building of a ship. Secretary Chandler more than once recommended in his report that Congress should consolidate the Bureaus of Engineering and of Construction and also put Equipment under the same bureau. This bill does that, and goes in that respect just one step farther by putting the navy-yard in which this work of building and repairing a ship is done also under that same bureau.

I was about to say that the Admiral of the Navy had declared it to be the almost unanimous opinion of the Navy that this bill, or something like it, should be passed. And yet, Mr. Chairman, there is a certain portion of the Navy opposed to this bill; and there is the difficulty.

I hold in my hand a letter written to a former colleague upon the committee, Mr. Hewitt, of New York, in which the writer opposes the bill then before the committee—as he would oppose this one—and, among other things, says that while the reforms which the Secretary desires "are unquestionably needed," yet he ought to pursue some other method in order to "avoid antagonizing a very powerful and influential body of naval officers and their friends."

That body—mark, gentlemen, the words of this writer—that body of officers, he says,

Is strong enough to hold the balance of power in any case of important action in either House or Senate, and he [the Secretary] can not afford to force them into a position of positive antagonism.

Is that true? Is there any body of naval officers or any other body of officers that hold the balance of power here? Perhaps time will demonstrate.

Mr. REED. What does the gentleman mean by that?

Mr. HERBERT. Well, I do not mean to say that every gentleman who opposes this bill is influenced by the officers who oppose it.

Mr. REED. But you have just cited the Admiral in favor of it.

Mr. HERBERT. I have.

Mr. REED. Well, can men testify on only one side of this case?

Mr. HERBERT. No, sir.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Oh, of course it is not proper for anybody to cite the testimony of officers on this question except the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not catch the point of the inquiry of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]. What is it?

Mr. REED. The point is this: If officers are good witnesses on one side, why not on the other?

Mr. HERBERT. I speak of the personal interests which officers have in defeating this bill. I desire to call the attention of the House to the great difficulty always experienced whenever an attempt is made to abolish an office, and that difficulty is increased threefold in this case, because this bill attempts the herculean task of abolishing three bureaus at once. The question I was putting to the House when I was interrupted was: Is this House competent to that task?

The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] said that we were putting on trial the act of 1842. We are not. That act provided for but five bureaus. One of those bureaus embraced everything relating to the building, equipping, and repairing of a ship. That is what we want to return to. It was not until 1862 that the eight bureaus were created. It will be said on the other side that that was done on the recommendation of the Chief Constructor, Lenthall. That is true. He did desire to have his friend Isherwood, who was then Chief of the division of Steam Engineering, made a commodore, and he recommended the change; but is that a reason why, when twenty years of experience in peace and war have given ample opportunity to examine and test the matter, we should adhere to the system then adopted, although it is shown to be wrong? My friend from Delaware [Mr. LORE] says that this system has existed all along under Whig and Democratic administrations. There is no party in this, but the gentleman is mistaken. No Democratic and no Whig administration ever saw the three things, construction of a hull, construction of engines, and the equipment of a ship given to three different bureaus. That was done in the hurry of war. And I call attention to another fact.

In 1844, by order of the Secretary of the Navy, all the stores were put under one head, and, notwithstanding what the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] has said, they remained under one head all through the war and down to 1867, when these eight bureaus that had been established during the war succeeded in dividing up the stores among themselves, each having its own storehouse and its own clerks.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. If it will not interfere with the line of the gentleman's argument I wish to ask him a question at this point. I wish to inquire whether the personnel of these bureaus remain the same now that it was when stores and supplies were accumulated at such enormous cost as stated by the Secretary of the Navy in his report.

Mr. HERBERT. No, sir.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Because, if that has not been changed, I should have little hope in achieving any reform by merely changing the bureaus. In my judgment it is more a question of personnel than of bureau organization; and I wish to say that I think this is an example of life-tenure in office and bureaucratic government, the worst form of government in the world.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Oh, do not attack the Administration in that way! [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. How does this bill remedy that?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not know that it will remedy it, but the inquiry is pertinent to the issue here.

Mr. REED. I trust these attacks on the Administration will cease. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] says that the personnel has been changed, and therefore the reforms will probably follow.

Mr. BUCK. With the consent of the gentleman from Alabama, I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that we have already prepared an amendment which will obviate the objection suggested, which will authorize the Secretary of the Navy by proper orders to distribute all property that accumulates too much in one place.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Has that amendment been reported?

Mr. BUCK. I did not say that it had.

Mr. BOUTELLE. We are discussing this bill as we have it before us.

Mr. HERBERT. The opinion of my friend from Ohio seemed by the speech of my friend from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to be shared somewhat by him, for he said, bringing a very serious charge against the previous administrations, that it was all a question of maladministration. In that charge he included even himself, because these things did exist while he was Secretary of the Navy. But I defend him from the charge he himself brought, for in my opinion Secretary Chandler was right, and the Admiral is right, and Secretary Whitney is right, in maintaining, as the facts show, that these defects arise out of the system itself.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Rather than the personnel.

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, rather than the personnel. Let me give an illustration. The New York, a wooden vessel, was begun in 1864; was at that time put upon the stocks in the Brooklyn navy yard. She is there now.

Mr. MCADOO. A mere skeleton.

Mr. HERBERT. The last stroke of work done upon that vessel was in the fall of 1868. Yet in 1881 the Bureau of Engineering went to work and during 1881–'82–'83–'84 made boilers for that vessel, a vessel upon which no work had been done for thirteen years. These boilers were constructed at a cost of $107,000.

Mr. GOFF. Did not Congress appropriate for that?

Mr. HERBERT. No, sir; not a dollar.

Mr. GOFF. At the time the work was commenced they were authorized to proceed; but the difficulty was Congress refused to make the appropriation according to the estimate.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman can not get away from his own question in that manner. He asked me whether Congress appropriated the money for these boilers. I tell him no. I wrote and asked the Chief of Engineering to point out to me the appropriation for those boilers, and he could not do it. In my note I inquired how much those boilers were worth and how much they had cost. After stating their cost as I have given it, he said he did not know what they would sell for; that they were good boilers and could be sold if anybody could be found who wanted them; but that the Government had no use for them, because the Navy Department had changed its mind since they were begun; and, in order to show what the mind of the Navy Department was, he pointed me to a sentence in the report of the Chief of the Bureau of Construction, which was to the effect that the chief intended to complete that vessel when he got the money.

That was the authority on which the then Chief of the Bureau of Engineering acted. I am glad to say it was not the present chief. Understanding that the Chief of Construction intended when he got the money to build that ship, the Chief of Engineering goes to work and constructs the boilers. They were completed in 1884; and there they lie to-day in the navy-yard here at Washington. I presume they were not burned up or injured on Saturday last, because they were lying near the wharf, I believe, not under shelter but exposed to the weather.

Mr. GOFF. Will the gentleman tell this House in what particular his proposed bill will remedy that evil?

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, sir; I will tell the gentleman right here. If one man is responsible for the building of a ship, its engines and its machinery, he will never start upon the one until he has money for the other. He will not, thirteen years after the work has been abandoned upon the hull of a vessel, start to make boilers for it. Any officer who would do that ought to be court-martialed.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Does not that simply involve the assertion or assumption that the chief of the Bureau of Material, Construction, and Repair, who is to be appointed under this bill, will exercise better judgment than the Chief of Engineering did under the law as it has been?

Mr. HERBERT. Not at all, because the very purpose of this bill is to put all these bureaus, engineering and construction and equipment, under one head, that head being at all times enabled to say to this one, "you shall build," and to the other, "you shall build," or "you shall not."

Mr. BOUTELLE. Precisely. Now, as I understand my friend, his allegation is that the Chief of Engineering made a mistake, a blunder, in building engines which ought not to have been built. Does the gentleman assume that the chief of the reorganized bureau to be created under this bill is necessarily going to be incapable of making mistakes? This, I submit, is entirely a question of the good judgment of the officer, and does not go at all to the matter of organization.

Mr. HERBERT. I never said the Chief of the Engineer Bureau made a mistake. Oh, no. If I did so I retract it. The mistakes are made all along one after another.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What did I understand you to say? I understood you to say that certain engines were built that ought not to have been built.

Mr. HERBERT. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me further, as I wish now to close this discussion. I have a table here to which I wish to call the attention of the House. It shows that not one, but set after set of boilers were constructed when there was either no use for them or long before there was any need of them.

Here is the Amphitrite boilers, finished in 1877, just recently put in; the Colorado boilers, finished in 1877, not yet put in; the Franklin boilers, finished in 1877, not yet in; the Monadnock boilers, finished in 1879, not yet in; the New York boilers, finished in 1884, not yet in; the Wabash boilers, finished in 1877, not yet in; the Tuscarora boilers, finished in 1881, not yet in. Let gentlemen ponder the full meaning of this table.

Here it is, with citation to the books and pages showing its correctness:

Do gentlemen think, Mr. Chairman, these mistakes would occur year after year, and the Government money be thus wasted, if one man were responsible for everything connected with the building of a ship? Our purpose here is to make one man responsible for all this work, and to give him authority over it.

Another thing we propose is to consolidate all purchases under one head. It may be said the Secretary has done that. That is true; but it is the opinion of the Secretary, as it was the opinion of Secretary Hunt, and as it was the opinion of Secretary Thompson and Secretary Chandler, that reform in Navy organization should be embodied in the law. No executive officer can satisfactorily administer his office when those under him are in opposition, whether it be secretly or otherwise.

Now, as to economy in the Navy. I was astonished to hear so good a lawyer as my friend from Delaware [Mr. LORE] stick, as he did, in the bark of this question when he undertook to discuss it as if it were a question about the salaries to be paid, on the one hand, to the officers presiding over the three bureaus we propose to abolish, and, on the other, of the four divisions we propose to establish; that is to say, of the difference between the increase of pay to the three commodores to be dispensed with and the added pay of division chiefs whose pay is increased by the difference between land-pay and sea-pay. Nobody can tell what it is to be, because it depends so much on the rank and pay of those holding these places. He figured out that in some imaginary case it would be $8,000. Are you serious when you discuss the question of economy and argue as if the question rests there?

Mr. LORE. I will see. The question of economy runs all through the bill.

Mr. HERBERT. Of course.

Mr. LORE. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Has not the Secretary of the Navy now, to-day, the power to correct these abuses without any change in the organic law?

Mr. HERBERT. No, sir.

Mr. LORE. Point out where he has not.

Mr. HERBERT. You will not get me away from the point. Are you serious?

Mr LORE. I am serious.

Mr. HERBERT. In arguing before this House the question of economy rests with the difference in salary between three persons who may be commodores and four others who are to draw sea-pay instead of other duty pay?

Mr. LORE. I did not so state.

Mr. HERBERT. That is in your speech.

Mr. LORE. I said the organization of the Navy Department as you propose it will entail additional expense in that item over the Navy Department as it is now.

Mr. HERBERT. But I will proceed.

Mr. LORE. But you must not misstate me.

Mr. HERBERT. The substance of the gentleman's argument on that proposition appears in the RECORD, and if I am wrong I can easily be corrected. He and I have just completed an appropriation bill in which we found that the economy by consolidating naval stores under one head in the way of dispensing with clerical force alone amounted to over $20,000, and that is not a drop in the bucket—nothing to compare with the economies which will result when we consolidate these bureaus as proposed by the bill. We expect to bring about not only increase in efficiency but decrease in expense all along the lines; clerks, writers, store-keepers, head men in blacksmith-shops, cooper-shops, carpenter-shops, and so on; many of them will be dispensed with, and while you promote efficiency and prevent conflicts, economy will run up to hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is this saving the result of some experience which has been had in the Navy Department?

Mr. HERBERT. It is the result of experience, as shown by the testimony of such men as Admiral Porter and others who have investigated the matter.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is this the result of experience or is it an estimate?

Mr. HERBERT. I do not care to take time to answer that question now.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not care to have you answer it. I will answer it in my own time.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not care to discuss the matter further. It has been gone over very fully; and I now ask that the bill be read by sections for debate and amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 419 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 419. That the business of the Department of the Navy shall, except as otherwise provided by law, be distributed, in such manner as the Secretary of the Navy shall judge to be expedient and proper, among the following bureaus:

"First. A Bureau of Navigation.
"Second. A Bureau of Ordnance.
"Third. A Bureau of Medicine and Surgery.
"Fourth. A Bureau of Material, Construction, and Repair.
"Fifth. A Bureau of Supplies and Accounts."

Mr. BUCK. I offer the amendment I send to the desk, to come in after the ninth line.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 9, section 419, add the following: "Provided, That the Secretary shall have power, by proper orders, to transfer the materials, stores, and other property belonging to the United States from one bureau to any other bureau, as the same may be needed.

Mr. BUCK. I offer that for the purpose of removing the objections urged by certain members that the bill would not perform for the Navy Department what its friends claim; that is to say, that it would do away with the abuses which have to a certain extent arisen in that Department by the accumulation of large quantites of surplus stores and materials in the different bureaus—much more than the bureaus themselves required for the work they had on hand.

I had occasion the other day to explain how that condition of things had been brought about, and what large quantities of stores and materials were to be found in certain bureaus, while in some cases none could be found in others. This amendment will allow the Secretary of the Navy to transfer any stores not needed in the bureaus, either now or which may hereafter be accumulated, to any other bureau where they are needed, and I think removes the cause for criticism that existed during the debate on the bill; and while I think that the bill as it originally stood would of itself remove that objection by putting into the one bureau all of those subjects which appertain to the construction of a ship, yet it is fair to the members of this House who have made such criticisms that we should put in this amendment, which can do no harm, and makes the bill clearer, as I am willing to concede.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman from Connecticut, I will state, consulted with other friends of the measure on the committee, and we have all agreed that while there is no actual necessity for the incorporation of this amendment, yet, in order to remove the ground of criticism, as he has stated, we have agreed to accept it as a part of the bill.

Mr. REED. The Committee on Naval Affairs is also a committee on appropriations, if I do not incorrectly remember the language of our present rules. I would like to know, therefore, what the opinion of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs is, as the chairman of a committee on appropriations, with reference to a proposition which prevents, or rather nullifies, the application of the appropriation of money by Congress to specific objects?

Some time ago a new plan was determined upon, and carried into execution, of making definite and distinct appropriations, because such definite and distinct appropriations were in the interest of economy and came within the purview of the proper functions of Congress. Now this entirely, so far as the Navy Department is concerned, abolishes that method. It adopts instead a regulation which, practically, makes the appropriation for the different purposes indicated, as connected with ship-building in the Navy, a lump sum.

Mr. BUCK. Will the gentleman from Maine allow me to suggest that the amendment does not authorize the Secretary of the Navy to transfer anything but property from one bureau to another—property which belongs to the Department.

Mr. REED. Precisely; but then the Secretary of the Navy can purchase under one appropriation, under the laws of Congress, and then divert the proceeds of that purchase to a purpose to which Congress has refused its sanction.

Now, does the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, as chairman of a committee on appropriations, approve of that method in the interest of economy?

Mr. HERBERT. I approve of this amendment, the effect of which, as I understand it, is simply to provide in express terms that the Secretary of the Navy may now, in the first place, transfer any property belonging to any particular bureau with that bureau whenever it may be transferred, either by law or by his order; and this transfer from one bureau to another of surplus property is thus authorized by law.

Here, Mr. Chairman, is an attempt to reorganize the United States Navy Department. If we succeed, the form of the appropriations ought to be somewhat different from what it now is. As I said I do not think that amendment is at all necessary, because, in my opinion, when the Secretary undertakes, and has the power to transfer, he ought to have authority to transfer everything with that authority, embraced by it, all property over which that authority exists going with the authority when that is transferred. But there were criticisms here in the House, and that amendment was intended to apply to them.

Again, it may perhaps serve another purpose, and if so I shall favor it. There have been vast accumulations during the past twenty years of property in the different bureaus, some of which are set forth in the report of the Secretary. For instance, enough of nails is found in one bureau to last for fifty years, and yet another bureau right by it wanted just such nails and could not get them, under a decision made by the Comptroller, and was purchasing nails just like them.

The same thing has occurred in relation to lanterns. One bureau required to have manufactured for it lanterns of a particular kind, while another bureau was in possession of lanterns in excess of its requirements of that very same kind. I think the Secretary ought to have power to transfer that property, although it was bought for one bureau, to another bureau which has use for it, when that bureau does not possess the property itself. Does the gentleman from Maine not think so?

Mr. REED. The appropriations for the Navy in times gone by used to be made for specific purposes, but the Secretary had the right, claimed it, and acted under it, of transferring the balances from one department to another. That was found, in the opinion of the House of Representatives, to be a reprehensible practice and it was carefully and sedulously guarded against; and it was guarded against because the effect of it was to make the appropriations for the Navy lump sums, to be expended substantially, within certain limitations, in the discretion of the Secretary. That was abolished with the concurrence of both sides. Now it is proposed to introduce under a new guise precisely the same thing. Only the transfer is not to be of money but is to be of material; so that if the Secretary wishes to use appropriations which Congress intended for one purpose for another purpose, all he has to do is to make one bureau buy the things and then transfer them to the other bureau where he wants them; so that substantially you have got the same thing that Congress has seen fit to guard against.

Of course, I am in no way responsible for any results that may come from this action; but, perhaps, I should be responsible if I did not call the attention of the House to the situation.

Mr. BUCK. I wish to make just this suggestion. The gentleman from Maine has certainly made a very plausible speech in regard to this amendment, but the reasons which he urges upon the members of this committee are the very reasons I should urge why we should adopt such an amendmont as I have offered.

Under the system of the appropriations we have been making, we have appropriated for the Bureau of Navigation, for the Bureau of Ordnance, for the Bureau of Yards and Docks, for the Bureau of Steam Engineering specific sums. Those sums could not be changed from one bureau so that they would apply to any other bureau. The bureau to which the money was appropriated would take it and buy stores and material, and by the action of some other bureau that was connected with the building of a ship they might be prevented from using the material and stores which they had purchased, and then they would have the material and stores on hand, with no power to transfer them anywhere else where they might be needed. This iron-bound custom of specific appropriation, so far as the different bureaus of the Navy Department are concerned, is largely responsible for the abuses that have grown up in that bureau system.

That is one of the great reasons why we find there now in one of the navy-yards in a particular bureau 46,000 augers and bits, and in another 29,500 gross of screws, 10,000 of these lying at closed yards. There are 146,385 files in stock, and 42,000 of them are lying in yards that are entirely closed and have been for years.

Mr. REED. Why not make the transfer in the appropriation bill?

Mr. BUCK. There are 11,813 paint-brushes in stock; 2,000 of these are in the stores of the yards that are closed. That is because the appropriation has been made specific, and with the proceeds of that appropriation they have bought these materials and stores, and they are there in closed yards and can not be used.

I say in the interest of economy we ought to adopt this amendment and authorize the Secretary of the Navy to transfer these stores from one bureau to any other where they are needed. I had thought when I offered this amendment that it was in the interest of economy and in the interest of an efficient administration of the affairs of those bureaus.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Connecticut does not in any way meet the objection I made. If it was found under the present system there was an accumulation in one bureau beyond what was needed there, Congress at its next session could transfer that material in an appropriation bill; and Congress would still retain control. The gentleman does not seem to comprehend the danger that they run in allowing the Secretary to have power to cause unusual expenditures in one department for things which he knows will not be needed there for the very purpose of transferring them to a department which transfer Congress would not sanction. In other words, the power which Congress has determined to guard for itself is by this amendment taken from Congress and given to the Secretary. I do not say whether it is a proper thing or not. I simply call the attention of the Committee on Naval Affairs to the effect of the transaction. That is all.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me somewhat remarkable that after we have been treated to a long discussion on the merits or alleged merits of this bill, among which almost the only tangible improvement that I remember to have heard set forth was the enabling of the Secretary to transfer from one bureau to another certain kegs of nails, the possession of which in the engineering bureau has vexed the souls of my friend from Connecticut and my friend from Alabama—that at the very threshold of the detailed discussion of this bill the gentlemen come in here and admit precisely what was contended by myself and the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] from the start, that there is nothing in their bill whatever to accomplish this transfer which they admit to be so necessary.

So we have here, in effect, a proposition at the very outset to remedy a fundamental defect in their own bill. Now, if I were to talk here for hours it seems to me it would be impossible to demonstrate any more clearly than it is demonstrated by this admission of the gentlemen themselves that their measure has been ill-considered, that it is crude, that it is not adapted to secure the reforms which they profess to desire, and that it is not a wise or a safe proceeding for the Congress of the United States, at the heel of a session, upon a proposition so illy matured as this, so clearly confessed to be lacking in the essential elements of usefulness, to reorganize—or rather to disorganize—a great department of the Government by tearing up by the roots divisions and bureaus which date their existence from forty years in the past.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is another view to which I call the attention of the House, there is another phase of this matter that is brought more clearly into light by this amendment. First, we have the confession on the part of the committee that their bill absolutely fails to accomplish what they profess to think necessary; and, secondly, I desire to call attention to the fact that while the Naval Committee have attempted, as they say, by bill, and are now attempting by amendment, to confer upon the Secretary of the Navy a power which they assert he does not possess to-day—a necessary power, as they allege, which the Secretary can not now exercise under the law, the power of transferring material from one bureau to another—I wish to call attention, I say, to the fact that while they are making these professions, the Secretary of the Navy, as is known by the chairman of the committee and as is well known by my friend from Connecticut [Mr. BUCK], is to-day, and has been for weeks, engaged in an arbitrary transfer of the materials of different bureaus from their control to the control of other bureaus to an extent unknown in the history of the Navy hitherto.

I have received within a few days copies of public journals published in different parts of the country calling attention to this remarkable assumption of power by the present Secretary of the Navy. The Boston Journal of a few days ago publishes an editorial which I hold in my hand, the opening words of which only I will read:

A recent order of the Secretary of the Navy proposes to transfer on February 1, 1887, all the buildings and machinery in the navy-yard at Charlestown, Mass., at present under the control of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, of the Bureau of Construction, of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, to the control of the Bureau of Equipment, and all machinery not required for the use of this bureau, to other stations, or otherwise to be disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, was recognized and yielded to Mr. BOUTELLE.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I thank the gentleman. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to direct the attention of the House to this salient fact, that under an order of the present Secretary of the Navy, of recent date, an order which I hold in my hand, he has assumed and is to-day exercising the authority, not simply to transfer from one bureau to another a few kegs of nails or a few dozen or a few hundred files, but to transfer from one of the great navy-yards of this country the whole of the machinery, the whole of the plant of the great Bureaus of Steam Engineering and Construction. Yet, in the face of this fact, gentlemen come in hear and say that the law is so defective that they must have not only this bill passed, which they claim will cure all these evils, but also that they must patch onto it an addition, an amendment, to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to do just exactly what he is doing to-day.

Mr. HERBERT. Does not the gentleman know that an order like that was made in 1844, and lasted nearly twenty years, and that the power to make the order is given in the organic act, which says that the powers are distributed among the following bureaus, and the Secretary may distribute them as he pleases?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am very happy, Mr. Chairman, to yield a portion of my brief time to enable the chairman of the committee to confirm so fully my statement, that from away back the power has existed in the Navy Department to do the very thing which he has told the House it requires an elaborate bill with an elaborate amendment tacked onto it to accomplish.

Mr. BUCK. Then the amendment will not do any harm.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Now, Mr. Chairman, everybody who is familiar with the discussions here for the past dozen years in regard to the use of appropriations is very well aware of the fact to which my colleague from Maine [Mr. REED] adverted awhile ago, that, whatever restriction there may be upon applying the materials or the money of one bureau to the purposes of another, the condition of things which exists to-day in the Navy Department was provided for only a few years ago as a measure alleged to be of absolutely necessary reform. I have not taken the trouble to go back to the record, but I should not be much afraid to hazard the guess that if I did so I would find that when that legislation was before the House my friend from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] was as zealous in behalf of restricting the power of the Secretary to manipulate appropriations from one bureau to another as he is to-day to have that restriction repealed and restore the arbitrary power.

Mr. BUCK. You do not mean appropriations; you mean property.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman says I do not mean appropriations. I do mean appropriations. It makes no difference whatever whether the Secretary of the Navy is enabled to take $10,000 from the appropriation for steam engineering and transfer it to buy material for the Bureau of Construction or whether he tells the chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering to buy so much material and then transfers it. The effect is precisely the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair assumes that the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the question of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BUCK], which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 9 add:

"Provided, That the Secretary shall have power, by proper orders, to transfer the materials, stores, and other property belonging to the United States from one bureau to any other bureau, as the same may be needed."

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 85, noes 36.

Mr. GOFF. No quorum.

Mr. HERBERT. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7635) to consolidate certain bureaus of the Department of the Navy, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HERBERT. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 1, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MARGARET DUNLAP—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message; which was read, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I hereby return without approval Senate bill 2167, entitled "An act granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret Dunlap."

By this bill it is proposed to grant a pension to the beneficiary therein named as the mother of James F. Dunlap, who enlisted in the Seventh Missouri State Militia Cavalry in 1862, and died in July, 1864, of wounds received at the hand of a comrade.

The favorable action of the Senate upon this bill appears to be based, so far as the cause of death is concerned, upon an affidavit, contained in the report of the committee to which the bill was referred, made by one G. Will Houts, second lieutenant in the company to which the deceased soldier belonged, in which the affiant deposes that some of the comrades of the deceased being engaged in an affray he attempted to separate the combatants, whereupon one of them, without cause or provocation, stabbed the deceased in the breast, from which in a few days thereafter he died, to which affidavit is added the finding of a court-martial that the party inflicting the wound was found guilty of manslaughter and sentenced to five years' imprisonment.

Upon this showing it might be difficult to spell out the facts that the injury to the soldier was received in the line of duty, or that any theory of granting pensions covered the case.

But the weak features of this application are not alluded to in the committee's report.

The record of the soldier's death states that he was "killed by one of his comrades in a difficulty."

The same Lieutenant Houts, who in 1872 made oath that the soldier was wounded while attempting to separate comrades who were fighting, testified in 1864 before the court-martial upon the trial of the man who did the wounding, and whose name was Capehart, that Dunlap, the deceased, stated to him "that he was more to blame than Capehart, and that they had been scuffling at first good-naturedly and then both got angry; that he was rougher with Capehart than he ought to have been."

Another witness testified that the affray took place between Dunlap and Capehart; that Dunlap handled Capehart very roughly, kicking him, &c., and that finally Capehart stabbed Dunlap, upon which the latter attempted to get his gun, but was prevented from doing so by the witness.

Of course there can be no pretense of any kind of claim against the Government arising from these facts.

It is quite evident that the affidavit presented to the Senate Committee was contrived to deceive, and it is to be feared that it is but a sample of many that are made in support of claims for pensions.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 31, 1887.

CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY BUILDING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with the act of April 15, 1886, a detailed statement of the proceedings of the commission for the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library; which was referred to the Committee on the Library and ordered to be printed.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. MANDERSON presented the credentials of ALGERNON S. PADDOCK chosen by the Legislature of Nebraska a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1887; which were read and ordered to placed on file.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SEWELL presented resolutions adopted by Barry Post, No. 27, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of New Jersey, urging the passage of the Edmunds-Tucker bill for the suppression of polygamy; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I present two memorials of property owners, residents of the city of Washington on the line of Twelfth street southwest, and Twelfth street northwest, and a memorial of property owners on the line of Sixth street northwest, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H. R. 8976) for the incorporation of the Washington Traction Railway Company, and giving reasons for their protest. These memorials are numerously signed. I move that they be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I present a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Kansas concerning the postal facilities in that State. I ask that it be read.

The Chief Clerk read the memorial, as follows:

Whereas the railway mail facilities of the State of Kansas have failed to keep pace with the rapid development of the State; and

Whereas there are 500 miles of railroad in operation in said State upon which there is no mail service; and

Whereas the car facilities on many of the through lines are insufficient for a proper distribution of the mail; and

Whereas there is not a sufficient number of postal clerks on many of the lines in the State to properly perform the services required of them; and

Whereas the superintendent of the seventh division of the railway mail service has apparently failed to recognize the growing needs of the State: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Kansas (the senate concurring therein) That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are hereby respectfully requested to use their utmost endeavors to secure the necessary improvements for the proper distribution and prompt delivery of the mail.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be directed to forward a copy of this resolution to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

I, E. B. Allen, secretary of state of the State of Kansas, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the original resolution now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my official seal. Done at Topeka this 27th day of January, A. D. 1887.

[SEAL.] E. B. ALLEN, Secretary of state.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to say that the resolution which has been read is simply corroborative of the universal expression of the press and of the business men of the State of Kansas in regard to the present condition of the postal service in that State. It is simply disgraceful. It is without sufficient force. It is negligently carried on; and in every way it is the reverse of what it ought to be in order to render that service which the Postal Department was organized to render.

There are, as stated in the resolution, several hundred miles of railroad in that State upon which no service has been put at all. I undertake to say that there never has been a time before, in the history of the Government, until the incoming of this Administration, where there was a refusal or a failure to put mail service upon a constructed railroad as soon as the fact of the construction of the railroad and the terminal points of it were brought to the attention of the Department. The present Administration has for months withheld service from railroads already constructed, and has continued to do so in that State as I have no doubt it has continued to do elsewhere, so that the postal service in that growing State of newspapers and active business is in the worst possible condition it ever has been.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SAWYER presented a petition of wholesale druggists of Milwaukee, Wis., praying for a reduction of the internal-revenue taxes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALDRICH presented a petition signed by the principal marine underwriters of the United States, praying for the establishment of a harbor of refuge at or near Point Judith, Rhode Island; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Charles Fletcher and others, citizens of Providence, R. I., praying for the repeal of the internal-revenue laws; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAMERON presented resolutions adopted by the Philadelphia Board of Trade, the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia, and the Philadelphia Maritime Exchange; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Whereas the increasing commerce of the port of Philadelphia demands enlarged wharf facilities for vessels now engaged in coastwise and foreign trade; and

Whereas it is a notorious fact that there are but few piers of sufficient length to accommodate safely the largest vessels trading with this port; and if it be desired to retain our commerce some speedy and radical measures must be adopted to secure the extension of the wharves to meet the present and future necessities; and

Whereas the further extension of the port warden's line under the existing conditions has been declared by recognized authorities unwise and dangerous, thus restricting the length of our wharves to their present inadequate dimensions; and

Whereas "Smith's" and "Windmill" Islands stand as permanent barriers to the future improvement of our valuable river frontage, and threaten most seriously the commercial welfare of our great city: therefore,

Your memorialists, the Philadelphia Board of Trade, the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia, and the Philadelphia Maritime Exchange, request your honorable bodies to pass a resolution under which an inquiry shall be made as to the feasibility of removing "Smith's" and "Windmill" Islands and the shoals adjacent thereto, and that the sum of $2,500 be appropriated for defraying the expenses of such inquiry.

And your memoralists will ever pray, &c.

[SEAL.] FRED. FRALEY,
President Philadelphia Board of Trade.

Attest:
Z. P. TUCKER, Secretary.

[SEAL.] WILLIAM E. BURK,
President Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia.

Attest:
C. ROSS SMITH, Secretary.

[SEAL.] WILLIAM BROCKIE,
President Philadelphia Maritime Exchange.

Attest:
EDW. B. SHERWOOD, Secretary.

PHILADELPHIA, January 25, 1887.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania, presented the petition of R. K. Campbell and 19 other citizens of Connorsburg, Pa.; the petition of William J. O'Neill and 95 other citizens of Philadelphia, Pa.; the petition of Jacob Week and 28 other citizens of Pittsburgh, Pa.; and the petition of Peter W. Weide and 19 other citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., respectfully representing that they are consumers of oleomargarine in their own homes, and stating that the license tax on oleomargarine is from five to fifty times higher than the license tax on whisky, beer, or tobacco, and praying for a reduction of the same; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented the petition of B. F. Fahnestock and 7 other druggists and merchants of Pittsburgh, Pa., praying for the repeal of the internal-revenue laws; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CALL. I present a letter, in the nature of a petition, to be submitted to the Committee on Commerce, from Mr. H. B. Plant. I wish to state that Mr. Plant is the president of the Coast Line Railway. While I have very slight personal acquaintance with him, I have knowledge of the fact that he is a man of large wealth, who has used it beneficially to the people of the Southern States, and especially to the State of Florida, in the construction of lines of railway and in the development of that State. The letter states:

I am largely interested in several rail and steamship lines engaged in the transportation of passengers, property, and mails to, from, and through the State of Florida. After such examination as these companies could make of the Gulf coast, Tampa Bay was selected as the most eligible for the development of a great future trade between the United States, the West Indies, Central and South America. In proof of their convictions on this point, these companies have connected and extended their rail lines to Tampa, and a tri-weekly mail steamship line is now plying between Tampa, Key West, and Havana. But serious difficulties are encountered from the fact that the port of Tampa is not a port of entry. This, however, it was thought, could be overcome by bonding the lines under the act of Congress providing for the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise from the port of first arrival to any other port in the United States.

That, however, has proved inefficacious.

Several Cuban manufacturers have settled in and near the city of Tampa and are dependent for their supply of imported tobacco on this trade, but now the merchandise must be entered and unloaded at Key West and remain there on storage until the arrival and departure of the ship following the one which carried the goods from Havana to Key West. This process not only causes delay in the delivery, but the policies of insurance have to cover transportation in two ships instead of one and a fire risk on land. Of course if the port of Tampa were a port of entry these obstructions to commerce would be removed.

This, however, is but one and comparatively a small one of the many reasons why the port of Tampa should be made a port of entry.

There are now, in addition to the tri-weekly mail steamship line, a weekly steamship line between New Orleans, Tampa, and Havana, and a semi-monthly line between Tampa and the Bahamas; but each of these lines is forced to stop at Key West, enter the vessels and cargoes, and unload and load again all dutiable merchandise destined for Tampa, and thence to the United States. This you will see is a great tax on that commerce, and there is no telling to what extent shipments are diverted on account of it.

I have had proposals from several sources to establish direct lines to Aspinwall and other Central American ports, if the port of Tampa could be made a port of entry. But all concur that the business could not be successfully conducted if the ships and steamers must go many miles out of the way to Key West and be detained there to have the cargoes inspected and the duties liquidated. A nd besides, after leaving Key West, such ships as would be suitable for the trade could not pass through the Northwest Channel near Key West, and would have to make a long detour to the west before heading for Tampa Bay.

I ask the consideration of the Committee on Commerce upon these very forcible suggestions of this petition from a man largely interested in establishing the foreign commerce between the port of Tampa and Central and South America.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, presented the petition of Mrs. Jane Dulany, of Baltimore, Md., praying for arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HALE. I present the petition of Asbury Caldwell Grand Army Post. No. 51, of Sherman, Me., praying for the passage of the so-called Edmunds-Tucker bill, touching abuses in Utah Territory. I move that the memorial lie on the table, as the subject is before the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EVARTS presented a petition of members of the bar of the city of New York, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. 8599) for the appointment of an additional circuit judge for the second circuit; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MANDERSON. I present a petition of many residents of Nebraska—several thousand of them, I think—who pray that the bill known as the Miller bill, for the suppression of contagious diseases of domestic animals, may be passed. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2624) to provide for the location and erection of a branch home for disabled volunteer soldiers west of the Rocky Mountains, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7335) granting a pension to Michael Todd, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred an amendment proposed by Mr. SHERMAN on the 10th of January to the sundry civil appropriation bill, providing for an appropriation to assist the Marietta Centennial Monumental Association, reported it favorably, and moved its reference to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3107) granting a pension to Catharine F. Ellsworth;
A bill (H. R. 8601) granting a pension to James H. Butler;
A bill (H. R. 325) granting a pension to Catharine Waters;
A bill (H. R. 9026) granting a pension to Nirius Cissel;
A bill (H. R. 9157) granting a pension to Grant E. Q. Lathermon;
A bill (H. R. 5091) to restore the name of Harvey Coburn to the pension-roll;
A bill (H. R. 8151) granting a pension to John P. McDonald; and
A bill (H. R. 10025) granting a pension to Clementine Hartinger.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, reported an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill (S. 3114) to reimburse the depositors of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company for losses incurred by the failure of said company; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 995) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 4097) for the relief of William J. Owings;
A bill (H. R. 9247) granting a pension to Mary Grimes;
A bill (H. R. 8791) granting a pension to Sally W. Rice;
A bill (H. R. 8847) for the relief of Phila Clark; and
A bill (H. R. 10082) to increase the pension of Margaret R. Jones.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1741) for the relief of William E. Bond, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. KENNA. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3039) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Great Kanawha River below the falls, and to prescribe the dimensions of the same, to report it favorably without amendment. The passage of the bill is important for the continuation of a valuable public improvement in West Virginia, and I shall in a day or two call it up and ask the Senate to dispose of it. I think there will be no objection to it anywhere.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2906) to refund certain import duties, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1429) for the relief of the North German Lloyd Steamship Company, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3220) granting a pension to Hannah R. Langdon;
A bill (S. 2248) for the relief of Adam L. Epley;
A bill (H. R. 4028) granting a pension to Samuel Sawyer;
A bill (H. R. 6523) granting a pension to Henry Roscoe;
A bill (H. R. 7327) granting a pension to Anthony McRobertson; and A bill (H. R. 9862) granting a pension to Mary Jane Magoon.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3126) to effect a re-arrangement of grades of office in the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3230) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to the trustees of the Porter Academy certain property in the city of Charleston, S. C., reported it with amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1277) to refund duties paid by the State of New York on arms imported in 1863, reported it with amendments.

ROBERT STRACHAN.

Mr. BLACKBURN. By direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia I report back the bill (S. 574) for the relief of Robert Strachan, which was amended by the House of Representatives, and the amendments were then referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. I ask the Senate to concur in the amendments which the House put upon the bill, assuring the Senate that they are simply technical and immaterial.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives, which were in section 1, after the word "employés," at the end of line 9, in section 1, to strike out "having changed the grade of New Hampshire avenue, between Sixteenth and Seventeenth streets, and;" in line 12, after the word "dwelling house," to strike out the word "and;" and in line 13, after the word "continued," to insert "by them;" so as to make the section read:

Be it enacted, &c., That jurisdiction be, and the same is hereby, conferred upon the United States Court of Claims to hear, try, and determine, according to the rules and practice now in force in said court, any claim for damage which Robert Strachan may have against the District of Columbia by reason of the said District of Columbia, or its agents, servants, or employés, having turned the water upon the premises of the said Strachan and into his dwelling-house by means of an embankment having been erected and continued by them thereon for a long time, in said District of Columbia.

The amendments were concurred in.

THE COLUMBIA RIVER.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I am instructed by the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard to submit a report, which is made in obedience to the Senate resolution adopted January 5, 1886, instructing the committee to inquire into the alleged grievances in matters relating to the subject of transportation in the great valley of the Columbia and to report as to the proper measures of relief, and also as to the importance of the speedy completion of the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River, and the means proper to be adopted to overcome the obstructions to navigation at the Dalles of the Columbia.

I am also instructed in the same connection by that committee to report an accompanying bill and recommend its passage.

The bill (S. 3252) making an appropriation for a final survey and estimates for, and the commencement of, the construction of a boat-railway around the obstructions to navigation at the Dalles and Celilo Falls in the Columbia River, was read twice by its title.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I desire to state that this report is signed by eight of the nine members of the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, and eight members of the committee approve the report and recommend the passage of the bill. It is proper that I should state that the report does not receive the approval of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, and the report will be printed.

LOUISIANA PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back the letter of the Secretary of the Interior transmitting papers pertaining to private land claims in the State of Louisiana, with a recommendation that the usual number be ordered printed, and I ask that such order may now be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska, from the Committee on Printing, moves that the usual number of the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to Senate resolution of July 26, 1886, the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office relative to private land claims in the State of Louisiana, be printed. That order will be made if there be no objection.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a bill (S. 3253) to extend the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for the services of George Morell in adjusting titles to land in Michigan;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3254) for the improvement and enlargement of the public building at Omaha, Nebr.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. PUGH introduced a bill (S. 3255) to construct a road from the city of Staunton to the national cemetery in the county of Augusta, in the State of Virginia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SEWELL introduced a bill (S. 3256) authorizing appeals from orders of the circuit courts of the United States on motions to remand in cases removed from State courts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3257) granting a pension to Elizabeth L. Cheesman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 3258) for the erection of a monument to the memory of Maj. Gen. Henry Knox, at Thomaston, Me.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. MORGAN (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3259) to encourage the holding of a national industrial exposition of the arts, mechanics, and products of the colored race throughout the United States of America, to be held in the year 1888; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. CAMERON, Mr. CULLOM, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. SAULSBURY, Mr. WILLIAMS, and Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the river and harbor bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, it was Ordered, That the papers on file in regard to the case of Electa W. Jacobs be referred to the Committee on Pensions, new evidence having been presented.

AWARDS AGAINST HAYTI.

Mr. FRYE. I ask that an order may be made to print for the use of the Senate the usual number of copies of the message of the President of the United States and the accompanying communication from the Secretary of State touching the cases known as the Pelletier case and the Lazare case against the Republic of Hayti.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the usual number be printed for the use of the Senate of the message from the President of the United States, transmitting a report of the Secretary of State, in response to a Senate resolution of December 8, 1886, upon the claims of Antonio Pelletier and others against the Republic of Hayti. That order will be made if there be no objection.

CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE BILLS.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration at this time of the resolution which I introduced on Saturday last, or move that it do so proceed, if the morning business is through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a resolution heretofore submitted by him. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. HARRIS January 29, 1887, as follows:

Resolved, That at the conclusion of the morning business for each day the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bills and joint resolutions favorably reported on the Calendar, and continue such consideration until 2 o'clock, under the provisions of Rule VIII, until the Calendar of such bills and resolutions has been completed.

Mr. INGALLS. Does that confine the attention of the Senate to bills passed by the other House? Let it be read again, please.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

The Chief Clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. INGALLS. Is the resolution up for action?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is: Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution? The motion is not debatable.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I hope that by unanimous consent we may be allowed to go on with the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee object to the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HARRIS. If the resolution is going to consume any time I shall not object to the request of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I am afraid it is, from the appearance of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS].

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Kansas has not indicated to my mind that the resolution will necessarily take time.

Mr. INGALLS. I was about to inquire whether the House of Representatives had adopted any resolution declaring that they would devote any specific and particular portion of time to the consideration of bills passed by the Senate. When that action has been taken, so that there may be an interchange of courtesies in this matter, I shall be willing to consider a proposition like that now called up by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Kansas will allow me to remark that I think the House of Representatives have established no standing rule upon the subject, but certainly it is true that the House of Representatives devoted two days in the last week to the consideration of Senate bills to the exclusion of all other business on the House Calendar.

Mr. ALLISON. I think——

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire if this discussion is in order. Is an allusion to what the other branch is doing in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. ALLISON. No debate is in order, I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The whole debate is out of order.

Mr. DAWES. This kind of debate is so strange, it seems to me well to have a ruling of the Chair.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will possess his soul in patience and advise himself about the condition of the rules. This idea that there is some divinity that doth hedge about the House of Representatives so that nobody can mention it without getting down on his knees, or in some way make a gesture of homage and obeisance, is a superstition that ought to be abandoned. The rules provide that particular acts or particular votes or particular speeches of members of the House of Representatives shall not be alluded to in the Senate, because it might provoke a breach of order; but that we are forbidden to mention the existence of a correlative branch of Congress appears to me to be a relic of the dark ages, and it ought to be abandoned.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts will proceed if there be no objection. The Chair must again remind Senators that debate is out of order on the pending motion.

Mr. DAWES. There is a sense of propriety and decency which ought to govern us, however strange it may seem to some Senators. It was because it was out of order to refer to particular acts and what the other branch was doing, that led me to make the suggestion. I regret that it did not commend itself to that sense of propriety which so governs the Senator from Kansas always.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask consent——

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for a vote on my motion, and if the Senate shall decide to consider the resolution and it leads to debate, I will consent to the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution heretofore submitted by the Senator from Tennessee. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall not insist upon a division, in view of the anxiety of the Senate to proceed with the appropriation bill, but I give notice that I shall to-morrow again ask the Senate to consider the resolution.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1365, to insert:

Yellowstone National Park:

For every purpose and object necessary for the protection, preservation, and improvement of the Yellowstone National Park, including compensation of superintendent and employés, $40,000; $2,000 of said amount to be paid to a superintendent of said park, and not exceeding $900 to each of ten assistants, all of whom shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior and reside continuously in the park, and whose duty it shall be to protect the game, timber, and objects of interest therein; the balance of the sum appropriated to be expended in the construction and improvement of suitable roads and bridges in said park, under the supervision and direction of an engineer officer detailed by the Secretary of War for that duty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1391, after the words "estimates for," to strike out "all moneys wanted by;" and in line 1392, after the word "itemized," to insert "as far as may be practicable;" so as to make the clause read:

United States Geological Survey:

For the United States Geological Survey: For the Geological Survey, and the classification of the public lands, and examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and products of the national domain, and to continue the preparation of a geological map of the United States, including the pay of temporary employés in the field and office, and all other necessary expenses, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $400,000; and hereafter the estimates for the Geological Survey shall be itemized, as far as may be practicable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1416, to insert:

For the preparation from material on hand of volume 3, book 2, of the final report of the United States Geological Survey of the Territories, the publication of the same having been ordered by Congress, $3,800, to be expended in preparing, drawing, and writing the same, said work to be done by Prof. E. D. Cope, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Government Hospital for the Insane," after line 1449, to insert:

For additional accommodations for the colored insane, $17,000.
For rebuilding wharf, $3,500, to be immediately available.
For cottage at the cemetery, $900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1460, after the word "improvements," to strike out "fifty-two thousand five hundred" and insert "fifty-five thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Current expenses of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb: For support of the institution, including salaries and incidental expenses, and for books and illustrative apparatus, for general repairs, and improvements, $55,000: Provided, That no more than $25,000 of said sum shall be expended for salaries and wages.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1463, to insert:

For the improvement of the grounds, including pavements near the new buildings for the Kendall School and the laboratory and shop-buildings, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Freedmen's Hospital and Asylum," in line 1486, after the word "surgeon-in-chief," to insert "not to exceed $3,000;" in line 1495, after the word "dollars," to insert "for painting inside of hospital wards, four hundred dollars;" so as to read:

For subsistence, $22,000; for salaries and compensation of the surgeon-in-chief, not to exceed $3,000, two assistant surgeons, clerk, engineer, matron, nurses, laundresses, cooks, teamsters, watchmen, and laborers, $14,000; for rent of hospital buildings and grounds, $4,000; for fuel and light, clothing, bedding, forage, transportation, medicines and medical supplies, repairs and furniture, and other absolutely necessary expenses, $10,500; one centrifugal wringer, $240; for painting inside of hospital wards, $400.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to add after the amendment just adopted the words "to be immediately available."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to add, also, to that clause:

For purchase of horse, $200, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1496, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for "Freedmen's hospital and asylum" from $50,740 to $51,140.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, I move to add $200 to that amount, so as to make the total $51,340.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1497, to insert:

EDUCATION IN ALASKA.

For the education of the children of school age in the Territory of Alaska, without reference to race, $15,000.

Mr. TELLER. I move to amend that amendment by striking out "fifteen" and inserting "twenty-five."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the item for "National Museum," in line 1505, to increase the appropriation "for expense of heating, lighting, and electrical and telephonic service for the National Museum," from $11,000 to $13,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1512, in the clause making appropriations for "preservation of collections of the National Museum," to increase the appropriation from $106,500 to $116,000 "for the preservation, exhibition, and increase of the collections from the surveying and exploring expeditions of the Government, and from other sources, including salaries or compensation of all necessary employés."

The next amendment was, in the appropriations "under the War Department" for "armories and arsenals," in line 1533, to increase the appropriation "for replacing wooden beams on Rock Island wagon-bridge (between the island and the city of Rock Island) by iron ones, reflooring wagon-road and sidewalks, and painting," from $5,000 to $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for Rock Island bridge, after line 1548, to insert:

For renewing tracks with steel rollers at end of each span; wagon-road, sidewalks, floor-beams, and stringers for supporting railroad track, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Springfield arsenal, Springfield, Mass.," after line 1555, to insert:

For the erection of a new fire-proof milling-shop, in addition to the amount ($30,000) appropriated by the sundry civil act approved August 4, 1886, $20,439.88.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "testing machine, Watertown arsenal," to strike out lines 1581 and 1582, in the following words:

For purchasing machine to test small specimens, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "buildings and grounds in and around Washington," to strike out the clause from line 1606 to line 1608, inclusive, as follows:

For construction and repair of post and chain fences, removal and repair of high iron fences around smaller triangular reservations, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1638, after the word "than," to strike out "$1.75" and insert "$2;" in line 1639, after the word "best," to strike out "heretofore;" and in line 1640, after the word "Columbia," to insert "prior to July 1, 1876, and with a base of not less than 6 inches in thickness;" so as to make the clause read:

That under appropriations herein contained no contract shall be made for making or repairing concrete or asphalt pavements in Washington city at a higher price than $2 per square yard for a quality equal to the best laid in the District of Columbia prior to July 1, 1876, and with a base of not less than 6 inches in thickness.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I think in line 1641 the date should be 1886 instead of 1876. I think that is a mistake in the print. It should read "prior to July 1, 1886."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That seems to change the whole substance.

Mr. ALLISON. I know it changes the whole substance, but prior to last year we had a provision of this character in the District of Columbia bill and the sundry civil bill, and I understand they have been putting down some inferior pavements since. We desire that this should be confined to pavements constructed before this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The change will be made if there is no objection. The Chair hears none, and the correction will be made.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the words "gas-fitters and," at the end of line 1656, to strike out "laborers," and insert "plumbers;" so as to read:

Lighting the Executive Mansion and public grounds: For gas, pay of lamplighters, gas-fitters, and plumbers; purchase, erection, and repair of lamps and lamp-posts; purchase of matches, and for repairs of all kinds; fuel and light for office, office-stables, watchmen's lodges, and for the greenhouses at the nursery, $14,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "Washington Monument," after line 1689, to insert:

For the expenses of running the elevator in said Monument, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1691, to insert:

Building for Army Medical Museum and Library: For brick annex to main building, for laboratory and anatomical work, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "military posts," to strike out the following clause from line 1701 to line 1706, inclusive:

Protection and improvement of the Yellowstone National Park: For the construction and improvement of suitable roads and bridges within the park, under the supervision and direction of an engineer officer detailed by the Secretary of War for that purpose, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Signal Service," after the word "therewith," at the end of line 1715, to insert "including those already issued and to be issued to voluntary unpaid observers, and the Secretary of War shall establish regulations respecting such issue;" so as to make the clause read:

For the manufacture, purchase, and repair of meteorological instruments, and expenses in connection therewith, including those already issued and to be issued to voluntary unpaid observers, and the Secretary of War shall establish regulations respecting such issue, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1721, to increase the appropriation "for telegraphing reports, messages, and other meteorological information in connection with the observation and report of storms," from $125,000 to $138,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1737, to increase from $35,000 to $40,000 the appropriation "for rent, hire of civilian employés, furniture, light, stationery, ice, stoves and fixtures, repairs, rent of telephones, text-books, lumber, and other expenses of offices maintained as stations of observation outside of Washington, D. C."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1762, to insert:

For the repair of the Signal Service cable at the mouth of the Columbia River, in Oregon and Washington Territory, $500.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the committee if $500 will amount to anything, and whether $5,000 should not be the amount of this appropriation?

Mr. ALLISON. Five hundred dollars is the amount of the estimate. This cable, as we understand, was broken last August and they have been making some attempts to raise it and repair it. I believe they have not yet succeeded; but when it is raised it will cost about $500 to repair it—over $400. We thought we would give them an ample sum.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I think the Senator is wrong in this matter. The estimate, I understand, is $5,000.

Mr. ALLISON. That is an estimate for the construction of a new cable.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I ask the chairman to pass over this amendment until I can look at the papers.

Mr. ALLISON. Before doing so, I will say there was an estimate for a new cable; but the committee saw no difficulty in raising the old cable. It can not be possible that the cable is so submerged that it can not be reached.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over for the present.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to passing it over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1765, to insert:

For the construction and maintenance of a military telegraph line from San Francisco, California, to a point at or near Point Reyes, California, via Point San José, California, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1774, after the word "pay," to strike out "four thousand six hundred and eighty," and insert "five thousand one hundred and forty;" so as to read:

For pay of one brigadier-general and sixteen second lieutenants, $29,500; for longevity pay to officers of the Signal Corps, to be paid with current monthly pay, $5,140.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the first proviso to the same clause, in line 1781, after the words "disbursing this," to strike out "sum" and insert "amount;" in line 1782, after the word "paid," to insert "to an officer;" in line 1784, after the word "thereto," to insert "upon the officer's certificate that it was not practicable to obtain transportation from the Quartermaster's Department;" in line 1787, after the word "paid," to insert "by the officer over said route or routes," and in line 1788, after the word "fare," to insert "and transfers;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That in disbursing this amount the maximum sum to be allowed and paid to an officer shall be 4 cents per mile, distance to be computed over the shortest usual traveled routes, and, in addition thereto, upon the officer's certificate that it was not practicable to obtain transportion from the Quartermaster's Department, the cost of transportation actually paid by the officer over said route or routes, exclusive of sleeping or parlor-car fare and transfers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 1788, after the word "transfers," to insert:

And provided further, That when any officer so traveling shall travel in whole or in part on any railroad on which the troops and supplies of the United States are entitled to be transported free of charge, he shall be allowed for himself only 4 cents per mile as a subsistence fund for every mile necessarily traveled over any such last-named railroad.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 1797, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for pay of officers and men of the Signal Service from $223,680 to $224,140.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "subsistence" for the Signal Service, in line 1822, to increase the amount of the appropriation from $148,000 to $151,243.75 "for commutation of rations of not exceeding four hundred and seventy Signal Service enlisted men of the Signal Corps, and for sales of subsistence stores to officers and enlisted men of said corps, as authorized by section 1144 of the Revised Statutes, and paragraph 2199 of the Army Regulations, 1881."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1838, to increase the appropriation "for commutation of fuel for not exceeding four hundred and seventy enlisted men of the Signal Corps on duty at the office of the Chief Signal Officer and at signal stations throughout the United States" from $45,000 to $47,760.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "transportation" for the Signal Corps, in line 1882, to increase the appropriation "for transportation of men" from $6,000 to $8,000.

The amendment was, agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1890, to increase the appropriation "for commutation of quarters to not exceeding four hundred and seventy enlisted men of the Signal Corps on duty at office of the Chief Signal Officer and at signal stations throughout the United States" from $84,000 to $85,440.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "national cemeteries," in line 1915, after the date "1879," to strike out "and for supplying headstones for unmarked graves of soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Revolution, war of 1812, Mexican, and other wars, not heretofore provided for, twenty," and insert "ten;" so as to make the clause read:

Headstones for graves of soldiers: For continuing the work of furnishing headstones for unmarked graves of Union soldiers, sailors, and marines in national, post, city, town, and village cemeteries, naval cemeteries at navy-yards and stations of the United States, and other burial places, under the acts of March 3, 1873, and February 3, 1879, $10,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that amendment should be modified by inserting "fifteen" instead of "ten" in line 1918.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves to amend the amendment by striking out "ten" and inserting "fifteen;" so as to make the appropriation $15,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1921, after the word "for," to strike out "maintaining" and insert "repairing;" so as to read:

Maintenance of roadways to national cemeteries: For repairing the roadways to national cemeteries which have been constructed by special authority of Congress, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1927, to insert:

Monuments or tablets in Gettysburg Cemetery: For the erection of monuments or memorial tablets for the proper marking of the position of each of the commands of the Regular Army engaged at Gettysburg, $20,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1933, to insert:

Confederate cemeteries near Columbus, Ohio: For the erection of suitable fences around the cemeteries in which Confederate dead are buried near Columbus and on Johnson's Island, Ohio, and for putting the grounds in good condition, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1964, after the word "therefor," to strike out "seven thousand five hundred" and insert "ten thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Garfield Hospital: For support and care of transient persons unable to pay therefor, $10,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to change the phraseology of that paragraph, to insert in lieu of the whole paragraph:

Garfield Memorial Hospital: For aid to enable it to provide medical and surgical treatment to persons unable to pay therefor, $10,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1986, to insert:

Yorktown Monument: For the erection of a cottage for use of watchman at Yorktown Monument, $1,000.

Mr. MANDERSON. I call the attention of the Senator from Iowa, in charge of this bill, to an amendment proposed by way of a substitute for the language of the Committee on Appropriations. I ask that the proposed amendment be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That so much of the unexpended balance ($5,176.74) of the appropriation of $100,000 in the act of June 7, 1880 (21 Statutes, page 163), for the erection of a monument at Yorktown, Va., as may be necessary therefor, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, may be applied to the building or purchase of a plain, substantial dwelling for the keeper of said monument, and for the care of the same after construction, and of the grounds around the monument: Provided, That the total cost of said building, tool and wood house, &c., shall not exceed the sum of $2,500, and of the balance thereafter remaining not more than $200 shall be expended in any one year in the care of the grounds, buildings, &c., pertaining to said monument.

Mr. MANDERSON. This is the amendment as proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs, and it is the desire of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE], not now in his seat, that it should be offered as a substitute for this amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. I am willing this paragraph shall be passed over for the present, but I will say that the Committee on Appropriations considered very fully the amendment just read. There is no unexpended balance. The balance remaining of the money appropriated for this Yorktown affair was covered into the Treasury some time ago. Of course the money appropriated was not all expended. It seems that there ought to be some cottage or place there for the keeper or guardian of this monument, but it is proposed by the amendment just read to either purchase or erect a house, costing $2,500. The Committee on Appropriations, after considering it, thought that for a thousand dollars a very fair cottage could be placed there for the home of the keeper.

Mr. MANDERSON. I make this suggestion in the absence of the Senator from Virginia, who is interested in the subject matter, that the vote on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations and the substitute proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs be passed over until his return.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. HAMPTON. I ask permission of the Senator from Iowa to recur to page 73, line 1763, to the item—which was passed over informally.

For the repair of the Signal Service cable at the mouth of the Columbia River, in Oregon and Washington Territory, $500.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was passed over informally.

Mr. HAMPTON. I ask that that matter be called up, as I was directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to make a favorable report upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. I submitted it to the Secretary of War, and I ask that the papers which I send to the Chair may be read, for upon them the action of the Committee on Military Affairs was based. The Secretary of War and the Signal Officer say that in all probability it will be necessary to build a new cable, and I ask that these papers may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina asks that the Senate go back to the consideration of this item.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to going back now, as the question ought to be disposed of at some time, if the Senator from Oregon is also ready.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I am ready.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be considered before the Senate, and will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 73, after line 1762, the Committee on Appropriations propose to insert:

For the repair of the Signal Service cable at the mouth of the Columbia River, in Oregon and Washington Territory, $500.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina submit an amendment to this amendment?

Mr. HAMPTON. In accordance with the suggestion of the Secretary of War, after the word "repair," I move to insert "or renewal." That amendment has not yet been offered by the Senator from Oregon, and I shall move that the Senate consider it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Committee on Appropriations being now under consideration, it is open to amendment.

Mr. HAMPTON. Well, I move to insert the words "or renewal," after the word "repair," in line 1763.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. And to increase the amount in line 1765 from $500 to $5,000.

Mr. HAMPTON. I suppose that would follow. In accordance with the instructions of the Military Committee, I move to substitute $5,000 for $500, in line 1765.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "repair," in line 1763, it is proposed to insert "or renewal;" and in line 1765 to strike out "five hundred" and insert "five thousand;" so as to read:

For the repair or renewal of the Signal Service cable at the mouth of the Columbia River, in Oregon and Washington Territory, $5,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope this amendment will not be agreed to. As a matter of course, if this amendment prevails, making the amount $5,000, no further effort will be made to raise the present cable, but they will go on to build a new one. This item really ought to have gone in the deficiency bill, because whatever there is about it is a deficiency estimate within the year. If the Senator from Oregon is content to allow this item to be struck out and take his chances when we come to consider the deficiency bill, I have no objection; but why we should now appropriate $5,000 for the construction of a new cable when this cable was only broken last August, and when there was no evidence before the Committee on Appropriations that it was not perfectly practicable to raise it——

Mr. HALE. It is not an old cable.

Mr. ALLISON. No, it is not an old cable. Why should we appropriate $5,000 to construct a new cable, when this cable can easily be raised by proper effort, and done for $400?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The answer to the whole speech of the chairman of the committee is to be found in the papers from the War Department, submitted by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON], in which it is stated that an effort has been made to raise this cable, and that it is not at all probable that it ever can be raised with any amount, and that in all probability a new cable will have to be constructed. I ask that the papers submitted by the Senator from South Carolina, who reported this amendment from the Committee on Military Affairs, be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, January 25, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 18th instant requesting information touching the subject-matter of a proposed amendment to House bill 10072 (sundry civil bill), to provide for an appropriation of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to repair the Signal-Service cable at the mouth of the Columbia River, in Oregon and Washington Territory, and in reply to invite attention to the inclosed copy of a report of the 21st instant from the Acting Chief Signal Officer of the Army, which will, it is believed, afford the desired information.

It will be observed that the Acting Chief Signal Officer suggests that, as an entirely new cable will in all probability be required, the words "or renew, as may be found necessary," should be inserted in the amendment after the word "repair," in order to place the complete restoration of the cable beyond all doubt.

The copy of the amendment inclosed by you is herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. V. BENÉT,
Brig. Gen., Chief of Ordnance, and Acting Secretary of War.

Hon. JOSEPH R. HAWLEY,
Acting Chairman of Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate.

SIGNAL OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 21, 1887.

Respectfully returned to the honorable Secretary of War with the following report, submitted for his consideration:

The cable in question failed on July 31, 1886, presumably from having been damaged by a ship's anchor. Two attempts were made to recover it, but being deeply inbedded in the sand the cable could not be raised. A deficiency estimate of $5,000 was then submitted for furnishing and laying a new cable, which is now before Congress. (See Executive Document No. 45, current session.)

The great importance of this cable to commercial and other interests can not be questioned, and is evidenced by the urgent appeals from the Portland (Oregon) Board of Trade and the Astoria (Oregon) Chamber of Commerce, for its speedy repair or renewal.

The favorable action of Congress on either the deficiency estimate mentioned, or the proposed amendment, is therefore strongly recommended; but as the success of any further attempt to raise and repair the old cable is more than doubtful, and as an entirely new cable will in all probability be required, the words "or renew, as may be found necessary," should be inserted in the amendment after the word "repair," in order to place the complete restoration of the cable beyond all doubt.

The Treasury Department has authorized the use of the light-house tender Manzanita in making another attempt at recovering the cable, if the tender can be spared for that purpose, but it is not expected that under the most favorable conditions more than a small portion of the old cable can be raised.

This office does not desire to ask for more than is absolutely necessary to restore communication over the cable, and any proviso attached to the amendment limiting the power to expend the money to be appropriated will be satisfactory to it.

A. W. GREELY,
Capt. Fifth Cavalry, A. S. O. and Asst., Acting Chief Signal Officer, U. S. A.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. It is quite immaterial to me whether this item is put on the sundry civil bill or on the deficiency bill; but it is evident from these papers from the War Department that this cable can never be raised. Two attempts have already been made to raise the cable, according to this report from the War Department, and both of them have been unsuccessful.

The Department states furthermore that in all probability a new cable will have to be constructed, and that its cost will not be in proportion much beyond what the old cable can in any event be raised for, and an estimate has been submitted in the sum of $5,000 for that purpose. Of course if it is not all used, it will not be wasted.

Now I wish to say one further word. This is a matter of a good deal of importance commercially to that section of the country. The boards of trade at Portland, Oreg., and at Astoria, Oreg., have resolved in regard to this matter, and written letters calling on their Senators and their Representatives to see to it that an appropriation is secured for the purpose of raising this cable or having a new one constructed. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will consent to allow this appropriation to go on this bill, inasmuch as I introduced the amendment and had it referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I also introduced another amendment and referred it to the Committee on Military Affairs, and that committee has reported in favor of appropriating $5,000 for this purpose. I think the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations ought to abandon any objection he may have had. I do not think he has looked into it very fully. I hope he will permit it to go on this bill.

Mr. BECK. There is nothing new in those papers as far as I could catch the reading of them.

Mr. ALLISON. Nothing at all.

Mr. BECK. Nothing beyond what was shown to us in the subcommittee on this matter.

The importance of a cable at this point is obvious; but it was apparent to my mind, and I think apparent to minds of the committee, when we heard the gentlemen in charge, that what they call efforts have been very feeble efforts to endeavor to repair this cable. We were told that they expected to get a ship from some other quarter provided it could be spared to make another attempt. The whole of it is that no earnest, honest effort has been made to restore the cable at all.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I wish to ask the Senator from Kentucky a question.

Mr. BECK. I am only telling the impression made on my mind. If $400 would repair the cable and we gave them $500, my idea was that they ought to be required to make an effort to repair it. It is so much more convenient, so much more in accordance with the style and dignity of the United States when a ship's anchor drops on a cable in a strait 2½ miles wide and breaks it, instead of feeling for the ends of the cable at points where the cable is broken, to just construct a new cable, that of course the proposition must be made. They do not know whether the ends of the old cable are in sand; but it is a little unpleasant job to be fishing around for and pulling up an old thing, and it is not quite worthy of the dignity of the United States, and $5,000 does not matter to the United States.

We intended to make an honest effort to have the old cable repaired. It can be done beyond all question, and any business man would take a contract to find where the ship's anchor is that broke the cable and restore it for $500. There is a proposition to put down a cable in the bay of San Francisco, where it is deemed desirable to reach a point 35 miles north of the Golden Gate. It is more stylish to make everything grand; but there is no sense in giving $5,000 now for a new cable here, for if you do that no effort will ever be made to repair the old cable. If they can not repair it I will vote $5,000, or if necessary $10,000; but I do want an effort made to repair the old cable and take it up, as I believe it can be done, before we give them money for a new one, because if we give them more money for a new cable there will be no attempt to raise the old.

Mr. HAMPTON. May I ask the Senator from Kentucky a question in regard to that?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMPTON. Would he not regard the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon as the preferable course? Under that a new cable is not appropriated for if they can restore the old cable. I want to say while I am up that of course I had no information on this subject except what was given me by the Secretary of War and the Chief Signal Officer. The Military Committee referred this amendment to the War Department. We had these papers laid before us in regard to an appropriation of $5,000, recommending it in the strongest possible language, and the committee unanimously instructed me to report the amendment back favorably. I knew nothing more about it. I was not aware that the matter had ever been submitted to the Committee on Appropriations, and I was merely the organ of the Military Committee in reporting, in accordance with the recommendations of the War Department, this appropriation.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from South Carolina is entirely right in saying that a cable ought to be there. Commerce requires it. After we examined the officers with some care the committee became convinced that they ought to make a more earnest effort than they have yet done to repair the old cable. I believe, also, that the very moment we give them this $5,000 that is the end of all effort in that direction.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The evidence was before the Committee on Appropriations as to the character of the effort that was made to raise this cable.

Mr. BECK. It was because they could not give us any assurance that they had made any honest, earnest effort at all to recover the old cable that the sum of $500 only was proposed to be appropriated. They had grappled down, and they did not know anything except that there was a good deal of sand over the ends of the cable. They did not even know, as they advised us, that this was true, not having found the point where it was damaged, because such a slight investigation had been made. If it was damaged at a point in the bay where ships anchor, there was probably no sand over it, and the two ends might be taken up and repaired, and a good cable made of it again, notwithstanding the ends were covered with sand. It was because of the absolute want of knowledge on their part, for the want of any effort that they have made, that we reported the amendment in the form we did. If they had told us anything to induce us to believe that a new cable was indispensably necessary they would have readily got the $5,000.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. All I know about it is that the old cable is useless. It is disabled; it can not be used at all for the purpose for which it was intended. I know furthermore that the War Department, whose business it is to look after this cable, reports to the Military Committee, the proper committee of the Senate to investigate the subject, that two efforts have been made to raise the cable, and they have been unsuccessful. I know further, that that same Department reports that in all probability the cable never can be raised, and that in any event only a very small proportion of the cable can be raised.

The Military Committee of the Senate has considered the matter and reported unanimously in favor of an appropriation necessary to renew the cable in case it can not be raised, and yet the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, simply upon their surmise that the effort which has been made has not been an honest one, and not that character of effort that should have been made, brush aside the reports of the War Department and the Military Committee and they say, "No, we will appropriate only $500."

Mr. President, it seems to me that that is hardly fair, to say the least, in view of these reports. The Appropriations Committee, in my judgment, has nothing to stand on here so far as repudiating the report of the War Department and of the Military Committee is concerned.

We are at a little disadvantage on the Pacific coast. I believe there is not a member of the Committee on Appropriations west of the Rocky Mountains, and has not been for years, and we have to take what we can get and do the best we can. It seems to me that when we present a good case, as I think we have done in this instance, and the matter is not a large one, for not a very large appropriation is asked here, there ought not to be such opposition to it on the part of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. HAMPTON. I would suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, as I have also to the Senator from Kentucky, that there might be some further amendment made to carry out the views of the committee as well as those of the Senator from Oregon, by putting in a provision appropriating $500 for what the Senator from Kentucky calls an earnest effort to repair the present cable, and if it is found impracticable then to authorize the use of $4,500 in addition to make a new cable, because in case they are not able to repair and use the old cable of course they will be without the use of any cable at all until the next meeting of Congress. I think that will cover the whole ground.

Mr. BECK. There is a good deal in that suggestion.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I of course care nothing about this matter for the Committee on Appropriations, but the Senator from Oregon is slightly in error when he assumes that the Committee on Appropriations have made no investigation of this question. I think the investigation was quite as thorough as if the Senator from Oregon had been on the committee. We not only had every document that has been presented here, but having those documents and having the amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs referred to our committee, and it being the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to make examination of such amendments, we sent for Captain Greely, who is the foundation of all this statement and machinery that is built up here from the War Department, and asked him the basis of these statements, and he stated to us, I believe, that a couple of local vessels had endeavored once or twice to grapple with this cable, but that now they were trying to get a Government vessel there to undertake to grapple with the cable in earnest. I do not believe there was a member of the Committee on Appropriations who had a single doubt of the fact that if an earnest effort was made by a proper vessel to recover this cable it could be recovered. So whatever was done by the Committee on Appropriations was not done without examination and without knowledge. It was done after the fullest examination, and having every document and paper referred to us by the Military Committee, and a personal examination of the foundation of all these statements.

Now, I undertake to say after all the facts have been disclosed, that there has been no serious effort made to recover this cable. I do not care whether you appropriate for a new cable or for recovering the old, for it is a matter of no moment, but I am perfectly willing to submit to a provision here for the laying of a new cable if it shall turn out that this cable can not be recovered.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. That is all we ask.

Mr. ALLISON. Now let me say one word further. This cable was originally laid as a military cable. It is laid at the mouth of the Columbia River. It is laid at the mouth of a river that has an immense commerce, a river that we are expending nearly a half a million dollars per annum in improving. It is a commercial cable; and when you come strictly to the question of who should build this cable or repair it, the Government of the United States is under no more obligation to build a cable across this Columbia River than it is across the mouth of Sandy Hook; but the Government having originally laid this cable seems to be willing to undertake to continue to keep it in repair. When this cable was first erected it was part of a long connecting line; now it is used by telegraph companies chiefly, but it is also used for purposes connected with Signal Service and for the military posts in that neighborhood. The Committee on Appropriations were quite willing to allow this cable to be repaired at public expense.

If there is a new cable to be built, it should be a much larger cable; and it would be a much larger cable for the benefit of the growing commerce there. But when you get down to the real facts in this case, they are that the people who are interested in this matter of a cable want a larger cable than the one that was there, and one that can be grappled and taken up. So when the Senator from Oregon suggests that the Committee on Appropriations have made no investigation of this subject, I want the Senator to understand that the Committee on Appropriations have looked into it, and understand it thoroughly.

We have a similar application for the building of a new cable at the Golden Gate, coming with the same recommendation from precisely the same sources. There is already at the expense of a telegraph company—I do not know what one—a cable across the Golden Gate. Why should the Government build another there merely for the purposes of the Signal Service when it can use that cable at a mere nominal charge, and when it is paying the telegraph companies under these same Signal Service appropriations more than $150,000 per annum? And yet the Government itself is called upon to build these cables.

The same thing that has destroyed this cable may destroy the one that is built in the next year. A ship's anchor has broken this cable at the mouth of the Columbia River. We all know that these cables are dangerous, for that reason, across the mouths of rivers; and yet this proposition to build a new cable is to make the Government perpetually responsible for the building of a cable across the mouth of the Columbia River at the Government expense for the use of all the private telegraph companies that may in the future come to use this cable.

When it comes to the question of what we should do or what we should not do, I think it is perfectly clear that when we come to the matter of laying a new cable we should have some further information before we appropriate $5,000, and we should know whether this is for the exclusive use of the Signal Service or whether, under the guise of a military cable, we are not appropriating money for the purposes of a commercial cable company, or a large telegraph company that may have interests here far beyond the interests of the Government.

That is the reason the Committee on Appropriations hesitated without further inquiry and without further suggestion, when Captain Greely himself, who was the father of all these communications read here, was not able to say on personal inquiry and examination that any sincere effort had been made to raise this cable.

Mr. BECK. We had the same thing passed on us at San Francisco Bay.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, and we left both of them out, because we desired to have some understanding for whose benefit these cables are to be laid.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10912) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also requested the Senate to furnish the House with a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes, the original copy having been lost or mislaid.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 222) to amend section 1661 of the Revised Statutes, making an annual appropriation to provide arms and equipments for the militia; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. DOLPH. I wish the Senator from Iowa would give way to me for a moment, to allow me to call up a communication just received from the House of Representatives in regard to the bill forfeiting the Northern Pacific land grant.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 1, 1887.

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to furnish the House with a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes, the original copy having been lost or mislaid.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the request of the House of Representatives.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to have some information as to what has been done by the conference committee, and when it was discovered that this bill had been lost. The bill has been in conference for some time. Indeed, the conference committees were appointed at the last session. I should like to know something about it, having been a member of the committee myself.

Mr. INGALLS. Is it alleged that an engrossed copy of a bill that has passed both Houses has disappeared absolutely and no trace of it can be found?

Mr. DOLPH. For the Senator's information I ask for the reading of the message.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message will be again read.

The message from the House of Representatives was again read.

Mr. INGALLS. That presents a very singular and novel question. I think that had better lie over.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator from Missouri has called for some statement in regard to the matter, and I recognize the propriety of such a statement. I, however, am not quite certain how far I am at liberty to state what has transpired between the managers on the part of the Senate and the managers on the part of the House. I should like to submit a question as to whether correspondence in regard to the loss of a bill or the possession of a bill is considered a matter proper to be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not advised of any special rule on the subject. The Senator can exercise his discretion.

Mr. DOLPH. That being the case, I will ask the Secretary to read——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If objection is made to the consideration of the resolution at this time, the Chair is of opinion that it must go over under the rules.

Mr. DOLPH. I would ask the Senator to yield to me to make the statement I desire to make at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas object?

Mr. INGALLS. I do not object to any statement being made; but I said the situation was novel and unprecedented and we ought not to act in haste in the matter. I therefore asked that the resolution might go over under the rules in order that we might deliberate about it.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask the Senator to withdraw his objection until he hears a statement.

Mr. INGALLS. I withdraw it for that purpose.

Mr. DOLPH. That being the case, I ask the Secretary to read a copy of a communication transmitted yesterday by the managers on the part of the Senate to the managers on the part of the House on the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the House amendment to Senate bill 2172, a communication dated 29th January, 1887, and which has undoubtedly produced the action of the House now under consideration. I ask for the reading of the communication.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 29, 1887.

Messrs. COBB, VAN EATON, and PAYSON, managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses on the House amendment to Senate bill 2172:

GENTLEMEN: We again call your attention to the matter of the conference on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses on the House amendment to Senate bill 2172, a bill restoring to the United States certain lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and for other purposes.

The record shows that the House passed the bill with an amendment July 27, 1886, and, on motion of Mr. PAYSON, it was ordered that the House insist on said amendment and ask a conference with the Senate thereon (House Journal, page 2364); that on July 28, the Speaker appointed Messrs. COBB, VAN EATON, and PAYSON as managers on the part of the House (see House Journal, page 2378); that the Senate was notified on the same day that the House of Representatives had passed said bill with an amendment, and requested a conference with the Senate on the bill and the amendment, and had appointed Messrs. COBB, VAN EATON, and FISHER as managers of the same on its part (see Senate Journal, page 1191); that on the next day, July 29, 1886, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, and on motion of Mr. DOLPH, it was

Resolved, That the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the said bill and agree to the conference asked by the House on the said bill and amendment (see Senate Journal, page 1199).

And that on July 30, 1886, Messrs. DOLPH, TELLER, and COCKRELL were appointed managers on the part of the Senate; and it was ordered that the Secretary notify the House of Representatives thereof (see Senate Journal, page 1204). Thereupon the papers were transmitted to the House (see message from the Senate by Mr. Sympson, one of their clerks, page 2450, House Journal.)

There appears (if its printed journals are correct) to have been a mistake in the message from the House in naming Mr. FISHER, instead of Mr. PAYSON, as one of the managers on the part of the House, and in the message from the Senate, which, so far as it relates to bill 2172, is to the effect that the Senate had disagreed to amendment of the House, asked a conference, and had appointed conferees. No further action appears to have been taken in the House, however, and the errors probably were not noticed, and it is quite possible that both are typographical errors.

Just before the close of the session, and as soon as it could be arranged for, a meeting of the conference committee upon the bill and amendment in question was held, when, it being supposed that an agreement was impossible during the brief remaining hours of the session, it was determined without much discussion to report to the two Houses that the committee were unable to agree and to ask for a further conference. Duplicate reports were accordingly prepared by the clerk of the Senate Committee on Public Lands, and signed by the managers on the part of both Houses on the same or the succeeding day, and one copy of the report was retained by the managers upon the part of the House, and the other by the managers upon the part of the Senate. The chairman of the Senate conferees upon the same day the report was signed undertook to submit it to the Senate, but it was not received for the reason that the papers were not in the possession of the Senate. The managers upon the part of the Senate being under the impression that the House was entitled to retain the bill, and that the report should and would be first made in that body, awaited its action.

No message having been received from the House announcing action upon the report, the Senate managers, through Mr. DOLPH, early in the present session, called the attention of the managers on the part of the House to the matter, and requested that the report should be submitted and the Senate notified. Later, being advised that if the papers should be transmitted to the managers on the part of the Senate, the report could be first submitted in that body, shortly after the holiday recess Mr. DOLPH applied to Mr. COBB for the possession of the papers, and was informed by Mr. COBB that he did not have the bill in his possession at the time of the conference; and also that he had mislaid the copy of the conference report delivered to the House conferees. Mr. COBB requested to be furnished with a duplicate of the one in the possession of the managers upon the part of the Senate. The duplicate copy of the report was accordingly prepared by the clerk of the Senate Committee on Public Lands, signed by the managers on the part of the Senate and furnished to Mr. COBB on the 11th instant, accompanied by a letter from the clerk of the Senate Committee on Public Lands, requesting on behalf of the Senate conferees possession of the bill. On the 12th instant a letter was received from Mr. COBB, acknowledging the receipt of the duplicate report, and containing the following statement:

"In regard to the bill S. 2172 (the Northern Pacific Railroad land-grant forfeiture bill), I have not got it in my possession, and have not had it since I reported it to the House from my committee at the last session." Upon inquiry at the Clerk's desk in the House it was ascertained that the bill could not be found. Thereupon Mr. DOLPH requested Mr. COBB to take the necessary steps to substitute a copy of the bill in the usual manner, and on the 13th instant addressed to him a letter renewing the request in writing, and inclosing the form of an order prepared by one of the Senate clerks, which it was supposed would answer the purpose.

It was understood then that the matter would receive due attention without delay. Since then the managers upon the part of the Senate, through Mr. DOLPH, have repeatedly called attention to the subject and requested immediate steps to be taken to find the bill or to substitute a copy for it. But so far as we have learned no action has yet been had. Mr. COBB's recollection that he did not have the bill at the time of the conference is no doubt correct, as the bill was not produced at the time, and the committee erred in proceeding until that was done.

The session is drawing to a close. In our judgment it is important that an agreement should be reached by the conference committee; at all events an effort in good faith on both sides to reach an agreement should at once be made. We therefore request that as the House was last in possession of the bill, and therefore action for the purpose of substituting a copy, if it can not be found, must originate there, that you cause whatever may be necessary in the premises to be done at once in order that a report of the committee can be submitted and a further conference be had.

Respectfully, yours,

J. N. DOLPH,
H. M. TELLER,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that that be informally laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the unfinished business will be laid aside informally to proceed with the consideration of the sundry civil bill. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. DOLPH. I now submit a copy of a letter addressed by the clerk of the Senate Committee on Public Lands, by the direction of the Senate conferees, to Mr. COBB, on the 11th of January.

The Secretary read as follows:

SENATE CHAMBER, Washington, January 11, 1887.

MY DEAR SIR: Senator DOLPH informs me that you have lost your copy of the conference report agreed upon at the last session by the conference committee on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses upon the House amendments to Senate bill 2172 (the Northern Pacific land-grant forfeiture bill), and desire a copy of the one delivered to the Senate conferees. I inclose you a copy signed by the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The Senate conferees have also instructed me to ask for the possession of the bill and papers, to enable them to submit their report.

Very respectfully,

B. F. FLENNIKEN,
Clerk Senate Committee Public Lands.

Hon. T. R. COBB,
Chairman Conferees, House of Representatives.

Mr. DOLPH. I now submit an original letter, which I ask to have read.

The Secretary read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Washington, D. C., January 12, 1887.

MY DEAR SIR: The conference report received with thanks.

In regard to the bill (S. 2172) the Northern Pacific land-grant forfeiture bill, I have not got it in my possession, and have not had it since I reported it to the House from my committee, at last session.

I am yours, truly,

T. R. COBB.

Mr. DOLPH. I now submit a copy of a letter addressed by the clerk of the Senate Public Lands Committee to Mr. COBB, on the 13th of January.

The Secretary read as follows:

SENATE CHAMBER, Washington, January 13, 1887.

MY DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of the 12th instant, in which you state "in regard to the bill (S. 2172) the Northern Pacific land-grant forfeiture bill, I have not got it in my possession, and have not had it since I reported it to the House from my committee at last session," the Senate conferees direct me to request that, as the bill should be on the House files, having been transmitted to that body on the 30th day of July last, in order that the report of the conference committee shall not be further delayed, and that an opportunity for a further conference may be secured at an early day, you take steps to substitute a copy of the bill, in the usual method, by having the House ask for an engrossed copy of the Senate bill. The chairman of the Senate conferees undertook to submit the conference report to the Senate immediately after the conference, but was not permitted to do so, as the bill was not in possession of the Senate.

This is the occasion of the verbal and written requests which have been made to your committee for the possession of the bill.

Very respectfully,

B. F. FLENNIKEN,
Clerk Senate Committee on Public Lands.

Hon. T. R. COBB,
Chairman Conferees, House of Representatives.

Mr. DOLPH. I also present an original letter from the clerk of the Senate Committee on Public Lands addressed to myself.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, January 31, 1887.

MY DEAR SIR: In response to your inquiry I have the honor to inform you that on January 11, 1887, by your request, I prepared, procured the signatures of the Senate conferees, and delivered to Hon. T. R. COBB, chairman of the House conferees, a duplicate or copy of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 2172) the Northern Pacific forfeiture bill, and that in my letter with the above inclosure I requested possession of the bill and papers. Under date of January 12 Mr. COBB acknowledged receipt of the report, and said "that he had not the bill in his possession, and had not had it since he reported the same to the House from his committee at the last session of Congress."

The bill was not produced at the meeting of the conferees held at the room of the Senate Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COBB subsequently stated to me that he did not have the bill at the conference, but that he thought Mr. PAYSON, one of the House conferees might possibly have it in his possession.

Very respectfully,

B. F. FLENNIKEN, Clerk.

Hon. J. N. DOLPH,
Chairman Senate Conferees.

Mr. DOLPH. In addition to the facts stated in these several communications, as soon as we ascertained from Mr. COBB and from the clerk of the House committee that the bill could not be found, I requested our Reading Clerk, Mr. Gilfry, to make a thorough search not only of the files of the Senate, but also of the RECORD to see where the bill ought to be, and endeavor to find the bill. He informed me that he inquired at the Clerk's desk in the House, and found that they had not the bill or that the bill had been mislaid, and also that he inquired of Mr. COBB, and Mr. COBB informed him that he did not have the bill at the time of the conference.

I have had this correspondence read not because I desire to criticise the act of anybody, or the omission to act on the part of the managers of either branch of Congress, but simply that the facts might be known, in justice to the managers on the part of the Senate.

I understand that there is no difficulty in substituting a copy for the original bill at this stage of the proceedings. I, myself, suppose from all the indications that the bill has been mislaid, and am inclined to think probably with the report of the conference committee that was delivered to the House conferees shortly after the meeting of the conference.

This seems to be the usual method of substituting a bill, to get a certified copy from the Senate of the Senate bill and to have the House amendment by order of that body substituted for the bill as it passed the House with the amendment. I therefore renew the motion that the request of the House of Representatives be granted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the Senate agree to the request of the House of Representatives.

Mr. INGALLS. I withdrew my objection for the purpose of enabling the Senator from Oregon to make a statement. If it is necessary for me to make the objection again, of course I will do that. I only withdrew it for the purpose of allowing him to make the statement which has gone on the records.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The matter goes over under objection.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10912) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE BILLS.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the indulgence of the Senator from Iowa for a single moment in order that I may offer a resolution so that it may be printed with the notice required by Rule XL. I want the notice and resolution printed, and I shall call the matter up to-morrow morning.

The resolution I introduced on Saturday last would be subject to a question of order if any Senator chose to make it, and I therefore propose now to introduce it with the proper notice in this form:

Under the provisions of Rule XL, I give notice that I will to-morrow move to modify that part of Rule VIII which provides that "at the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall at any time otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar of bills and resolutions, and continue such consideration until 2 o'clock;" so that said rule as modified shall provide that on and after Monday, the 7th instant, at the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall at any time otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of House bills and joint resolutions favorably reported upon the Calendar, and continue such consideration until 2 o'clock, under the provisions of Rule VIII as thus modified, until the Calendar of such bills and resolutions has been completed.

To that end I offer the following resolution.

ISHAM G. HARRIS.

Resolved, That on and after Monday, the 7th instant, at the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall at any time otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of House bills and joint resolutions favorably reported on the Calendar, and continue such consideration until 2 o'clock, under the provisions of Rule VIII as herein modified, until the Calendar of such bills and resolutions has been completed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. MANDERSON, it was Ordered, That all papers pertaining to, and accompanying, the bill (S. 1917), first session Forty-seventh Congress, to extend the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for the services of George Morell in adjusting title to lands in Michigan," be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa (by request), submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the Post-Office appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1854) authorizing the Treasurer of the United States to credit the District of Columbia with certain moneys in lieu of investing the same in bonds, with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10757) to provide for an additional term of the circuit court of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and for the appointment of one additional associate justice thereof; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary have leave to sit during the remainder of this session of the Senate during the sittings of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PALMER in the chair). If there be no objection permission will be granted. The Chair hears no objection, and it is granted.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers," after line 2142, to insert:

For the enlargement of the hospital building at the Central Branch, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2156, to increase the total appropriation for the central branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, at Dayton, Ohio, from $743,239.60 to $803,239.60.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2255, to insert:

For the erection of a hospital building at the western branch, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2260, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for the western branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers from $197,202.25 to $297,202.25.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2264, to increase the total appropriation for the western branch of the National Home for Disabled Soldiers, at Leavenworth, Kans., from $1,650,556 to $1,810,556.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "moneys," in line 2273, to insert "so far as the same can be made applicable thereto;" after the word "Treasury," in line 2276, to strike out:

In the same manner and as fully as other expenditures of the several Departments of the Government are by law required to be audited.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

So as to make the clause read:

And hereafter the detailed statement of the expenses of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers shall be reported direct to Congress in the annual report of the Board of Managers. But all of the expenditures of the said home, including the expenses of the Board of Managers, shall be made subject to the general laws governing the disbursement of public moneys, so far as the same can be made applicable thereto, and shall be audited by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "Treasury," in line 2280, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided further, That no person shall be eligible to or hold any position or employment in the government or management of any home who is interested in or connected with, directly or indirectly, any railroad, brewery, mercantile house, manufactory, dram-shop, or distillery in the State where such home is located.

Mr. PLUMB. That seems on the face of it to be a rather wholesome provision. I should be glad to have the chairman of the committee state the reasons for striking it out.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee made inquiry of the managers of the home, the Senator will remember, and it was stated that there were no abuses in the direction prohibited here. The Committee on the Whole thought it wise to strike out the entire provision. If there were any abuses to correct of course the committee would not have recommended striking it out. I do not think there are any abuses.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not know that there are. I should not like to speak on that point. I am very glad if there are not any abuses, but at the same time the fact that the clause has been put in there by the other House would seem to indicate possibly some information which that body had which justified it.

In addition to that, it is a good rule, a wholesome rule. Certainly no one who is connected with any brewery or mercantile house, manufactory, dram-shop, or distillery ought to have anything to do with the management of a soldiers' home. I think the Senator from Iowa is aware of the fact that too many inmates of the soldiers' homes are enticed out of them and are seriously demoralized by the proximity of drinking shops near to the soldiers' homes.

Mr. ALLISON. That is quite true, but this provision does not reach the evil that the Senator from Kansas suggests. I do not know why a man who is engaged in mercantile pursuits would not make a good manager of a home, nor do I know why a man who is conducting a manufactory would not make a good manager. I can readily see that the managers of this home must be selected from merchants, manufacturers, lawyers, doctors, &c., or else from men who do nothing and have no occupation.

So we concluded that there was no more reason why a merchant or a manufacturer should be excluded than there was why a lawyer or a physician should be excluded. On the whole we concluded that, unless there was some abuse, it would be best to strike out the entire proviso. Of course if the other House has information which we could not acquire, it will be readily seen that in a matter of this character the Senate would yield its objections to the provision.

Mr. PLUMB. It may be that it would be no disqualification to be a merchant within the State, and still the clause is evidently aimed at the possible fact that a person interested in mercantile pursuits and who is at the same time the manager of a soldiers' home or otherwise connected with it is using that position for the purpose of selling his own goods. But suppose the objection would lie to that part of the proviso, what is the objection to prohibiting any person identified with a dram-shop or a brewery or a distillery from having connection with soldiers' homes? It seems to me that there can be no error made in adhering to that much at least of the House provision. I therefore hope that the amendment of the committee striking out this proviso may be disagreed to, and that then such amendments as the chairman of the committee may suggest to it, and which he has outlined, may be made, leaving the prohibition against the brewer, the distiller, and the dram-shop keeper.

Mr. HOAR. I infer that the proper course would be to perfect the proviso before the vote is taken on striking it out. I move in line 2283 to strike out the word "railroad," and in line 2284 to strike out the words "mercantile house, manufactory," leaving in the words "any brewery, dram-shop, or distillery in the State where such home is located."

Mr. ALLISON. I think that is a very wise suggestion. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. The word "and," in line 2283, is a misprint for "any." That should be corrected by general consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree for myself, not acting for the committee, to retain the proviso as now modified, because I quite concur with the Senator from Kansas. He and I have no difference of opinion upon this question so far as I have heard him utter his views. I think the provision had better remain; so I hope that having stricken out the words "railroad," "mercantile house," and "manufactory," the proviso will be retained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection? If not, it will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. No; disagreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Then what will be the effect?

Mr. HOAR. The proviso is part of the text of the bill. The committee proposed to amend the text by striking out the proviso. I moved to perfect the proviso before the vote was taken on striking it out, by striking out something less. That is not an amendment to the committee's amendment, but it is an amendment which takes precedence of it, by reason of its nature. That has been adopted, and the proviso now stands in the bill with those words stricken out. Disagreeing to the committee's amendment, the paragraph stands, leaving those words stricken out.

Mr. ALLISON. That is my understanding of the effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the amendment of the committee proposing to strike out the proviso will be disagreed to, and the proviso remains in the bill as it has been amended by the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 2298, after the word "For," to insert "rent of office for the marshal;" so as to make the clause read:

Rent and incidental expenses, office of marshal, Territory of Alaska: For rent of office for the marshal, fuel, books, stationery, and other incidental expenses, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriation for "expenses of the United States courts," in line 2392, after the word "when," to insert "the court is open for business or;" so as to read:

Nor shall any part of any money appropriated be used in payment of a per diem compensation to any attorney, clerk, or marshal for attendance in court except for days when the court is open for business or business is actually transacted in court, and when they attend under sections 583, 584, 671, 672, and 2013 of the Revised Statutes, which fact shall be certified in the approval of their accounts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The following item of the bill was read:

For fees of United States commissioners, and justices of the peace acting as United States commissioners, $50,000.

Mr. PLUMB. At this point I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator having charge of the bill as to the amounts appropriated this year by comparison with the last year and the year before for the judiciary, the United States courts.

Mr. ALLISON. I have a memorandum of that. In regard to what particular point does the Senator inquire?

Mr. PLUMB. I refer to all the expenses under the head of judiciary, the United States courts.

Mr. ALLISON. Two million nine hundred and five thousand six hundred dollars was appropriated for the current year. The total for the coming year is $2,829,400. The estimates are $3,155,000. I will say, however, to the Senator that I am quite sure there are large deficiency estimates for the current year.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the Senator whether the committee have gone into the question of the expenditure of this money to any extent?

Mr. ALLISON. Do you mean of this money?

Mr. PLUMB. Of any portion of it, especially that portion which covers the fees of United States attorneys and marshals, the fees of witnesses, and so on.

Mr. ALLISON. We went into the question as far as we could by inquiry of those who have special charge of this matter in the office of the Attorney-General, and we had them furnish to us elaborate tables upon this question. They will be found in the report made by the House committee.

Mr. PLUMB. Can the Senator state in what portion of the country the expenses have increased materially since last year?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know in detail in what portion of the country. The expenses have increased in the Southern States and in the Territories, where there are great depredations upon timber on the public lands.

Mr. PLUMB. That brings me to what I had in mind. I am told that several hundred prosecutions have been instituted against parties in New Mexico, who are charged with having committed frauds in the entry of public lands, and that more than one-half of all those prosecutions are for offenses that were barred by the statute of limitations, and that fact was known to the district attorney at the time the indictments were found. I am further informed that he was advised by an officer of the court during the session of the court at Santa Fé, at which a large number of those indictments were found, that the offenses were barred by the statute of limitations. I do not know that that would in any way add to or qualify his responsibility, for he ought to do that much anyhow, being the district-attorney; but it is stated to me as a fact, upon authority which I can not question, and I do not think it admits of any question, that out of two hundred and seventy-five or two hundred and eighty indictments found at the term of the court held recently at Santa Fé more than one-half, perhaps two-thirds of them, were for offenses clearly barred by the statute of limitations, and that in a number of cases that fact has been brought to the attention of the court; that is to say, the statute has been pleaded successfully.

If that be true, it would look as though the liberality of Congress in the appropriations for expenses for the fees of magistrates, district attorneys, and so on, was being made use of, not in the interest of justice, not for the purpose of the actual punishment of offenders against the laws, but for the other and not quite so laudable purpose, of making fees for the United States officers.

It seems to me that it would be well to have some information upon this subject before increasing the amount of appropriation beyond that granted for last year, and if, as the Senator from Iowa says, there are to be large deficiencies it would be very pertinent to make inquiry at this point before advising their appropriation.

I am also informed that in the Territory of Washington the surplus energy of the Land Department is being exercised in stimulating prosecutions against persons who have gone upon the school lands set apart and reserved for that Territory, and which have been leased by the authority of the Territory of Washington to various persons for settlement and improvement, the proceeds of the leases to go to the common-school fund, where the proceeds of the sale of the lands should also go; and that those persons thus going in perfect good faith upon land that can not be damaged, because you can not damage a piece of agricultural land by cultivating it, are being prosecuted at the instance of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, who does not find in the ordinary operations of his bureau scope enough for his energy, and I might perhaps say, without offense, his malice. I think when we come to vote supplies of money, it would be advisable to understand how much of it is going for the purpose of gratifying malice and cupidity, and how little of it is going for purposes of public justice.

Mr. ALLISON. I believe the appropriations in each item this year are substantially what they were last year. In a few instances small increases have been made; but these appropriations were made in the face of the well known fact that each year, for a number of years, there have been deficiencies in these very items of appropriation. In nearly every one of the items enumerated under the head of the Department of Justice there are deficiencies for the current year.

I have the deficiency estimates before me. For the fees and expenses of marshals of United States courts there is a deficiency of $50,000 for the current year, and an estimated deficiency of $10,000 still for the year 1886. So for district attorneys' assistants, a subject to which the Senator from Kansas has particularly called the attention of the Senate, there is a deficiency estimate for the current year of $25,000, the appropriation last year having been $350,000; and the appropriation in this bill being $225,000. We did not change that appropriation. That was the appropriation made by the other House.

Mr. INGALLS. Have there not been one or two intermediary deficiency bills passed in addition to these?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, there have already been.

Mr. INGALLS. Amounting to how many thousand dollars?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not now remember from memory, but I should say $60,000 or $70,000.

Here is an appropriation for the payment of United States district attorneys of $225,000 and for the payment of assistants to United States district attorneys $100,000, making $325,000. We have appropriated for the current year $350,000, and there is a deficiency estimate from the Department of Justice for $25,000 more, and this deficiency of $25,000 will not pay the bill of the current year. We shall have these deficiencies coming up again and again for 1887, as we have now for 1885 and 1886.

Although the Committee on Appropriations recognized the fact that these appropriations are insufficient to carry on the judicial department of the Government for the next fiscal year, they were content to take the sums given by the House of Representatives, fully knowing that whatever sum we gave there would be likely to be a deficiency even if there should be any reasonable increase of the bill.

I sympathize somewhat with the suggestions made by the Senator from Kansas with reference to the methods of the expenditure of these appropriations in the Territories of the United States, and the newer States, but I can see no way whereby in an appropriation bill we can cure the evils, if evils there be. These appropriations must be made for all the courts of the United States, and any sum that will carry on the courts of the United States will be used and can be used in the Territories and in the newer States of the Union. We can not in the appropriation bill make the distinction which the Senator from Kansas thinks ought to be made in the expenditure of this money.

Mr. PLATT. Can not the Attorney-General regulate practically the amount of the appropriation which is to be expended in the Territories?

Mr. ALLISON. He can undoubtedly control a certain class of expenditures, and yet there are expenditures in the Territories that the Attorney-General can not control. Here is a district attorney, for example, in the State of Oregon, appointed by the President and confirmed by this body. He is an independent officer. He chooses to go into court and summon witnesses for the purpose of indicting men for committing depredations, if you please, upon timber lands. The Attorney-General has no knowledge that such a process is going on in Oregon until the expenditure has been made. So whilst the Attorney-General may have control over certain moneys, he has no control over the vast bulk of the appropriations with reference to the judicial expenditures of the United States.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what the estimates of the Department of Justice were for this item of appropriation?

Mr. ALLISON. For district attorneys?

Mr. TELLER. For this service. How near has the House come to giving the Department of Justice the estimates they made?

Mr. ALLISON. The amount is $375,000. The Department of Justice estimated for the next fiscal year just what it is supposed the expenditure of this fiscal year will be. We appropriated for the current year $350,000. The estimate was $375,000.

Mr. TELLER. What is the appropriation for the Department of Justice?

Mr. ALLISON. Three hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. TELLER. It is estimated at $375,000?

Mr. ALLISON. At $375,000.

Mr. TELLER. Why not give the $375,000?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know any special reason why we should not give it, although if we gave $375,000 or $400,000, if the Department chose to expend more than that sum, we should be obliged to give it, or, at least, they would ask us for a deficiency.

We have not in this bill, I will say to the Senator from Colorado, given within $8,000,000 of the estimates of the Departments of the Government with reference to the subjects that come under the usual appropriations in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to inquire of the Senator if he means to say that in the judgment of the committee the Departments have asked for too much money. Have they asked for $8,000,000 too much, or is the committee disposed to be economical at the expense of the service of the Departments? Which is it?

Mr. ALLISON. I can go into that in detail. I have taken some pains to enable myself to answer the question suggested by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. I wish the Senator would answer it.

Mr. ALLISON. I will answer it upon this very proposition.

We have not proposed here an amendment increasing the appropriations for district attorneys. The House appropriated $325,000 and the Department estimated $375,000. There was a service which the Senate Committee on Appropriations believed should be settled between the House of Representatives, if you please, and their own Attorney-General, because no matter whether we appropriated $375,000 or $325,000, whatever the necessary expenditures may be in the opinion of the Attorney-General will be made, and we shall be called upon to appropriate a deficiency, as we have appropriated deficiencies for that Department for many years, year after year, under the appropriations that we have been able to procure from the House of Representatives.

The Senator from Colorado asks whether it is because we are unwilling to give the amount necessary to carry on the operations of the Government or because we believe that the Departments have estimated in excess of the necessary requirements. I have before me the items estimated for which are not included in this bill at all, and I will leave each Senator for himself to judge whether these are necessary expenditures which ought to be made.

Mr. TELLER. Read the items.

Mr. ALLISON. The very first and the largest item is the item for navy-yards and stations. That has always been hitherto in the sundry civil bill, but by some arrangement in the House of Representatives it has been transferred to the naval appropriation bill, and the Committee on Appropriations of the House reported nothing for navy-yards and stations, leaving that entirely to the Committee on Naval Affairs, which has charge of the naval appropriation bill in the House. The Naval Committee has reported for navy-yards and stations in their bill, I do not remember how much; the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] can tell me perhaps; he has examined that bill with more care than I have.

The next item is one thoroughly familiar to the Senator from Colorado, for reconstructing the Interior Department building, $172,720. That is estimated for. The Senate Committee on Appropriations believed that it would be a wise thing to expend that money. I do not believe there is a member of the committee who does not believe that, because, as the Senator knows, it would make that building fire-proof and it would provide room for a hundred additional clerks. It is not fire-proof now. But we put that appropriation upon a bill last year of a similar character and the House of Representatives refused to acquiesce in it. The Senate committee does not wish to be playing fast and loose with the committee of the House of Representatives by inserting year after year appropriations that they will not consent to, and they said this was an improvement that the House would not consent to. So this year we have abandoned it. The Senator from Colorado can judge for himself whether that would be a wise expenditure.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me, I will say that I think the committee should have put that item in this appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt the Senator thinks so.

Mr. TELLER. It not only would furnish the additional room spoken of, but it would serve the purpose of making fire-proof the building which contains valuable records. It is a question between appropriating $172,000 to make it fire-proof and having it some day burnt up. I think the item ought to have been put in the bill, and the committee should have insisted that the House should agree to it. At least they should have tried it.

Mr. HALE. We tried it last year.

Mr. TELLER. I would have tried it again.

Mr. ALLISON. We have tried it, I think, twice.

Another estimate is for the construction of the Library building. The Department estimated $500,000 to be expended next year for the construction of the Library building. The Committee on Appropriations carefully investigated that question, and from all they could ascertain concluded that $250,000 will be as much as can reasonably be expended during the next fiscal year, taking into account the amount that will be remaining at the end of this fiscal year which will be applicable to it.

So with reference to arsenals, estimated for $230,000, not included in this bill. We have included these from time to time in past years, but they have been thrown out by the House of Representatives.

Mr. TELLER. It is supposed that the amount of the estimate with reference to arsenals will be put in some other bill, or is that to be given up?

Mr. ALLISON. I think some portion of it may be put into the fortification bill if we shall ever get a fortification bill, which we were unable to get last year and which we may not get this year.

So there are various items. I do not care to occupy the time in stating them all. There is a proposition to buy ground with a building for the Signal Service. The Committee on Appropriations believed that that would be a wise thing to do. A piece of ground could be purchased in the neighborhood of Twenty-fourth street covering the remainder of an entire square, the Government already owning part of the square, the particular property being owned by a private individual, having on it a building adapted to the uses of the Signal Service. The committee at one time recommended that it be purchased, but in view of the fact that contemporaneous with our report there came a report from the Committee on Agriculture proposing to transfer the entire Signal Service to a new department, in this transition state, if it may be so called, of the Signal Service bureau, depending upon legislation yet to be had at this session, we thought it unwise to appropriate for this building, although I believe every man on the Committee on Appropriations believed that it would be a wise thing for the Government to buy the property under proper restrictions and restraints.

Notwithstanding the number of buildings that are being erected in this city by the Government, we see year by year an increasing rental paid by the Government for buildings in the District of Columbia amounting to more than $100,000, and in some cases amounting to 10 per cent., or to 6 per cent. in most cases, of the entire cost of the purchase of the property which is now being used by the Government. Yet the Committee on Appropriations hesitate with reference to these purchases, because when they come into this body they are regarded in some sense extravagant, and when they come in conflict with the House of Representatives, such propositions are thrown out summarily.

For military posts and roads an estimate of $252,000 was made by this administration by the War Department. I have no doubt that $252,000 could be expended in the construction of military roads in the United States with great advantage to the people; but with our experience, swelling this bill as we did swell it, we did not feel that we could enter upon such an appropriation.

Mr. HALE. How much is the bill increased?

Mr. ALLISON. The bill is increased $2,940,000.

Mr. HALE. Over the bill as it passed the other House?

Mr. ALLISON. Over the bill as it passed the other House.

For the very judicial expenses we have been discussing the estimates in the aggregate are $302,000 more than was appropriated in the bill. I am not prepared to say that all the estimates are just and proper; I believe many of them are; yet they are estimates made for a public service which may be expended this year or next year or five years from now. They are not of such exigency as requires absolutely the expenditure of the money now. I will ask the Reporter to insert this table, for the information of the Senate.

The table referred to is as follows:

Principal items of estimates under sundry civil expenses for 1888 omitted from, and reduced in, bill as reported to Senate.

Navy-yards and stations (transferred to naval bill)	$4,418,961
Reconstructing Interior Department building, &c., omitted	172,720
Ventilation of Senate wing and boiler-vaults House, omitted	14,000
Construction of Library building, reduced	250,000
Reform School, District of Columbia (transferred to District bill)	18,200
Various arsenals, reduced	239,037
Buildings and grounds in and around Washington, reduced	130,000
Building for Signal Service, omitted	150,000
Military posts, roads, &c., reduced	252,203
Yellowstone National Park, reduced	90,000
Public printing and binding, reduced	427,047
Revenue-cutter service, reduced	60,000
Light-houses and light-house establishment, reduced	1,191,500
Coinage and recoinage of subsidiary silver coin, omitted	30,000
Quarantine service, omitted	84,500
Signal Service, reduced	31,695
Military surveys and reconnaissances, omitted	25,000
Public lands, surveys and expenses, reduced	322,000
Paper for internal-revenue stamps, reduced	20,000
Miscellaneous, Department of Justice, reduced	24,600
Judicial expenses, reduced	305,600
Total	8,218,063

Mr. ALLISON. To recur to the particular item which we are debating, it is impossible, so far as I can see, for us to restrain absolutely the expenditures of the courts of the United States; and it is impossible, I must do the Attorney-General the justice to say, for him to do so. He can only make an approximate estimate, because every circuit judge, every district judge, every district attorney, and in fact you may say, in some respects, every grand and petit juror, has some control over the amount, and to some extent over the character of these judicial expenses. So all we can do is to approximate the necessary expenses as nearly as we can, and appropriate for them, and from time to time bring in deficiency bills if we have not appropriated enough.

I should be glad to put some restraining clause in the bill if we could do it, with reference to the subject spoken of by the Senator from Kansas, but I see no way of doing it properly.

Mr. BECK. The United States commissioners have authority by law as justices of the peace have, and they can not be controlled.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] very properly suggests to me that these expenditures are swollen not only by the judges of the courts, but also by the United States commissioners who have power to hear complaints and bind over for the grand juries of United States courts men who are accused of crime.

Mr. CULLOM. It is necessary that they should have that power.

Mr. ALLISON. As the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] very properly says, it is necessary that this power should be given. Whether it should be or not, it is actually given by law, and is exercised in every State in the Union.

Mr. TELLER. I inquire of the Senator from Iowa where he finds the authority of law for an executive officer to exceed the appropriations?

Mr. ALLISON. I have not been able to find it. I did not suggest that he could exceed the appropriations.

Mr. TELLER. I did not intend by asking the question to criticise the Department of Justice. I have not any idea that the Department of Justice has asked for any more money than is absolutely necessary to carry on that Department. I know very well that the head of a Department refrains from asking for excessive sums. If possible he keeps his estimates within bounds. The Department of Justice come here and say, "Last year it cost $375,000 to do the business of this Department." The committee give them $325,000, saying to the Attorney-General, in the face of a statute that declares that he shall not exceed the appropriation, that he must exceed the appropriation or else the public service must suffer, and the chairman says, "Of course, we expect him to exceed the appropriation."

I admit that it would be almost impossible for the Department of Justice to proceed exactly within the appropriations. If the appropriations had been made for $375,000, circumstances might arise that would require and justify the Department in the face of the statute in exceeding the appropriations, but I do not think we ought, by any system of procedure in this body, to say to them, "Here, you must exceed the appropriations or else you must not do the business."

In the Land Office, in the Interior Department, they can cut down the force, they decline to do the business, and, as the office has been doing year after year, they can let the business fail for want of agencies to complete the work. It is not so with the Department of Justice. The courts are assembled. They may be dismissed, as they have been, and as they were during the last year, when juries were sent home because there was not money enough to pay them, when the public interests suffered, and when private litigants were put to great expense, as I know, in some sections of the country. That may be done.

Yet there is another class of business. Private business may be put off; the public business can not be. If the Government of the United States finds an indictment against an individual that individual must be tried. It is his right to be tried. The Government has no right to put him off because there is not money to pay the jury or the witnesses.

I think that the committee should have put in the whole amount of the estimate if they believed the estimate was not excessive; and if the House declined to accept it let the House take the responsibility. They do not take it in full when they send a bill here with the suggestion that the Senate is going to raise it. The bill came over from the House with the expectation that it would be raised, and it was done for the purpose of saying to the country: "The House is economical, but the Senate is not." That is the way it comes here. I would give the Department of Justice and every other Department of the Government the necessary money to carry on the Government in a proper manner, and if the House declined, then I would let the House take the responsibility.

Mr. PLUMB. Does the Senator from Colorado say that he would give to every Department exactly what is estimated for it?

Mr. TELLER. No, I do not say that. I think we have the right to exercise some judgment about it; but if it did appear that last year it took $375,000 to do the business in the courts, I think it might be inferred that it would take $375,000 this year, with a growing people and increased business in all the departments of life.

Mr. PLUMB. Is not the Senator aware—I think he must be as much as any one on this floor—that in the executive departments, where the expenses are let go without much, if any, supervision, and especially without legislative supervision, there is a great tendency to extravagance; and is not that tendency so strong indeed that the mere fact that the expenditure of a certain amount of money has been made one year is hardly a guide for what might be required the next year?

Mr. TELLER. I admit it does not follow because the appropriation of $350,000 was made last year that there ought to be an appropriation of $350,000 made this year, but I do say if it appears that there was a necessity to such an extent that the head of the Department, in the face of a statute which declared he should not do it, was compelled to create a deficiency, which we said was so properly created that we paid it, we ought to expect a deficiency of a like amount this year.

I do not say that every estimate made should be appropriated for. There are classes of estimates made that involve grave questions of policy and propriety. The War Department say to us that they want $40,000,000 for rivers and harbors. I do not pretend that there should be $40,000,000 given. They might say that they want it for coast defenses and that they want it for other things. The Senate might not agree with them. But for that class of departmental service like the courts of the United States, where there is a necessity that the laws shall be executed, that the courts shall be held, and that the witnesses and the juries shall be paid, stands on a different footing from any other class of expenditures, although within the appropriations made to carry on the Government.

Mr. PLATT. It seems to be somewhat the fashion to catechise the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and I should like to ask one question.

We have heard a great deal about not raising any more by taxation than was required for the expenditures of the Government economically administered. If we are to take the estimates made by the Departments as the standard of economical administration and appropriate as much as they require, will there be any surplus revenue?

Mr. ALLISON. That is a pretty considerable question, and the Senator from Connecticut I think is quite as capable of answering it as I am or any other Senator on this floor. It is safe to say that if we were to appropriate all that has been estimated for in the Book of Estimates for the coming year and then add to it the sums necessary to pay pensions to the Mexican war soldiers, to our disabled Union soldiers, &c., the surplus would not be very large at the end of the next fiscal year unless we largely increase our revenue. That is my opinion with reference to it.

I think the Departments have estimated for the coming fiscal year in all $376,000,000. I speak now from memory, not having the Book of Estimates before me in such a way that I can refer to it. They have estimated undoubtedly at least $31,000,000 or $32,000,000 more than we are likely to appropriate in the regular appropriation bills, so that if we should appropriate all that they desire, in the nature of things there would be a very small surplus at the end of the next fiscal year.

Mr. PLATT. There would not be any, would there?

Mr. ALLISON. There might be a surplus and there might be none, depending of course, as the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] suggests, upon the revenue.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask leave at this time, with the permission of the Senator from Iowa, to report favorably from the Committee on the Library an amendment to the pending bill. I ask that it lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the amendment will be received and laid on the table.

The Secretary will state the next amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 2401, to strike out all down to and including the word "indictment," in line 2415, as follows:

No part of this appropriation shall be expended in the payment of more than $800 per annum to any commissioner for services in the examination of criminal charges, or at that rate for any time less than a year and more than one month. But this provision shall not apply to commissioners in cities of more than 100,000 inhabitants. No part of any money hereby appropriated shall be used to pay any fees to United States commissioners, marshals, or clerks for any warrant issued or arrest made, or other fees in prosecutions under the internal-revenue laws, unless the prosecution has been approved by the attorney of the United States and of the collector of the internal revenue in the district where the offense is alleged to have been committed, or that the prosecution is by indictment.

So as to make the paragraph read:

For fees of United States commissioners, and justices of the peace acting as United States commissioners, $50,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to call attention to an amendment which has been agreed to. I was listening for it, but somehow or other I missed it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri object to the pending amendment?

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to that and also to another one just passed, that I did not observe at the time. I was trying to follow too. In line 2392 the words "the court is open for business or" were inserted. I hope that that amendment will not be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to reconsider it unless the Senator from Iowa will consent that it be considered open.

Mr. ALLISON. I will consent, of course, that it may be reopened. The Senator from Missouri was out at the time, I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, that amendment will be considered as pending. The amendment will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 2392, after the word "when," the Committee on Appropriations report to insert the words "the court is open for business or;" so as to read:

Nor shall any part of any money appropriated be used in payment of a per diem compensation to any attorney, clerk, or marshal for attendance in court except for days when the court is open for business or business is actually transacted in court, and when they attend under sections 583, 584, 671, 672, and 2013 of the Revised Statutes, which fact shall be certified in the approval of their accounts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to this amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not quite clear myself that the amendment ought to be agreed to just as it was inserted by the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will state to the Senator, as he will doubtless recollect, that in the bill last year the language here proposed to be inserted was not in.

Mr. ALLISON. The language of the bill of last year was substantially the language of this bill, as I understand it.

Mr. COCKRELL. With the words "the court is open for business or" left out.

Mr. ALLISON. I so understand. Those words were left out for the reason that it was supposed the sections of the Revised Statutes which are quoted following the words indicated by the Senator from Missouri would cover all the cases, but the Department of Justice suggested that under the provisions of last year's bill there were some cases where injustice was done clerks of courts. For example, the clerk of a district court and of a circuit court, both being in session at the same time, but one in session on a particular day and another in session on another day, under the decisions of the First Comptroller of the Treasury the clerk would be unable to get pay for the actual days in attendance on the court.

But I think the language inserted, which was the language suggested to us by the Department of Justice, is too broad, and therefore I do not know but that I would agree personally with the Senator from Missouri that we had better strike it out and trust to some future bill to correct any evils that may exist now.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Under the bill as it came from the other House, it might happen that a court would be in session simply for the purpose of adjourning from day to day, no business whatever being transacted, but the judge would be there or as in some cases the clerk would be authorized to make the adjournment in the absence of the judge. The clerk must be there. He can be nowhere else. The law compels him to be present whether he adjourns the court or the judge adjourns the court from day to day, no business being ready.

In such circumstances, under the provision inserted by the other House, the clerk might get nothing because no business would be transacted, and the Comptroller, I think, has decided, or is inclined to decide, or has intimated that he would decide, that in such a condition he could not allow the clerk to have any pay because no business was transacted.

The object of the committee in putting in the clause "The court is open for business or" was to meet just such a case as I have described. As it stands now I like the language better than I did that of the House. No abuse can arise. No charge can be made where the court is not actually in session; but if the clerk be present, as the law compels him to be, at a regular session of the court, he ought to have his fees although no business is transacted, for every day that the court is open for business. That I understand to be the reason why the words were inserted, and to my mind it is a pretty good reason.

Mr. COCKRELL. The provision as it came from the other House is the exact provision of the bill of last session, and as I have been informed it has been found to work very well and is not subject to abuse in the accounts of the officers. It is for this reason that I do not think the amendment ought to be agreed to.

In connection with this matter I desire to have a letter read from the First Comptroller, dated January 31, on this very subject, which will show very clear reasons why the amendment should not be agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 31, 1887.

SIR: As you are apprised, I have been lending all my efforts, since I have been in this office, to correct so far as possible the many irregular and illegal practices which have grown up on the part of marshals, commissioners, clerks, and attorneys. In many cases where they are apparently entitled to fees under the fee bill it was so manifestly not the intention of Congress to provide for them that I have disallowed them in settling the accounts. For instance, in section 828 of the Revised Statutes, in the next to the last clause in said section, the clerk is allowed 5 cents a mile for going and 5 cents a mile for returning, and $5 a day for his attendance on court while actually in session; and in many instances the clerks claim for twice as many days as, under my construction of the clause, the court is "actually in session." We have found, upon investigation of some cases, that with the exception of opening and closing the court, nothing whatever was done on many days when the court was technically open, the clerks and district attorneys receiving $5 each for these days, and the marshals $2. They claim that the court is always open for the transaction of business, which is true; and from the fact that the court is thus open, and that they are ready for business which possibly might be presented, they claim these fees.

For the purpose of obviating all trouble and difficulty in settling the question as to their right to the fees the House committee incorporated in the sundry civil bill the following: "Nor shall any part of any money appropriated be used in payment of a per diem compensation to any attorney, clerk, or marshal for attendance in court except for days when business is actually transacted in court." I find that you have inserted in the bill, in line 2392, the words "the court is open for business or." Now, permit me to say that if that amendment is made to the bill it puts the thing right back where it was before, and we shall have the same troubles and difficulties to encounter as we have heretofore had. I will give you an illustration showing how advantage is taken of such a provision.

The clerk of the district court of New Hampshire, in an account rendered here, charges for two hundred and thirty-five days' attendance, when business was actually transacted on only one hundred and five, less than one-half of the number charged for by the clerk; and when the matter was called to the attention, not only of the clerk but the judge, it was claimed that the court was always open for the transaction of business, although no business might be done.

Now, if it is the will of Congress that these men shall be paid for days when no business is transacted, as a matter of course I acquiesce in it; but I repeat that it is my opinion that it was not the intention of Congress to pay them such fees except for the days when the court is open and transacting business. Hence the amendment as incorporated in the sundry civil bill.

You will find that in the sundry civil bill for the present fiscal year there is the same provision as to clerks and marshals as in the present bill, but not as to attorneys; and the House committee only enlarged it so as to make it applicable to attorneys. See sundry civil bill for the present fiscal year, acts of last session, at the bottom of page 253. I am now settling the accounts of clerks and marshals on the basis indicated in the present bill; but if your amendment to the bill now before your committee prevails it will admit the practice which existed under the old statute.

I beg to call your attention also to that portion of the bill in regard to United States commissioners. If you are not apprised, I desire to say that the frauds now being practiced by United States commissioners are astounding; and these frauds involve marshals, deputy marshals, and in some instances United States district attorneys, and all for the purpose of making fees. Some of the commissioners present accounts for fees to the amount of more than $5,000 a year. It seems to be the object of these persons to hunt up trifling cases for the purpose of making fees, as of those cases set for trial more than three-fourths are dismissed by the higher courts.

So the committee of the House incorporated in the present bill the provision that no commissioner should receive more than $800 except in the case of those commissioners in cities with a population of more than 100,000; but this, on the point of order that it was new legislation, was stricken out. It was then attempted to limit the payment to $800 per year, which would have been some check, as showing that it was the intention to only allow that amount. After the bill got into the House it seems to have been so amended that no part of the fees appropriated for in the bill should be paid for the prosecution of internal-revenue cases unless the prosecution had been approved by the attorney of the United States or the collector of internal revenue. Now, permit me to say that while that was not intended by this bill, still it is a wise provision; and some of the district attorneys who are disposed to aid the accounting officers in correcting these evils that have sprung up propose to act in accordance with this amendment. Many will not do it; and hence the propriety of requiring all to do what a portion regard as wise and prudent to do. But if the positive legislation desired can not be effected I ask you to consider the propriety of striking out that portion of the House bill extending in your bill from line 2401 to and including line 2415. I do hope that it will be retained; for I think that we will thereby be enabled to correct eventually many of these gross outrages upon the Treasury, if we can not accomplish all that we desire.

I know that you are all very busy; but I hope that after reading this communication you will confer with Senators BECK and ALLISON in regard to the matter. I feel sure that if you were to see as plainly as I do here the great abuses that are existing and the heavy drain upon the Treasury caused by these officials without any good results you would think as I do about it.

Very respectfully,

M. J. DURHAM.

Hon. F. M. COCKRELL,
United States Senate.

Mr. HALE. That letter tells the whole story about this matter of compensation of court clerks. The comptroller in unearthing this mass of villainy that he has found, has discovered that clerks who are present when the court is actually open for business and adjourns without doing business draw their pay, and he wants to cut that off. That is a matter for the Senate now, so far as its action goes, to settle whether it is an abuse on the part of these United States court clerks to draw their daily pay on days when the court is actually open for business, if business be ready, and then adjourns without the transaction of business. I do not know where else the clerk can be excepting at his desk whenever the court is open. One Senator says the court is always open for business. It would be an abuse if it was constructively held that a clerk could draw his fees every day during the year whether the court was actually open for business or not. That I do not understand is claimed; but where a court is actually open for business, the judge upon the bench, and the clerk at his desk, and no business is done and an adjournment is had, I can see no reason why the clerk should not have his pay for that day.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine a question if he will allow me?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that in the State of Iowa there are six or eight places where the United States courts are held.

Mr. ALLISON. Six places.

Mr. HOAR. There are but two clerks in that State. They are obliged to travel to those places to be present at the opening of the court on the morning of the day fixed, and if they go into court and there does not happen to be any business ready that day owing to some accident, perhaps the absence of the judge, they are to draw no compensation even in that case.

Mr. HALE. That is the purport of the Comptroller's recommendation. That is just such a case as the Comptroller is trying to prevent clerks from receiving pay in. One Senator says the court is always in session, always open for business. That is not so. There are not many cases, excepting in districts where there is constant business pushing, that the circuit or the district courts of the United States are actually always open; weeks and weeks intervene between one term and another, between one session and another; and no clerk, I take it, would claim that he should draw his pay during such time. But when the court is open for business, although no business is actually transacted, just such a case as is cited by the Senator from Massachusetts, I see no reason why the clerk should not have his pay.

Mr. PLATT. I think, perhaps, this amendment was inserted somewhat upon my request. At any rate, I did suggest the matter to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. In Connecticut the clerk was confronted and the district attorney was confronted with just this situation. We have two places where the courts are held, growing out of the fact that we formerly had two capitals. The clerk resides at one, in Hartford. The court is held about half the time in Hartford and about half the time in New Haven. Much of the business is actually transacted under what is called an assignment for a particular day.

The term of the circuit or district court commences, and then assignments are made as to when the cases will be tried, running over, perhaps, a period of months, assigning certain days for certain cases. It happens very often that when the court upon an assignment day is held at New Haven, which is distant from the clerk's residence, the clerk has to go, the attorney has to go, though the assignments relate more particularly to civil business. When they get there they find that by some arrangement of counsel or the settlement of the case there is no actual business transacted in court that day. The clerk ought to have his pay for that day. He has spent a whole day to go and attend court, and there is no reason, as it seems to me, when the court is actually open for business, why the clerk and the other officers who by law must attend should not have their pay. I think in the last year it amounted to something like thirty days that the clerk was obliged to attend court, and yet no business being actually transacted, although the court was open for business, he was unable to draw his per diem. I think it is only right that he should have it, and it is therefore that I suggested something in the nature of this amendment to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COCKRELL. If it is right that they should have the per diem, it ought to be given to them all, and they ought not to resort to these subterfuges of nominal sessions of the courts. Here is one clerk who charges for two hundred and thirty-five days, when the record shows that the court was in session actually one hundred and twenty-three days. Is it fair or just to place that clerk in the position of being tempted to make that charge, he having the color of law to make it? I do not think it is. If the clerks are entitled to a per diem for their whole time, give it to them, and do not let it come in under these subterfuges.

The existing law for this year reads as follows:

Nor shall any part of the money appropriated by this act be used in payment of a per diem compensation to any clerk or marshal for attendance in court except for days when business is actually transacted in court.

If, as in the case cited by the Senator from Connecticut, that court sets cases for hearing on a certain day and the judge appears in court, and that entry is made and those cases are disposed of, or if the judge appears there and finds that he can not make disposition of them and then orders an adjournment, that is the transaction of business.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. That is just what the judge in our circuit will not certify was an actual transaction of business in the court, and, therefore, the clerk does not get his pay. I do not know how it may be in other circuits; I do not know how elastic the conscience of the judge may be; but our judge has that conscientious regard for the law which prevents him from certifying that actual business was transacted in court when no actual business was transacted.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is the business that was set for that day; it is disposed of, and that is the transaction of business.

In the bill of last year this law was extended to the clerks and the marshals. The intention of this bill, as it passed the other House, is to extend the provision to the district attorneys. So that there may be no mistake about it, it is said to apply to those terms of the court where there is a mere nominal adjournment, where the judge is not present, where the officers of the court are not called into court to transact any business. I do not think that that is the kind of sitting or holding of court contemplated in the law. I think it far better if we intend to give these clerks or marshals or district attorneys any additional pay to make it plain and distinct, so that all can be dealt with precisely alike. It is manifest that they are all not dealt with alike. It must depend on the interpretation of the judge. Now let us establish and maintain the rule that business must be transacted in court to justify payment to these officers of a per diem.

I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. Does the Senator suppose that there is any opportunity for a clerk, a marshal, or a district attorney to obtain pay for a day when he is not actually present in court even if this amendment be adopted?

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not catch the question.

Mr. PLATT. Does the Senator suppose that if this amendment be adopted there will be any opportunity for a clerk, a district attorney, or a marshal to draw pay for a day when he was not actually compelled to be in court?

Mr. COCKRELL. Unquestionably. All that is required is that the court is open for business, and they say the court is open all the time, and I think they could charge the whole per diem.

Mr. PLATT. Certainly not unless the court is actually opened by the marshal.

Mr. TELLER. The term "open," "the court is open," may be misconstrued differently from what is intended, and I think the term "open" is not a proper one to meet what was intended. If we would strike out the word "open" and insert in place of it "the court is in session," and then after the word "for" put in "the transaction of business," it would read in this way:

When the court is in session for the transaction of business, or business is actually transacted.

A court of equity is said to be open all the time for certain purposes, but "the court in session" means that the crier has declared that the court is open.

I move to amend by striking out the word "open" and inserting in lieu thereof "in session," and after the word "for" inserting "the transaction of."

Mr. ALLISON. How would this phraseology suit?

When his attendance is necessary and the court is open.

It seems to me if the attendance of the clerk is necessary he ought to be paid for it.

Mr. TELLER. Who will determine whether it is necessary or not?

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose the judge. Probably the First Comptroller might think he ought to be the man to decide it.

Mr. TELLER. I have no objection to that amendment, but I think the suggestion I make will provide that at every time when the crier has declared the court open the clerk will always get his pay, and he certainly ought to have his pay then, because he is there to record that proceeding. It may be that there are other cases where he ought to be paid, for instance, where he attends and the judge does not come. I think then he ought to be paid. His attendance would be necessary. I think the clerk should be paid whenever he is compelled to put in the time, to go and sit and wait for the court to open, or wait for the judge to come there and open the court; but he should not be paid for days that the court is constructively open and not actually, and that is the evil the committee are aiming at, that the clerk shall not be paid for the days when the court is only constructively open.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, it seems to me that the amendment proposed is very desirable to relieve any diversity of construction of the rates of compensation. The Senator from Missouri recognizes, as I think every one must recognize, that when a court is open for business, and business is reasonably expected to be performed, and an officer attends in his function to take part in that, and then, for reasons for which he is not responsible, the business fails of being actually transacted, as his function was to be there, and not to be engaged in the particular transaction otherwise necessarily than in his real office, the Senator is quite right in thinking, as I suppose, that the judge ought to certify for such an attendance as that. But the Senator from Connecticut thinks that the judge there does not feel at liberty to do so if the language is left without what is now offered to be inserted.

The Senator from Colorado will allow me to suggest that we could get rid of this question of constructively-open courts by simply changing the word "open" to "opened," saying, "when the court is opened for business."

Mr. TELLER. I will withdraw my amendment and accept that. I think that would cover the case.

Mr. EVARTS. Then it will read, "when the court is opened for business, or business is actually transacted."

Mr. TELLER. And would prevent pay for a constructive opening.

Mr. EVARTS. That would relieve this ambiguity.

Mr. TELLER. I withdraw my amendment and let the Senator substitute his.

Mr. EVARTS. When the law says it is open for business, it does not mean constructively open but actually open. All lawyers will so understand it. That will dispose of that.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me ask, in a case of that kind could that be done without the actual presence of the judge?

Mr. EVARTS. The marshal may have a right in certain cases to open court and wait.

Mr. COCKRELL. The clerk has no right to charge where the marshal simply opens the court and in the same breath declares it adjourned to a certain day, when the judge is not present.

Mr. EVARTS. My purpose is neither to enlarge nor diminish the compensation of these officers, but to make the clause here so as to be intelligible alike to meet such a situation as we approve of, and that will be certified alike in the different tribunals of the country. And I imagine that the observations of the Senator from Missouri, which he made before I rose to speak, accord with my own, that the mere question of business having been transacted is not a proper criterion of what people should be authorized to receive for attending, expecting it would be transacted. All the officer's attention and all his earning of the right to his per diem is when he has attended there in his function expecting that the transaction of business would take place, and then we do not wish it left open whether it is transacting business to put it off. The Senator from Missouri thinks that for this purpose of attendance it is just as proper he should be paid if the business is put off as if it is not, and that is a transaction in court. The real purpose of what the committee of the Senate has proposed here is to make in expressive and definite language what we shall all agree is either a proper or not a proper compensation. I think it is a proper compensation, and I imagine that the Senator from Missouri in the main agrees with my view, that it does not depend on the criterion of post hâc, there having been a transaction of business.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the court is actually opened and the judge is present and the clerk is there, the clerk ought to be paid. If the clerk and all the officers of the court know perfectly well that the judge will not be there and that no business will be transacted, and there is a mere formal announcement, the clerk ought not to be paid. There is where the line of division ought to be drawn. If the Senator will put in "the court is actually opened and the judge present," then there would be no question about it, but if he does not it leaves it open to this constructive service that the court may be in technical language opened for a month or two months and the judge not be near it, and yet the clerk get his per diem. The law did not contemplate that.

Mr. EVARTS. Now, Mr. President, I think we are refining too much on this, if the Senator from Missouri will allow me to say it.

We provide that there shall be an actual opening of the court, and whatever in contemplation of law is a prerequisite or an attendant of that judicial fact seems to be a reason why the officers shall be expected to be, and themselves should plan to be, there to attend to their business.

If after this opening and expectation of a judge, the judge should be intercepted by a railroad catastrophe, would that be a reason why the court's opening should not be a proper basis of the per diem of those who were attending there waiting for him to come in? In other words, let me suggest that we are refining a little too much on the closeness of these calculations. If we insist upon there being an actual opening of the court and an opportunity to do business, then it seems to me we ought to put in a clause that will cover the right and not exclude it because by post hâc considerations there was no business done.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, suppose the court is not open for business; the law commands the district attorney, the marshal, and the clerk to be there. They attend the court, sacrifice other engagements, incur expense, if, as is often the case, the court is held away from their own homes, and they are detained there. By what kind of argument will you refuse to pay them their reasonable compensation and their necessary expenses in such cases? You can not do it, Mr. President, without impairing the efficiency of the public service. Your only protection is in the character of the judge. You may, perhaps, prescribe when he may be allowed to open his court and when he shall adjourn it, but you can not say with any kind of justice that when the law compels an officer to be present at a particular day at a term fixed by law or by the order of the judge having authority to do it, and compels his attendance, because the judge fails to be there to open the court this man who has thus performed the command of the law shall be punished and prejudiced by it.

I think the amendment inserted by the Committee on Appropriations would have been much better if it had been left to say "when the court is open for business." If you add the words "as business is actually transacted" you make an alternative which may perhaps be held by the Comptroller to indicate the intention of Congress that the two phrases are synonymous. For myself I wish to say that there is no reason whatever in the proposition that when the law compels a district attorney or a marshal or a juror to perform a duty, you ought to withhold from him the proper compensation for that which he is compelled by law to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, in line 2392, page 98. The amendment to the amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. In line 2392 it is proposed to strike out the word "open" and insert "opened;" so as to read:

When the court is opened for business, or business is actually transacted in court.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "aid," in line 2421, to insert "and transportation to place of conviction;" and in line 2422, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

For support of United States prisoners, including necessary clothing and medical aid, and transportation to place of conviction, $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2423, after the word "court-rooms," to strike out "fifty" and insert "sixty;" so as to make the clause read:

For rent of United States court rooms, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2440, to insert:

UNDER LEGISLATIVE.

Botanic Garden:

For constructing storehouse for plants and for steam-heating for same; repairing green-houses, for extending concrete walks, and for general repairs to conservatory and propagating-houses, under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, $5,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2447, to insert:

Works of art:

For the purchase of works of art, and the necessary cleaning and repairing thereof, including new frames, under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library of Congress, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriation for "public printing and binding," after the word "million," in line 2466, to insert "and twenty-seven thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For the public printing, for the public binding, and for paper for the public printing, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving for both Houses of Congress, the Supreme Court of the United States, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the Court of Claims, the Library of Congress, the Executive Office, the Departments, and the United States Geological Survey, including salaries or compensation of all necessary clerks and employés for labor (by the day, piece, or contract), and for all the necessary materials which may be needed in the prosecution of the work, $2,027,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "printing," in line 2474, to insert "of either House;" in line 2475, after the word "an," to insert "approximate;" in line 2477, after the word "of," to strike out "the amount and," and insert "estimated approximate;" and after the word "Congress," in line 2478, to insert "upon recommendation of the Committees on Printing;" so as to read:

For printing and binding for Congress, including the proceedings and debates, $812,000; and printing and binding for Congress chargeable to this appropriation, when recommended to be done by the Committee on Printing of either House, shall be so recommended in a report containing an approximate estimate of the cost thereof, together with a statement from the Public Printer of estimated approximate cost of work previously ordered by Congress, upon recommendation of the Committees on Printing, within the fiscal year for which this appropriation is made (all reserve work shall be bound in sheep).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, before the word "thousand," in line 2491, to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "eighty-five;" and in line 2492, after the word "exceeding" to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty;" so as to read:

For the Treasury Department, $285,000, including not exceeding $20,400 for the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after "United States," in line 2510, to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty-four," so as to read:

For engraving for the geological map of the United States, $54,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2518, after the word "Congress," to strike out "twelve" and insert "fifteen;" so as to read:

For the Library of Congress, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations instruct me to offer an amendment relating to the public building at Philadelphia. This amendment is, I know, not in order, and therefore I ask unanimous consent to offer it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, at the end of line 95, it is proposed to insert—

That in the sale of the land and premises known as the old court-house and post-office in the city of Philadelphia, lying upon Chestnut street, and extending to Library street, and between Fourth and Fifth streets, and adjoining the present custom-house site in said city, under the act approved August 4, 1886, the purchaser at said sale, his heirs and assigns, shall have permission to use and enjoy, in common with the United States, a passage-way of not less than 19 feet in width, extending from Chestnut to Library street, adjoining the said old court-house and post-office building on the east.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained.

Mr. ALLISON. One word of explanation, and then if any Senator objects to the insertion of this amendment of course I shall withdraw it.

In the sundry civil bill of last year we authorized the sale of what is known as the old post-office and court-house lot in the city of Philadelphia, with a limit of $300,000. That lot is situated adjacent to the old custom-house building. There is a space between the two now, varying from 19 to 30 feet. There was a passage-way between these two buildings, used by the Government for the transaction of its business, extending from Chestnut to Library street. The language of the law was "the post-office property and premises." The alley-way which is described here was used by the Government when it occupied the old building as well as by the custom-house. The custom-house building is so constructed that doors and window-ways are adjacent to this alley.

The purchaser of this property supposed that he was purchasing the right to have an open alley-way between these two buildings. The Solicitor of the Treasury states that in his judgment it could be construed that this alley-way should be kept open permanently, as it has been in use for this length of time. The purchaser agreed to pay $415,000 for this property. He refuses to take title unless he can take it with this provision guaranteeing to him the right of this open way, about which there is some doubt. What I desire is that this opportunity may be given. Unless it is inserted in this bill, as a matter of course, this property can not be exchanged and the $415,000 can not be paid into the Treasury. I suppose it is a matter of some moment, though not very great.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make no point of order because I think this is incidental to what has been done before; but I think the word "less," in the third line from the bottom of this amendment, should be stricken out and the word "more" inserted, so as to secure to this purchaser what evidently was the purpose, a passage-way of 19 feet width. So I wish to have the amendment read: "shall have permission in common with the United States to enjoy a passage-way of not more than 19 feet."

That gives him the full 19 feet, and it does not bind us to give him any more, because that is all he really asks for. This is a mere change of phraseology.

Mr. ALLISON. I accept that suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa accepts the modification and the amendment will be so modified. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 7, beginning in line 160, there are two paragraphs relating to the drainage of the building of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. These two paragraphs should be consolidated into one and I ask unanimous consent to strike out from lines 160 to 172, inclusive, and insert what I send to the desk. It saves an appropriation of $19,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out from line 160 to line 172, inclusive, as follows:

For Bureau of Engraving and Printing: For construction of a new sewer from the building of said bureau to connect with the city sewer, $1,994.35; and the provision of the sundry civil act of August 4, 1886, appropriating $1,200 for a new sewer for this building, is hereby repealed.

For proper sewer drainage to the buildings belonging to the Quartermaster's Department, in square 232, in the city of Washington, $2,445.30; the aforesaid sewers to be constructed under the direction of the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Bureau of Engraving and Printing and Quartermaster's Corral, Washington, D. C.: For the construction of new sewers to connect with the city sewer, for the proper drainage of the buildings of said bureau and Quartermaster's Department, in square 232 in said city, $243,030, the work to be done under the direction of the commissioners of the District of Columbia; and the provision of the sundry civil act of August 4, 1886, appropriating $100,000 for a new sewer for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing is hereby repealed.

Mr. ALLISON. That is done under a communication from the Treasury Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 10, after line 234, the committee omitted one paragraph or item in relation to the re-establishment of two lights on Lake Champlain. After line 234 I move to insert:

North and South Hero, Lake Champlain: For the re-establishment of two stake lights to mark the channel between North and South Hero Islands, in Lake Champlain, upon foundations sufficiently strong to secure them against floating ice, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 44, line 1066, in the appropriation for "propagation of food-fishes," I move to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the amount $150,000.

Mr. BECK. That ought to be done by all means.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. Before the word "thousand," in line 1067, it is proposed to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Propagation of food fishes: For the introduction by the United States Fish Commission into and the increase in the waters of the United States of food fishes and other useful products of the waters, including lobsters, oysters, and other shell-fish, and for continuing the inquiry into the fisheries of the United States and their subjects, and for such general and miscellaneous expenditures as the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries may find necessary to the prosecution of his work, including salaries or compensation of all necessary employés, $150,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Please explain that.

Mr. ALLISON. That is an estimate of the Fish Commission respecting this appropriation. Last year we established a new hatchery at Duluth, which it is expected will be ready for use about the middle of June. Last year we appropriated $130,000, and the year before $130,000, and in each of the two years we have had a deficiency of $12,000. Professor Baird states that this sum will be necessary to carry on the operations of the Fish Commission for the next fiscal year, in view of the necessary expenses.

Mr. BECK. And the Columbia River comes in?

Mr. ALLISON. The Columbia River also, if the hatchery there is begun.

Mr. McMILLAN. That contemplates the new stations established by act of Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It covers the whole thing.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, on page 47, after line 1126, I move to insert:

For defraying the necessary expenses of local appraisers at quarterly meetings for the purpose of securing uniformity in the appraisement of dutiable goods at different ports of entry, $2,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the Senator would explain that.

Mr. ALLISON. The object is to enable the local boards of appraisers at the chief commercial cities of the Union to meet once a quarter and compare valuations with respect to dutiable goods.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But are they not under pay all the time?

Mr. ALLISON. They are under pay, but they are not under pay to meet in New York, where it is necessary for them to meet; and it is necessary that they should have a small appropriation for the purpose of paying their expenses.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does the Senator mean by "local appraisers?" Where are they to come from to New York?

Mr. ALLISON. They are to come from Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, and Chicago, undoubtedly, &c.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am satisfied.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now submit an amendment to come in on page 62, after line 1497:

To assist the Marietta Centennial Monumental Association, incorporated under the laws of the State of Ohio, in the erection of a suitable monument or memorial structure at Marietta, Ohio, to celebrate the ordinance of 1787, and the first settlement in the Northwest Territory, to be paid only to said association when not less than an equal amount shall have been appropriated by the State of Ohio or subscribed and paid by citizens of the United States, $50,000.

This amendment was offered by me pursuant to a resolution of the General Assembly of Ohio and referred to the Committee on the Library, reported favorably by that committee, and, therefore, in order as an amendment to this bill.

The people of Ohio and all the Northwestern country are now preparing for the celebration of one of the most important events in American history, the first settlement of the Northwestern territory, and also the adoption of the ordinance of 1787, which is one of the most important political events in the history of this country. The people of that whole region of country, many States co-operating, expect to celebrate that event, and wish in connection with it to provide for the erection of this monument or some suitable building to commemorate the event.

Heretofore Congress has in several cases contributed to these great historical monuments, notably at Saratoga and at Yorktown and many others. Probably no event in our history is more interesting than the early settlements of Ohio, the purchase and sale of the lands in Ohio, their division among the older States, the sale of the lands of the Ohio Company, and the final settlement in Marietta, led by some of the most distinguished men of the Revolution, and the subsequent settlements that followed through Ohio and the Northwest. It is deemed proper, therefore, to mark this event at the place where this settlement occurred by some memorial structure.

A corporation was organized by the General Assembly of Ohio, called the Marietta Monumental Association, charged with this duty, and there is no doubt that if the United States will pay one-half the expense of the monument the like amount will be paid by the State of Ohio, either through the State Legislature or by citizens of Ohio. At all events this contribution of $50,000 by the United States to this monument is made conditional upon the actual payment either by the State of Ohio or by citizens of that State and of other States of an equal amount to complete this structure.

If this appropriation shall be made, then the cost of the structure will be fixed at not less than $100,000, so that a monument fitted for the occasion, fitted for the event, will be constructed without failure and without delay. I trust, therefore, that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. CULLOM. I did not hear the amount specified in the Senator's amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Fifty thousand dollars by the United States, and $50,000 by the State of Ohio, the amount of the latter to be paid either by that State or by citizens of the United States. I can say in regard to Illinois, Indiana, and nearly all those States, that they have taken some measures looking to this celebration.

Mr. CULLOM. I am aware of that.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not merely a matter affecting the history of my own State but the whole Northwestern Territory, now comprising five States. I hope the Senate will, without objection, incorporate this amendment in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. I ask leave to offer an amendment. After line 1310 I move to insert:

That all the public lands in the Territory of Wyoming lying in the counties of Johnson and Crook, in said Territory, shall constitute a new land district, to be called the Buffalo district.

That the President be, and is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or during the recess thereof and until the next session after such appointment, a register and a receiver for said district, who shall be required to reside in the town of Buffalo, Wyoming Territory, until such time as the President may, in his discretion, remove the site of said land office from said town; and they shall be subject to the same laws and be entitled to the same compensation as is or may hereafter be provided by law in relation to the existing land offices and officers in said Territory.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that in order?

Mr. BECK. I desire to be allowed to say a word before the point of order is made. I admit that it is subject to the point of order.

The Secretary of the Interior sent a letter, which I hold in my hand, saying that it was absolutey necessary for the people in the northern end of this Territory to have a land office there, and the commissioner sends a letter, which I have in my hands, to the Hon. P. B. PLUMB, chairman of the Committe on Public Lands, setting forth the necessity of it. The Senate unanimously passed a bill for the purpose. It went to the other House, and the committee of that body reported it with equal unanimity. It is not a law, and may not become so; but three-fourths of the people of that Territory live in the northern part of it; they are actual settlers, and they have to go from 350 to 400 miles to prove up their claims, the only land office in the Territory being along the line of the Union Pacific Railroad, and it costs the real actual settlers of the Territory more than the land is worth to go so far to make their proof. Thirteen million acres are embraced in this new district. It is simply a question whether the Senate will allow the amendment to be considered now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the amendment be read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The amendment was read.

Mr. BECK. That is an exact copy of the bill that passed the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BECK. It ought to pass.

Mr. ALLISON. I will not make the point of order, although I do think the House of Representatives ought to have passed a bill of this character. All I am afraid of is that if we put too many of these things on, they will say we are legislating on an appropriation bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the danger. I give notice I will never do it again.

Mr. ALLISON. I will not object, but I want it understood that the unanimous consent of the Senate is given for this amendment to be put on.

Mr. BECK. I ask that because I admit it is subject to the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky, it will be considered as agreed to. It is agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. On page 9, after line 188, I move to insert:

For the purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury from the present owners of the property in the town of Middletown, Richmond County, New York, known as the Seamen's Retreat, consisting of 30 acres, more or less, and the buildings thereon, the same to be used for the purpose of a marine hospital at the port of New York, $250,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order on that.

Mr. MILLER. This is estimated for in the Book of Estimates, is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, and has been recommended by every Secretary of the Treasury since 1872. The chairman of the committee will furnish the estimates.

Mr. ALLISON. There is an estimate for a marine hospital in New York Harbor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us see the estimate.

Mr. ALLISON. This particular thing is not estimated for.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is my point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. This particular thing is not estimated for.

Mr. MILLER. Two years ago this provision was introduced into this bill and passed the Senate. By a vote of the Senate it was incorporated in the bill, but in the conference committee it fell out. As I remarked, it has been recommended by every Secretary of the Treasury since 1872 down to and including the present Secretary of the Treasury.

This property has been rented by the United States Government for a number of years, and is now in possession of the Government, and is used as a marine hospital, the Government paying a rental of $8,000 per annum, which is more than 3 per cent. upon the valuation placed upon it and the price now asked for it.

Two years ago, when this was put into the sundry civil appropriation bill by the Senate, the amount of $280,000 was appropriated. A portion of the land has since been sold, which the then owners valued at $30,000. That has been deducted, and the amount now asked for is $250,000.

This has also been recommended by the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service for a number of years past. As I have stated, the property is now occupied by the Government, and is substantially the only eligible site in the harbor of New York for a hospital of this kind. The price asked for it is undoubtedly less than the Government could obtain a suitable site for anywhere else in that harbor and erect suitable buildings such as are now upon it.

It will be remembered, perhaps, that for a number of years the Government occupied Bedloe's Island and erected upon it temporary buildings which were used as a marine hospital; but when Congress located upon that island the site for the statue of Liberty Enlightening the World, the hospital was torn down, and then the Government entered into a lease of this property and has been occupying it ever since. If the Government shall fail to acquire title to this property within a reasonable length of time, it will undoubtedly be broken up and sold.

I have not the report of the Secretary of the Treasury here, but I make the statement that every Secretary of the Treasury substantially since 1872 has recommended the purchase of this site. New York Harbor is the only harbor of any importance in which the Government does not own and maintain its own marine hospital.

It is undoubtedly true, also, that the price asked for this property is reasonable and probably much less than it is actually worth. As I stated, two years ago when this same proposition was put into the sundry civil appropriation bill the price was $280,000. A portion of the land which the then owners valued at $30,000 has since been sold for $45,000, showing that the valuation which they put upon the property was not at all extravagant. Now the remainder of the property, which includes thirty acres of land and the hospital buildings, which are ample, and, as I understand, entirely convenient and satisfactory, is offered for the sum of $250,000. This property is not the property of private individuals but of a charitable association of the State of New York. There is no private interest in it, there is no attempt to speculate in it, and no attempt to obtain from the Government an extravagant price for it. In my judgment the Government ought to secure this site, and secure it at once.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall withdraw my point of order if my friend from New York will consent to add to his amendment, after the word "Treasury," the words "in his discretion," so as to read:

For the purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury in his discretion from the present owners of the property in the town of Middletown, &c.

So as to give him liberty.

Mr. MILLER. I have no objection to that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator accepting that, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MILLER. If I had noticed that that phrase was not in the amendment, I should have put it in myself.

Mr. ALLISON. This matter is one which has been considered two or three times by the Senate Committee on Appropriations. Either last year or the year before the Senate inserted this identical provision, and the Senate conferees finding the House conferees utterly opposed to it said "strike it out." I suspect the same fate will befall it again.

There is a controversy respecting the purchase of this ground, and it is a local controversy. There are people who are constantly saying and writing and communicating in various ways that this property is not worth half what is asked for it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is it not charged that there is other property close by that could be bought for one-eighth the amount?

Mr. ALLISON. There are various statements about it, so that I think it is of doubtful propriety, I will say to the Senator from New York, to require the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase this identical property. I agree with him that there ought to be a marine hospital in the neighborhood of the city of New York owned by the Government, and it ought to be a commodious one, and a convenient one to the people engaged in commerce; but this proposition ties down those who have the responsibility to the purchase of this particular lot at this particular location for a particular price, which I think is a mistake.

Mr. MILLER. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont relieves it of that objection, as it leaves it discretionary with the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. ALLISON. I know, but when you have such a specific provision, it becomes rather persuasive with a Cabinet officer, and he regards this as an indication to him that the Congressional view is that the particular property ought to be purchased.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If there is any doubt about the place you might add, "or other property at any convenient point for that purpose," for it is clear there ought to be a United States marine hospital there where the United States can take care of sick seamen.

Mr. MILLER. I have no objection to that suggestion either. I have no objection to putting into the amendment that proposition, that the Secretary of the Treasury may buy this property or any other. I am entirely willing to leave it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury as to that, but I say this property is not private property; it belongs to a charitable institution of the State of New York, and there is no possible private speculation in the proposition. As soon as the Government decides not to buy it or shall decide to buy other property, this property will be broken up. It is now used as a marine hospital. It has buildings sufficient for the purpose.

It is evident to any one who will go over the history of the building of the marine hospitals of the United States Government that we are not going to get in the harbor of New York land for a marine hospital for less money than $250,000.

Let me read for the information of the Senate what some of the marine hospitals in this country have cost. The hospital at New Orleans cost $530,000; the hospital at Chelsea, $391,452.38; the hospital at Chicago, $422,107; the old hospital at San Francisco, $231,871.10; the hospital at Cleveland, $118,000; the old hospital at Cincinnati, $162,000, and so on.

What I want is that the Government shall have a marine hospital in the harbor of New York, and whether it shall purchase this property or not I care nothing about whatever; but the Government is now occupying this property, and is paying a rental for it which is more than 3 per cent. on the sum asked, $250,000. The rental the Government is now paying is $8,000. This is undoubtedly one of the most convenient and best located properties in the harbor of New York for the purpose.

I know that objection has been made to it by some of the people living in the vicinity on the ground that contagious diseases would be found in the hospital, and that it would be detrimental to the surrounding property. Of course that objection would be made to any hospital anywhere, but the answer to that is made by Dr. Hamilton, the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service, who says that no persons with contagious diseases will be maintained in this hospital at all; that they are taken at once to particular hospitals which lie on two islands in the harbor of New York, and that all persons having contagious diseases coming off vessels are taken at once to the quarantine hospital, and if any cases of contagious disease should be found in the marine hospital, they would be at once removed to the quarantine hospital. Of course you can not locate a hospital anywhere about the harbor of New York without having people in the immediate vicinity objecting to it. People do not like to have hospitals in their immediate vicinity; but if we are to have a marine hospital there we must have it in the vicinity of other property, and this property has been occupied for years as a hospital. The country about it has adapted itself to it, and no danger is to come from it.

Now, having modified the amendment so as to leave it entirely with the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury whether he shall purchase this property or any other property which he may find suitable for this purpose, it seems to me all objection must be withdrawn from the amendment, and as the Senator from Vermont has so changed the amendment as to make it meet those conditions I hope the Senate will adopt it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest to my friend from New York to so modify his amendment further than what I have stated and what he has accepted, giving the Secretary of the Treasury discretion to purchase this property or not, in view of what he has stated, so that if this is not the best location and the owners ask too much for it, and still there ought to be a hospital there, the Secretary shall have authority to get another place. So I suggest to him to modify his amendment by providing for an insertion, after the word "therein," in the tenth line of the written amendment, of these words:

Or for such other property for the purpose that he may find more advantageous to the public interest for the purpose of a marine hospital.

So as to read:

For the purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, from the present owners of the property in the town of Middletown, Richmond County, New York, known as the Seaman's Retreat, consisting of thirty acres, more or less, and the buildings thereon, or for such other property for this purpose that he may find more advantageous to the public interest for the purpose of a marine hospital at the port of New York——

So much money.

Mr. MILLER. I accept that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend accepts that, all right.

Mr. PLUMB. Something has been said about the amount. Say "not exceeding."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was not on the amount. I was only on the description of giving the Secretary power.

Mr. MILLER. Let the words "not exceeding" be put in before the amount.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. EVARTS. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont does not seem to me to observe the proper conditions of this appropriation. We have before us a proposition to buy certain described property in regard to its locality, its relations to population, and its area and its cost. Now I am quite willing that an amendment should be adopted which should make it a condition of the Secretary's purchase of this property that he should find it the property most advantageous to the interests of the Government; but it seems to me it is going a far way off from the precision in advance of appropriation that we at once separate ourselves from this as a proper subject of purchase in its value, in its relations, in its suitability, and in the acceptance of the population in its neighborhood, to leave it to the Secretary to make a selection at large all over the area that may be open to selection.

It seems to me, therefore, that in advance we have this property before us, we judge of it as suitable enough; its price as reasonable enough, perhaps, and we should leave this to the Secretary of the Treasury to decide on its being the most suitable one for the purposes of the Government.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To this suggestion of my friend from New York I have to say that without the modification which I have suggested, and which my friend, the senior Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER], has accepted, the amendment if passed into a law would confine the Secretary of the Treasury to this identical property, and if he could not in his discretion agree upon the terms, then we should have no marine hospital at all; and the point of my suggestion of the amendment, and which my other friend from New York has agreed to, is to allow the Secretary of the Treasury, if the people who own this property were insisting on too great a price, as has been suggested, and continued to insist upon it, to have authority within this limit to buy some adjoining or adjacent or near property or suitable property there for a marine hospital. That will leave him just as we should be if it were left to us at this moment to look the whole ground over and take the best place for the least price.

Mr. EVARTS. The difficulty is that this amendment does not so restrict the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it does.

Mr. EVARTS. It does not restrict him to adjacent property. It does not restrict him to property in the neighborhood. It does not restrict him to property on Staten Island, nor any of the observances which make this somewhat difficult problem suitable to the people of the city of New York and the surrounding population. It leaves the Secretary of the Treasury to regard almost exclusively the question of $250,000 worth of land wherever he can find it that will be reasonably accessible in the interests of this Government.

The Senator has said that if this property now offered is rejected, is left out, we shall go without a marine hospital. We have gone without a marine hospital, and we do go without it because we do not pass upon the necessary conditions. This is not like the purchase of land at large in a prairie, nor is it an element of mere cost. It is a difficult proposition to find a place to put it that will not excite the resentment of the neighborhood in regard to hospitals. We have had already in the experience of that island the destruction of a hospital and an excitement, all the population of one mind, so to speak, against its being tolerated any longer.

Now my proposition is, that this is ostensibly on its face a suitable place, and the population are satisfied with it, and the price on its face is reasonable; and if we give the limitation that the Secretary is to be satisfied with this price as reasonable, and then he is put under the condition that he still may reject it if he does not find it suitable to the purposes of the Government, is not that enough, without leaving him at large without any of these previous conditions, without the information of different neighborhoods, without their consultation and being heard by the Senate on the selection, to be made the absolute selector of the site of this difficult and complicated problem for this hospital?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then your idea is he must take that or nothing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend the bill by adding, after line 126:

For public building at Worcester, Mass.: For purchase of site and commencing the erection of building, $125,000.

Congress has passed a bill at this session for that public building, which was signed by the President yesterday morning. So I think under the rules this would have been put in by the Committee on Appropriations as a matter of course if the signature of the President had been sooner.

Mr. ALLISON. Has the Senator a copy of the bill as passed?

Mr. HOAR. I have. It calls for $250,000, and I propose to appropriate one-half the sum.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Under the rule, if the bill had merely passed the Senate, the amendment would be in order.

Mr. HOAR. It is in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I only called attention to the bill for the purpose of ascertaining whether it does not itself carry an appropriation.

Mr. HOAR. No, it does not. I looked at that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the point.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee were under the impression that it did.

Mr. HOAR. It does not.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course it is a proper amendment; but it ought to be inserted in line 144, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. I put it where I suggested because it came just before the Springfield building.

Mr. ALLISON. These appropriations are made alphabetically and W comes a good space after Springfield.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose the Senator will insist on placing it alphabetically?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; merely retaining the usual custom.

Mr. HOAR. Let it come in in line 144.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts? If there is none, it will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move to insert after line 1989:

For the purchase of the painting entitled "Farming in Dakota," by Carl Gutherz, $3,000.

This amendment has been recommended by the Committee on the Library and was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. It was inserted by the Committee on Appropriations, I think, in a former bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose it is not liable to a point of order.

Mr. HOAR. It was agreed to last year.

Mr. MCMILLAN. It has been reported twice by the Committee on the Library.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAHONE. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I have some amendments to offer in respect to public buildings which seem to have been omitted in the bill. These amendments are on account of recommendations made by the Department and contain the substance of bills which have been passed by the Senate. After line 45, I move to insert:

For court-house and post-office at Denver, Colo.: For continuation of building, $25,000; and the limit of cost of said building is hereby fixed at $575,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ascertain from the Senator from Virginia, who is chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, how many of these amendments he proposes to offer, and whether they are all of the character indicated by the amendment he has just sent to the desk?

Mr. MAHONE. Precisely, sir. I have only three others to offer.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that these are amendments which have been referred to the Committee on Appropriations from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MAHONE. Yes, sir; and they cover appropriations contained in bills passed by the Senate and which were recommended by the Department.

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose they are not liable to the point of order, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAHONE. After line 57 I move to insert:

For court-house and post-office at Harrisonburgh, Va.: For the enlargement and completion of building, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAHONE. I move to insert, after line 88:

For post-office at New Bedford, Mass.: For the erection and completion of a post-office building at New Bedford, Mass., to be erected on land already purchased by the Government for the purpose, under the provisions of the acts of February 20, 1885, and August 4, 1886, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAHONE. In line 85, after the word "Nebraska," in the item for the court-house and post-office at Nebraska City, Nebr., I move to strike out the words:

For heating apparatus complete, $6,000.

And to insert:

"For completion of building, including heating apparatus, $31,000

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I find, beginning at line 43, the words "For court-house and post-office at Danville, Va.: For completion of building, fixtures, inclosure, and approaches, $2,000," stricken out by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee the reason for striking that item out, and I will state that if there be no other way I shall reserve it for a separate vote when the bill is reported to the Senate, and endeavor to reinstate that provision.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Virginia that we found no estimate for this appropriation in the Book of Estimates. We inquired of the Supervising Architect, and he could give us no information on the subject. We could gather no information, and therefore we struck it out. If the Senator from Virginia is familiar with the necessity for the work in connection with the construction of the public building there, for myself I should be glad to disagree to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. It is an appropriation to complete something about the building, and amounts to only $2,000. The clause was put in by the other House. The city of Danville has an immediate Representative in the other House, and I think it would be proper to assume that the clause is in the bill for a proper purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia make a motion?

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Virginia that if I should be on the conference committee, as I think I shall be, and if the conferees on the part of the House of Representatives can explain this to us so that we can find that the appropriation is necessary, I shall be entirely willing to recede from the amendment striking it out. There was no debate in the other House about it. It was not reported by the Committee on Appropriations in the House, so that the Senate committee had no opportunity to ascertain whether it is necessary. If we find that it is necessary I will say to the Senator from Virginia we shall ask that it be retained.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I still think it best for me to reserve the amendment for a separate vote when the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will state that he regards this as a necessary appropriation, I shall, for myself, be willing to yield.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I do not know anything about it, but I can state that it appears in the bill as it passed the House and it was stricken out by the Senate committee. There are but two entire items of appropriations stricken out of the bill by the Senate committee, this one of $2,000 and the Yellowstone Park appropriation.

The Senator to-day has admitted into the bill large appropriations, one of $50,000, himself confessing that it was not proper, but he admitted it on the suggestion of the Senator from New York. It does seem to me that if he can do that, he could assume that possibly the other House understood what it was doing when it added $2,000 to the bill for the completion of the public building at Danville, Va., which is an important city, the largest tobacco-trading city in the State of Virginia, and which has more use, I take it, for a public building than any other city in the State, except possibly one.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that there is no motion before the Senate.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I simply give notice that I shall ask for a separate vote on the amendment when the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to say that I have not admitted any appropriation in the bill, without my objection at least, unless I believed it was a wise appropriation. I did object to the appropriation as first proposed by the Senator from New York because of its phraseology.

If any Senator on this floor will say that he believes from any information he has that this is a necessary appropriation I shall waive my objection to it. I have said to the Senator from Virginia that if he will furnish any information whatever on the subject I shall be glad to yield; but here is an appropriation about which we know nothing, and after inquiry know nothing.

Mr. VANCE. If the Senator will allow me, I will say that I saw some time ago the Representative from Virginia who lives in the city of Danville, and he asked my kind offices in procuring this appropriation, stating that it was necessary to finish the approaches to the court-house recently erected at Danville.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, we have an array of hearsay evidence on this subject coming roundabout through North Carolina. It is a matter of such small moment that I care nothing about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from North Carolina that no motion has been made in regard to the item.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. The Senator from North Carolina lives much nearer Danville than I do.

Mr. VANCE. The Representative spoke to me as a member of the Finance Committee, supposing that I would have something to do with the formation of the bill, which was a mistake, however.

Mr. SEWELL. After line 16, I move to insert:

For purchase of ground on which to erect a public building in Camden, N. J., $40,000.

The bill authorizing the erection of the building has just become a law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to offer an amendment. After line 1157, I move to insert:

International Medical Congress: For the purpose of entertaining and providing for the expenses of the International Medical Congress at its ninth annual meeting, to be held in Washington in September, 1887, $45,000; and the same shall be expended under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to have the amendment explained.

Mr. FRYE. It was explained to the committee by the resident surgeons and physicians of Washington, Dr. Garnett and others. This is a congress which has had nine annual meetings in the world. It has met in England, in France, in Denmark, &c. It embraces the surgeons and physicians of the whole world. They are regarded as congresses of the utmost importance to the health, the comfort, and the well-being of the people of all the world. They remain in session some two or three weeks; the finest physicians and surgeons in the world are present; and they discuss various questions touching surgery, the health of people, the cure of diseases, &c. The assemblage has received the sanction of other nations, with the royalty of other nations present.

The doctors inform us that it will take in the neighborhood of $75,000 to provide the printing and the halls and everything that is ordinarily provided for a congress of this kind; that they have raised some $30,000, and that they can not raise the balance, and they ask Congress to provide for it.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to know if any of this appropriation is to go to the payment of the personal expenses of these delegates?

Mr. FRYE. I understand not.

Mr. PLUMB. Then $45,000 is too large a sum for the rent of a hall and a little printing.

Mr. FRYE. There is to be a good deal of printing.

Mr. PLUMB. That amount would pay for a very great deal of printing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas object to the amendment?

Mr. FRYE. An objection is not available. A point of order can not be made against it. It is reported from a standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not desire to make a point of order, but I wish to say that I think the sum is too large. It certainly is more than enough to pay for the use of any hall and for all the printing to furnish a very large number of volumes of proceedings with seven or eight hundred pages each. Unless they should stay in Washington for a year or two they could certainly rent a hall for, I think, $5,000 at the outside. I move to amend the amendment by reducing the sum to $15,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend the amendment by reducing the sum to $35,000.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to make it $30,000.

Mr. FRYE. I accept the amendment placing it at $35,000, because the opinion which I expressed myself to the surgeons who were present was that $35,000 ought to be enough.

Mr. PLUMB. It is plainly evident that this means a junket and the expenditure of a large sum of money which must undoubtedly go to the payment of personal expenses. There is no possible necessity for an expenditure for a hall and for the printing of an unofficial paper of this kind that would amount to $35,000. I move to reduce the sum to $20,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves to amend the amendment by reducing the amount to be appropriated to $20,000.

Mr. EVARTS. If it is the purpose of the Senate to disparage this conference or convention of the eminent physicians and surgeons of the world, let us do it directly. If it is supposed that this convocation is entitled to be called a junket, and therefore the reception and hospitality which we are to offer to it is to be based upon a restriction of that purpose and indulgence, let us put it upon that ground and refuse to make an appropriation even of $20,000, and strike out the provision entirely, as the interests of mankind are not at all concerned with a junketing of physicians and surgeons.

But we can not disparage the interests that are represented by such a convocation as this is to be, because the record of their meetings in all the great capitals of Europe has shown the service to humanity and the service to the age which such a conference presents.

It is now provided that this convocation in their consultations shall cross the ocean and come here, and we are accounted in the number who can fairly be enlisted with those who are to be hospitable and polite to such conferences. I believe the fact that the physicians and surgeons here are themselves willing to bear a very considerable portion of what they regard as a suitable expense for the reception of such a conference, is a sufficient guarantee that it is not money to be wasted. If they are of the opinion, as they are, that the sum of $35,000 will be but one-half of the reasonable and open and honorable expenditures which are required, it seems to me that the Senate should not disparage it by disparaging the objects of the conference and the character of the men engaged in it.

Mr. PLUMB. I offer another amendment, to come in at the end of the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas withdraw his amendment reducing the sum to $20,000?

Mr. PLUMB. I will withhold the amendment I now suggest until the question of amount is settled.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question then will be on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas to the amendment reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations reducing the amount from $45,000 to $20,000.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move to add to the proposed amendment the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of this sum shall be paid as the personal expenses of any delegate; and no money shall be expended except upon vouchers to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to this amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the amount now of the appropriation?

Mr. FRYE. Thirty-five thousand dollars. I accepted the amendment of the Senator from Iowa making it $35,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves as an amendment to insert $35,000 instead of $45,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PUGH. In line 1221, I move to strike out the words "Bureau of Education;" and I make that motion on information communicated to the Senate from persons who are well informed on the subject. I read two letters from the Commissioner of Education, which are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF EDUCATION,
Washington, D. C., January 29, 1887.

SIR: Since my recent conversation with you in regard to the removal of the Bureau of Education to the Pension building, under one of the provisions of the sundry civil bill, I have the honor to state that I have made a visit to the honorable Commissioner of Pensions. In his absence I saw General McLean, the deputy commissioner. When I made known to him that the removal of my office to the Pension building was contemplated, he said it would be impossible to provide the necessary room; that the building was now crowded and did not give comfortable accommodations to the 1,300 employés and voluminous documents and papers of his office.

He said further that under the recent legislation of Congress his office had made a requisition for 220 more clerks, but that he did not see where they could be accommodated.

I walked through the rooms of the building, and I concur in this opinion of General McLean. I was personally convinced of the present overcrowded condition of the building.

Under these circumstances I can not see how the intention of the House of Representatives can be carried out with any regard for the good of the service in either the Pension Office or the Office of Education.

General McLean informed me that he would communicate his own views to you upon this subject.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

N. H. R. DAWSON, Commissioner.

Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF EDUCATION,
Washington, D. C., January 31, 1887.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the proposal in the sundry civil bill as it passed the House of Representatives, to remove the Bureau of Education to the Pension Office building, I have the honor to state that I have personally examined the Pension Office building in company with the Acting Commissioner of that office; that it contains more than 1,300 clerks already, and is badly crowded.

The Bureau of Education now fills and more than fills a four-story brick building, containing twenty-four large rooms, besides furnace room and coal vault. This building is about 40 by 60 feet in ground dimensions, and four stories high.

The library of the office, containing 17,000 volumes and 45,000 pamphlets, many most rare and from every part of the world, occupies one whole floor of the building and parts of other rooms, and the accommodation for it is entirely insufficient.

The museum, consisting of educational apparatus of different sorts, scholar's work, models of school buildings, maps, plans, &c., is very badly crowded into eight large rooms.

To remove this library and museum, except to a place with some prospect of permanent occupation, would be running a great risk of loss and injury.

The immediate prospect of an increase in the size of the Pension Office renders the removal contemplated by the House of Representatives only temporary, because if the Pension Office is increased from any cause, the other bureaus which are forced into its building will be thrown out again.

In my judgment the assignment of this office to such quarters, under such circumstances, is a direct means of destroying the efficiency and the usefulness of the Bureau of Education.

Very respectfully,

N. H. R. DAWSON, Commissioner.

Hon. JAMES L. PUGH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

I read now a letter from Mr. McLean, Acting Commissioner of Pensions, written to the Secretary of the Interior, which is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 29, 1887.

DEAR SIR: To-day the Commissioner of Education called at this office for the purpose of making an inspection with a view to securing quarters in this building for the bureau over which he presides. As well as to enlighten myself with reference to the occupancy of this building by the Bureau of Labor and the Railroad Office, I have set on foot an inquiry and am informed by Mr. Dawson that his bureau alone will require at least eight rooms of the capacity of the room now occupied by myself, which room is of the size of the larger rooms in this building. One of them will be required for a library, one for a museum, four for his clerical force, one for document purposes, and one for his own use. He has no information as to the number of rooms required by the other two bureaus, but it is safe to say that for the three bureaus in question at least twelve or fifteen rooms will be required. I have taken occasion to-day to make special investigation in regard to the subject-matter of any other bureau of the Government occupying quarters in this building, and the superintendent of the building is impressed with the decided conviction that our own requirements preclude the possibility of giving quarters here to any other bureau. In this connection I will state that the fourth story, the finishing of which was provided for by the late act of Congress, is wholly unadapted for any other purposes than the storage of documents, it not being at all adapted for the occupancy of any clerical employés.

I deem it my duty, in the absence of the Commissioner, to call your immediate attention to this subject in order that you may take such action as the emergency would appear to require.

Yours, very respectfully.

WM. E. McLEAN,
Acting Commissioner.

Hon. L. Q. C. LAMAR,
Secretary of the Interior.

I have here a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, written to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, which is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, January 31, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a copy of a letter dated the 29th instant from the Commissioner of Education, embodying the result of his examination into the matter of the removal of his office to the Pension Office building, as proposed in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

I concur in the opinion of the Commissioner that it will be impracticable to accommodate his office in the Pension building, especially in view of the increased work which will devolve upon the Pension Office under recent legislation.

Very respectfully,

L. Q. C. LAMAR, Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

I have no idea that when the other House put in the bill a provision for the removal of the Bureau of Education to the Pension building they understood the facts which are now placed before the Senate. I do not see how the Committee on Appropriations can resist my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH].

Mr. ALLISON. Of course this is a question that these gentlemen ought to have great experience about, and respecting which perhaps they ought to give us advice; but the tendency of all bureau officers is to have ample quarters and provision made for them.

The Bureau of Education is occupying a building on G street, and we are paying $6,000 a year rent for that property. It is a cheap brick building located upon a side street of this city. The bureau people want to remain there permanently.

When the new Pension building is completed it was the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations that there would be room enough for this little bureau—little so far as the number of its clerical force is concerned—in that building, as well as room for the Bureau of Labor. It seemed wise to try it and see whether we can not find a place for them there.

Mr. PUGH. If the opinion of the persons who understand this matter better than any one else is to be relied upon, it is practically impossible to make this proposed removal. If it is ascertained hereafter that the Pension building has capacity enough to take in the Bureau of Education, the change can then be made. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will not resist my amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. The Bureau of Education, which is alluded to as a little bureau, is not, I understand, alluded to in that way disrespectfully, but on account of the comparatively small number of employés in the bureau.

Mr. ALLISON. That is what I said. It is not necessary for the Senator to indicate what I did not say. I said it was little in the sense of having a small clerical force.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not know that there is any occasion for my being interrupted, then, when I am simply repeating what the Senator himself said, and when I appear to have his sanction and approval in saying what I do say.

But in other respects the bureau is of considerable importance. It has accumulated a vast amount of useful and important matter appertaining to the cause of education. It has the best library upon the subject of education, upon methods of education and the instruction of the human mind, probably, in the world, certainly in this country. It has been culled and collected, during many years past, with great effort and at considerable expense. The museum of models and illustrations of different methods of instruction and teaching is very important, very valuable, and very large. The house of four stories occupied by the bureau is packed just as full as it can be at the present time. The matter is of a sort that must be well protected from the weather in order that it may be kept at all.

The Pension Office building is not as yet complete, and officers who have inspected it with reference to this change say that the property of the bureau would, much of it, be eventually destroyed if the transfer were made. I do not think that it is possible to make it without striking a blow at the value of the property of the Government which would be greater in the way of damage than the rental of the building for many years. The public attention of educators is now concentrated on this bureau and this property, and there would be a very general feeling of remonstrance and indignation if a step should be carelessly taken which would do it injury. I hope that the transfer will not be made.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope that the proposition of the Senator from Alabama will be accepted by the Senate. It is quite manifest that there is not room in the Pension building for the purpose proposed by the bill, as it comes to us from the other House. The Pension Office does not want this proposed intrusion there, for it would be extremely inconvenient; and besides that, considering the number of pension bills which have already been passed we shall require all the room for the clerks of the Pension Bureau. Any Senator who will go to the present building which the clerks of the Commissioner of Education and that officer now occupy will see at once that it is utterly impossible that the whole of its contents can be transferred to the new Pension building with any propriety at all.

I hope, therefore, that the amendment of the Senator from Alabama will be accepted.

Mr. BECK. Senators have no doubt observed that the House of Representatives, after what we have a right to assume was a careful examination of the whole matter, recommended and passed the bill with a provision directing the General Land Office, the Indian Office, the Bureau of Education, the Office of the Commissioner of Railroads, the Bureau of Labor, the office of the agent for the payment of pensions in the District of Columbia, and the office of the Geological Survey to vacate the buildings rented for and now occupied by said offices and bureaus or portions thereof and have them all transferred to the Pension Office building.

Mr. MORRILL. But the Senator from Kentucky will remember that they passed this bill before the pension bill was finally acted upon and became a law. This bill was passed in the House December 17, 1886.

Mr. BECK. I do recall that fact. Now, we have stricken out the General Land Office, the Indian Office, the office of the agent for the payment of pensions in the District of Columbia, and the office of the Geological Survey. We shall have to go into conference with the Representatives of the other House upon that proposition. If we strike out the whole, the question will be made, and made very promptly, between the two Houses, and one or the other has to give way. We have stricken out the General Land Office because arrangements are made now for the care of all the papers, patents, and records in fire-proof portions of the present building. The Secretary of the Interior has to decide more important questions arising in that single office than in all the others put together; and we have thought that it ought to stay where it is and stay where the Secretary is. So with the Indian Office; so with the office of the Geological Survey, the rent of which is reduced from $20,000 to $10,000 a year, and so in regard to the office of the agent for the payment of pensions in the District of Columbia. We regarded it as obviously improper that that office should be placed in the Pension building, because sometimes hundreds of men coming for their pensions gather together at that office, and they are not persons connected with the Government service at all. Therefore, if we expect to make any compromise whatever with the House on this question, the committee thought, after striking out the General Land Office, the Indian Office, the office of the Geological Survey, and the office of the agent for the payment of pensions in the District of Columbia, we ought, if we possibly could, to endeavor to accommodate the disagreement between the two Houses in some way, and that the Bureau of Education, the office of the Commissioner of Railroads, and the Bureau of Labor might go into that building.

We were fortified in striking out what we did by the action of both Houses in regard to the Mexican pension bill, and in regard to the increase of force which will necessarily have to be employed to carry out the laws of which the Senator from Vermont very well reminded me; but if we make no efforts whatever to give up any rented buildings, and meet the other House with a flat refusal to do anything in this regard, we may find ourselves in a condition where we may have to give up even more than is now intended. We have an assurance that the Pension building will be finished by the 1st of July. I believe that is the fact. Am I right, Mr. Chairman, in my presumption?

Mr. ALLISON. That is what is said.

Mr. BECK. Being so advised, we thought we ought to make an effort to accommodate these smaller bureaus in that great building. While I am afraid the passage of the Mexican pension bill and the other pension bill we have recently passed will necessarily increase the number of employés in the Pension Bureau to carry out their provisions, and thus cause some embarrassment, I am inclined to think that we ought to be allowed to go into conference with the House conferees with something no larger than we have got now, rather than reject the proposition altogether.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to remind the Senator from Kentucky that the Committee on Appropriations struck out the provision for the office of the agent for the payment of pensions in the District of Columbia. That would be a very appropriate office to be placed in the pension building, but to put the Bureau of Education there would be a sort of miscegenation with no harmony or appropriateness whatever.

Mr. BECK. The office to which the Senator from Vermont refers, the office of the agent for the payment of pensions in the District of Columbia, is perhaps the most objectionable of all, because it would take into that building at certain periods great masses of people wholly disconnected with the public service. Hundreds and hundreds of men in no way connected with the public service go to that office to receive their pensions, to make their complaints, and to attend to business outside of the public service altogether; and when the Senator from Vermont comes to consider the question fully he will find, while that office seems to be a very small place, it gathers in everybody who has a claim to a pension, outside of the public service altogether, and crowds of people, to the great discomfort of our own employés, would be taken into that building. The committee investigated that point with great care and thought the transfer of that office would be the most objectionable of all. I beg the Senator's pardon for interrupting him.

Mr. MORRILL. What is most objectionable about this measure is that there is no room for anything whatever in the building of the Pension Office except for pension business; and I think it a very great mistake to undertake to cram other bureaus into that building, when it will all be required for the purpose for which the building itself was erected.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. President, a single word, The Senator from Kentucky stated that we were bound to presume that the House of Representatives acted upon information sufficient to justify the provisions they put in this bill, and at the same time he said it was perfectly obvious that some of the provisions ought not to have been made. Then, again, if you read what was in the bill you will find that they certainly did not understand what they were doing. They required that the General Land Office, the Indian Office, the Bureau of Education, the office of the Commissioner of Railroads, the Bureau of Labor, the office of the agent for the payment of pensions in the District of Columbia, and the office of the Geological Survey should be removed to the Pension building. If they had known anything upon the subject they would have known that it was a physical impossibility to make this removal, so that it is perfectly manifest that the House of Representatives acted in ignorance of what is now known to the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. I do not propose to discuss this question at this hour in the afternoon, but I want to avail myself of this opportunity to say that this whole business is an illustration of the old saying about putting a quart of water into a pint cup. There is not room either in the Interior Department building or in the Pension building for those clerks who are now in the two buildings or will be in the two buildings when the Pension Office force shall be enlarged.

The thing that ought to be done, and the thing that ought to have been done last year and the year before and for several years, is to erect an entirely new building for the accommodation of the clerks and officials who are now huddled together in a way that would be thought inhuman if it were in a tenement house and not the Interior Department. I do not believe that any scheme will relieve the trouble until a new building is projected and completed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, yesterday when the amendment made by the Committee on Appropriations, on page 44, line 1068, providing an appropriation for a fish-hatchery on the Columbia River, was under consideration, the chairman of the committee offered the following amendment, which I did not understand at the time it was adopted:

Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available until the Legislatures of the States and Territories having jurisdiction in these waters shall enact the necessary legislation to protect the salmon from improper capture or destruction.

My objection to this amendment is that it assumes that there is no existing legislation; it makes no one a judge as to when the necessary legislation has been had. I have explained to the chairman of the committee that the Legislature of Oregon is now in session and a bill has been introduced for the very purpose indicated, for the further protection of salmon in those waters, and that the Legislature will not meet again until after this appropriation will have lapsed into the Treasury if legislation is not had at this session. I want the amendment so worded that if the Fish Commissioner finds that the existing legislation in Oregon is sufficient, no further legislation may be required. I have submitted my substitute to the chairman of the committee and he agrees to it. I send it to the desk to be read.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment already agreed to it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That if, in the opinion of the United States Fish Commissioner, the existing laws of Oregon and Washington are not sufficient for the protection of salmon in the Columbia River and its tributaries, this appropriation shall not be available until the Legislatures of the State of Oregon and of Washington Territory shall have enacted such additional legislation as in the opinion of the Fish Commissioner shall be necessary to protect the salmon from improper capture and destruction.

Mr. BECK. I think that is an improvement on the committee's amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. It is entirely right.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I offer an amendment on page 4, after line 68, to insert:

For the construction of a public building at La Crosse, Wis., in addition to the $100,000 heretofore appropriated for this purpose, $50,000.

Mr. BECK. Has the bill for the construction of that building passed both Houses?

Mr. ALLISON. No; but this comes substantially under the provision heretofore made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I was instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to offer the following amendment, on page 49, to come in at the end of line 1181:

To provide for the acceptance of the invitation of the British Government communicated to the Government of the United States, on behalf of the colony of South Australia, to take part in an international exhibition of products, manufactures, and arts to be held at Adelaide, South Australia, beginning June 20, 1887, and continuing six months, $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; the same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, who shall transmit to Congress a detailed statement of the expenditures which may have been incurred, together with all reports which may be submitted by the person or persons delegated to carry out the purposes hereof, as commissioner or otherwise, which reports shall be prepared and arranged with a view to concise statement and convenient reference.

Mr. ALLISON. This amendment comes from the Committee on Foreign Relations, who have examined into that subject?

Mr. FRYE. Yes, sir.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to insert, between lines 144 and 145, the following:

For court-house and post-office at Fort Scott, Kans.: For completion of building under the present limit, $40,000.

I will state that this is in accordance with a bill which has just passed Congress and become a law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 918, on page 38:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is required to submit estimates to Congress, at its next session, to cover the necessary expense of establishing and maintaining a permanent party on the coast of Alaska, for the survey of the bays, inlets, and mouths of the principal rivers along that coast, to include such vessels and boats, and other means of conveyance, and houses, and provisions, and furs, fuel, and other supplies that are necessary for such permanent party.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I have been requested by the Delegate from Montana to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk. I also ask that his letter may be read after the amendment is read, which is explanatory of the matter.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 56, after line 1358, it is proposed to add:

In addition to the amount herein appropriated, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby specifically appropriated for surveying the lands embraced within the grant by Congress to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company in the Territory of Montana.

Mr. VEST. Now read the letter.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Washington, D. C., 1887.

SIR: I beg leave to ask that an amendment be made to the sundry civil bill by which $25,000 may be specifically appropriated to survey lands falling within the grant of the Northern Pacific Railroad in Montana. I am aware of the fact that a bill has passed the House of Representatives forfeiting these lands and is now pending before a conference committee. Whatever may be the fate of this bill it in no manner affects the propriety of this appropriation. If a forfeiture shall be declared, then in the interest of the settlers in pursuit of homes the survey ought to be extended. If a forfeiture is never declared, then the Territory of Montana ought to have the benefits derived from the taxation of these lands, and this can only be had by surveying them. The annexed law was passed at the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, and is the authority for the taxation of surveyed railroad lands, the patents for which have not issued.

There are 20,500,000 acres of Northern Pacific Railroad lands within the Territory of Montana, about 5,000,000 acres of which have been surveyed and have been listed for assessment and taxation by the railroad company under the foregoing law. This action has been voluntary so far as the railroad company is concerned. It is a matter of supreme importance to the people of Montana, and does not conclude or commit the Government upon the right to forfeit, if such right now exists.

The third section of the act is as follows:

"SEC. 3. That this act shall not affect the right of the Government to declare or enfore a forfeiture of any lands so granted, but all the rights of the United States to said lands or to any interest therein shall be and remain as if this act had not passed, except as to lien mentioned in the first section thereof."

It will be observed that if the lands unsurveyed, 20,000,000 acres, were assessed at the moderate value of 50 cents per acre, two-thirds less than the lowest price for which Government lands are sold, they would add $10,000,000 to the taxable property of the Territory.

There is no reason in my opinion why these lands should not be subject to taxation. The Territory ought not to be deprived of the right of taxation, pending the uncertainty of forfeiture. They may or may not be forfeited, even if the right to forfeit is conceded. The railroad company having voluntarily paid taxes upon the surveyed lands under the foregoing law, it is fair to presume that they will continue to pay upon other lands as rapidly as surveyed. If they do not the act of Congress referred to provides the manner of enforcing payment.

Ample provision is also made for collecting the costs of surveying, selecting, and conveying by the United States.

The railroad company having expressed a willingness to pay these taxes, and as the appropriation for surveys does not prejudice the right of the United States to deal with the forfeiture question in the future, I submit that it is only fair and just that the appropriation asked for should be made in order that the Territory may collect from these lands their just proportion of the public revenue.

Your obedient servant,

JOS. K. TOOLE, Delegate for Montana.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman of Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

The following reference to a late decision of the Montana supreme court will show that a survey is important to the Government in maintaining suits against timber trespassers:

An important decision was rendered in the supreme court at Helena this week. The case referred to is that wherein the Northern Pacific was sued by the United States for the sum of $1,100,000 alleged to be due for timber cut upon public lands in Missoula County. The defense put in a demurrer to the complaint in the trial in the district court, and it was sustained. The case was appealed to the supreme court, and that tribunal sustained the decision of the lower court, holding that the Northern Pacific are not tenants in common of the land within the land grant limits of the Northern Pacific road. Each is clearly entitled to half of the land within such limits, the United States to the even-numbered sections and the Northern Pacific to the odd-numbered sections. This being the case, it only remains to distinguish the land to which each is entitled. By the charter of the Northern Pacific (which is also a contract between the road and the Government) the United States agrees to survey the land within the limit of the grant, the railroad company to pay half the expense. Were the survey made there would be no question but that the United States would have a suit against the Northern Pacific at trespass or trover to recover for timber cut on the former's land by the latter. But it has failed to make the survey or to establish by the legal evidence of a survey that its land has been trespassed upon. Such being the case, the plaintiff can not take advantage of its negligence to bring suit against the Northern Pacific for cutting timber on ground which is not shown not to belong to defendant.

[Public—No. 132.]

AN ACT to provide for taxation of railroad-grant lands, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That no lands granted to any railroad corporation by any act of Congress shall be exempt from taxation by States, Territories, and municipal corporations on account of the lien of the United States upon the same for the costs of surveying, selecting, and conveying the same, or because no patent has been issued therefor; but this provision shall not apply to lands unsurveyed: Provided, That any such land sold for taxes shall be taken by the purchaser subject to the lien for costs of surveying, selecting, and conveying, to be paid in such manner by the purchaser as the Secretary of the Interior may by rule provide and to all liens of the United States, all mortgages of the United States, and all rights of the United States in respect of such lands: Provided further, That this act shall apply only to lands situated opposite to and coterminous with completed portions of said roads, and in organized counties: Provided further, That at any sale of lands under the provisions of this act the United States may become a preferred purchaser, and in such case the lands sold shall be restored to the public domain and disposed of as provided by the laws relating thereto.

SEC. 2. That if any railroad corporation required by law to pay the costs of surveying, selecting, or conveying any lands granted to such company or for its use and benefit by act of Congress shall for thirty days neglect or refuse to pay any such costs after demand for payment thereof by the Secretary of the Interior, he shall notify the Attorney-General, who shall at once commence proceedings to collect the same. But when any sum shall be collected of such railroad company as costs of surveying, selecting, and conveying any tract of land which shall have been purchased under the provisions of section 1 hereof, the Secretary of the Interior shall out of such collections reimburse said purchaser, his heirs or assigns, the amount of money paid by him as the costs of such surveying, selecting, and conveying.

SEC. 3. That this act shall not affect the right of the Government to declare or enforce a forfeiture of any lands so granted; but all the rights of the United States to said lands or to any interest therein shall be and remain as if this act had not passed, except as to the lien mentioned in the first section hereof.

SEC. 4. That section 21 of chapter 216, approved July 2, 1864, is hereby so amended as that the costs of surveying, selecting, and conveying therein required to be paid shall become due and payable at and on the demand therefor made by the Secretary of the Interior as provided in section 2 of this act, and nothing in this act shall be construed or taken in any wise to affect or impair the right of Congress at any time hereafter further to alter, amend, or repeal the said act, as in the opinion of Congress justice or the public welfare may require, or to impair or waive any right or remedy in the premises now existing in favor of the United States. This act shall be subject to alteration, amendment, or repeal.

Approved July 10, 1886.

Mr. ALLISON. I am constrained to make the point of order on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, for the reason that if we begin these special appropriations we shall be compelled to enlarge the proposition from time to time so as to include all the railroads.

No doubt there ought to be a survey of the lands in the land grant not only of the Northern Pacific but of the other railroads; but the general appropriations made for the Land Office are not so used, and I think it would be rather a dangerous precedent to make special appropriations in this way. We made a special appropriation last year for the State of Nevada, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office has not executed it, as I understand. So we do not know what will become of this if this special appropriation is made.

Mr. TELLER. Why has the Commissioner of the General Land Office not executed it?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know why.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order being made, the Chair thinks it is well taken.

Mr. PLUMB. I move, in line 1350, on page 56, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

For surveys and resurveys of public lands, at rates not exceeding $9 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $7 for township, and $5 for section lines, $50,000; and of the sum hereby appropriated $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended for the examination of surveys in the field.

Mr. BECK. I should like to hear some reason given for that. The sum of $25,000 seems to be rather a small amount, and to reduce it down to $10,000 is equivalent to doing nothing.

Mr. PLUMB. We give the total sum of $50,000 for surveys, and of this we provide that $25,000 may be used for the inspection of the surveys. It is a good deal like the old man's dollar for the dress and $10 for the trimming. The idea of giving a dollar for the inspection of every dollar of money we spend for surveys seems to me a wholly unnecessary proportion. I simply wish to establish some proper proportion between the amount to be expended for surveying and the amount to be expended for inspecting the surveys when made. I am quite certain that $10,000 is an ample sum for inspection purposes. The Senator from Kentucky will remember that last year the Senate inserted that sum of $10,000, and by reason of some agreement between the Senate and House conferees it was fixed at $25,000. I think the amount I propose is certainly ample.

Mr. CALL. It seems to me that it is very improper to be changing the appropriation as provided by the other House. In giving $25,000 we are to presume they had some information and some reason to guide them in the appropriation. It may be for the examination of surveys heretofore made, fraudulent and imperfect surveys. The section states:

For inspecting mineral deposits, coal-fields, and timber districts; and for making such other surveys or examinations as may be required for identification of lands for purposes of evidence in any suit or proceeding in behalf of the United States.

We have no information but that that is a proper appropriatioon An examination of previous surveys that may require examination. may require this sum.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator will observe that the appropriation here is not according to the estimate. The estimate was for $250,000 for surveys. This sum of $25,000 would have been 10 per cent. of that entire amount. The committee of the House of Representatives and the Senate committee concurring therein have agreed to appropriate $50,000 instead of $250,000, and yet they give the same amount for the inspection of surveys and the other miscellaneous objects as would have been given if the $250,000 was appropriated for surveys. Why appropriate $25,000 for these frills and furbelows of this service? Let us have something for the money and not mere skirmishing around the country under salaries, which will be the case, I fear, or, at all events, it might be the case if this provision should be adopted as it stands.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that the Senate adjourn. It seems evident that we cannot finish this bill to-night.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that will not be done, at least until we get the bill into the Senate. I think we can pass it in a few minutes if the Senate will have a little patience.

Mr. BOWEN. I ask the Senator from Nebraska to withdraw the motion for a moment.

Mr. MANDERSON. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. BOWEN. I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment already pending to the bill. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. BOWEN. I beg pardon; I thought that was disposed of.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BECK. I hope the unfinished business will be laid before the Senate before that motion is put.

RAILROAD ATTORNEYS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 2, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 1, 1887.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when

On motion of Mr. TAULBEE, the reading of so much of the Journal as related to the introduction and reference of bills and joint resolutions was, by unanimous consent, dispensed with.

The remainder of the Journal was read and approved.

PURCHASE OF BULLION AND COINAGE OF SILVER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a report of the Director of the Mint in response to House resolution of January 13, 1887, calling for information relative to the monthly purchases of bullion and the coinage of silver dollars; which was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and, with the accompanying documents, ordered to be printed.

Mr. SYMES. I ask unanimous consent that this communication, with the accompanying papers, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The document is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 31, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of resolution of the House of Representatives, dated 13th instant, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to the House how many dollars' worth of silver bullion was purchased each month and how many dollars' worth was coined in each month of the fiscal year ended June 30, 1886; also how many dollars' worth of silver bullion was purchased and how many coined in each of the months of July, August, September, October, November and December of 1886. Also whether the law requiring the purchase and coinage of not less than two millions' worth of bullion per month has been complied with."

And in reply to inclose herewith copy of report, dated 29th instant, with inclosure from the Director of the Mint, to whom the resolution had been referred, containing the information desired.

Respectfully, yours,

D. MANNING, Secretary.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF THE MINT,
Washington, D. C., January 29, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith, for transmittal to the House of Representatives, in pursuance of House resolution of January 13, a statement showing "how many dollars' worth of silver bullion was purchased each month and how many dollars' worth was coined in each month of the fiscal year ended June 30, 1886; also how many dollars' worth of silver bullion was purchased and how many coined in each of the months of July, August, September, October, November, and December of 1886."

It will be seen therefrom that the law requiring the purchase and coinage of not less than two million dollars' worth of bullion per month has been complied with for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1886, as well as for the remaining six months of the calendar year 1886.

Very respectfully,

JAS. P. KIMBALL,
Director of the Mint.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

J. HART & CO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate of appropriation to pay J. Hart & Co. for tax and fine imposed on the steamship Dawn and remitted by that Department; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCIES IN SIGNAL SERVICE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates from the Secretary of War of deficiencies in appropriations for the Signal Service for the current fiscal year, in lieu of estimates submitted December 17, 1886; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

JUDGMENTS OF COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a list of judgments of the Court of Claims against the United States, presented for payment since June 14, 1886; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WATER SUPPLY OF WASHINGTON, D. C., ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates from the Secretary of War of appropriations for increasing the water supply of Washington, D. C., and for fish-ways at Great Falls, Potomac River; which was referred the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT KEY WEST, FLA., AND NEW YORK CITY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Supervising Architect, relative to proposed additional appropriations for public buildings at Key West, Fla., and New York city; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

LAKE SUPERIOR SHIP-CANAL RAILWAY, ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting correspondence relative to the proposed sale to the Government of the properties of the Lake Superior Ship-Canal Railway and Iron Company, and of the Portage Lake and River Improvement Company; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

CIVILIAN ENGINEERS ON RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the names and places of residence of civilian engineers employed on works of river and harbor improvement; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

DECENNIAL CENSUS OF 1885.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, relative to the decennial census of 1885, and of the omission of the State of Florida to fully comply with the provisions required preliminary to payment therefor by the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY BUILDING.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting a detailed statement of the proceedings of the commission for the construction of the Congressional Library building; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, under the rule, for reference, a Senate bill and resolutions of the following titles; which were referred as indicated, namely:

The bill (S. 2436) to amend sections 2474 and 2475 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, setting apart a certain tract of land lying near the headwaters of the Yellowstone River as a public park—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The joint resolution (S. Res. 88) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officers of the District of Columbia—to the Committee on Printing; and

The concurrent resolution of the Senate providing for the printing of 6,000 additional copies of the report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations touching our fisheries—to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Chair will order the bill (S. 2436) setting aside a certain tract of land for a public park, to be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BENNETT, for one day, on account of sickness.

To Mr. DINGLEY, for to-day, on account of illness.

To Mr. PARKER, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BOYLE, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BACON, indefinitely, on account of important business.

COPY OF AN ENGROSSED BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will lay before the House for present consideration, if there be no objection, a resolution which the Clerk will now report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to furnish the House with a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes, the original copy having been lost or mislaid.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that a committee of conference was appointed upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on this bill at the last session of Congress, and during the vaction the bill has been mislaid.

There being no objection, the resolution was adopted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VAN EATON. Mr. Speaker, the objection having been withdrawn, I now renew my request for unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1368) for the relief of Richard H. Porter and James Porter, and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. I object.

Mr. ROMEIS. I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 6538) to define the boundaries of the collection districts of Miami and Sandusky, in the State of Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. COWLES. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MORRISON. I object.

Mr. NORWOOD. I now call up for consideration a resolution offered by instruction of the Committee on Naval Affairs a day or two ago, which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD and laid over.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the consideration of this resolution require unanimous consent at this time?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I object.

Mr. BYNUM. I demand the regular order.

Mr. STEELE. I call up for consideration the special order of May 5.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the order referred to by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That May 19 be set apart for the consideration of H. R. 7634, not to interfere with revenue or appropriation bills or any prior orders.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the title of that bill?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7634) to increase the efficiency of the line of the Army, and for other purposes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does that special order displace the morning hour for the call of committees for reports?

The SPEAKER. It does not. It would for the time being, of course, if the House proceeds now to consider it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I raise the question of consideration, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] I see is not present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois raises the question of consideration against the special order.

The question is: Will the House now proceed to consider the bill?

Mr. STEELE. I did not understand the statement of the Speaker as to whether this order interferes with the morning hour or not.

The SPEAKER. It will interfere with it during the time it is being considered. But this being a special order, as soon as disposed of the Chair will proceed with the regular order of business, which is first the call of committees for reports and then the hour for the consideration of bills.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen having reports to make from committees may hand them to the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. That request can be made after the pending question is disposed of.

Mr. STEELE. I withdraw the call for the special order until after the call of committees for reports.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] does not then call up the special order at this time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN NEWARK, N. J.

OBITUARIES ON DECEASED NEW YORK MEMBERS.

Mr. VIELE. I ask, Mr. Speaker, in consequence of the absence of a number of Representatives from the State of New York on account of sickness, that so much of the special order providing that Thursday evening of this week be assigned for the consideration of resolutions relating to the late Messrs. ARNOT, BEACH, and DOWDNEY, late Representatives in this House from the State of New York, be vacated and that the evening of next Tuesday, February 8, be set apart for that purpose.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

EMPLOYÉS OF GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. COBB, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to this House the names of all persons who have heretofore been and are now employed in any manner, or for any purpose, by or in the office of the Geological Survey, distinguishing between those appointed under the civil-service rules and those who were not, also where each was appointed and his or her place of residence, the time of service of each, the nature of the work performed by each and when performed, the annual and daily compensation of each, and the aggregate amount paid to each employé for services, and the amount of expenses paid for each.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS OHIO RIVER.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 11024) to authorize the Central Railway and Bridge Company to erect a bridge across the Ohio River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEELE. I now call up for consideration the special order fixed on May 5.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill called up by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7634) to increase the efficiency of the line of the Army, and for other purposes.

Mr. HERBERT. I raise the question of consideration in favor of the bill to consolidate certain bureaus of the Department of the Navy, and for other purposes.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to say that this bill has but one day, while the bill the gentleman from Alabama refers to can run to the end of the session.

Mr. HERBERT. Any other day, I am satisfied, will do for the consideration of the gentleman's bill just as well as this.

Mr. STEELE. It is a very important and meritorious bill.

Mr. HERBERT. I have no doubt of that, and shall probably vote for your bill myself, but hope it will not be taken up for consideration to-day.

The SPEAKER. The question is, will the House proceed to consider the special order?

Mr. HEMPHILL. What is the effect upon the second hour?

The SPEAKER. It will be dispensed with so long as the House is engaged in the consideration of this bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the House shall not proceed to consider it then the second hour will begin?

The SPEAKER. It will.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. STEELE, and on a division there were—ayes 71, noes 78.

Mr. STEELE. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. STEELE and Mr. HERBERT were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 96, noes 92.

Mr. HERBERT. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 111, nays 126, not voting 80; as follows:

Mr. BACON with Mr. PARKER.

Mr. PINDAR with Mr. DAVENPORT.

Mr. GREEN with Mr. SWINBURNE.

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. WADE.

Mr. COMSTOCK with Mr. HIRES.

Mr. CANDLER with Mr. BUNNELL.

Mr. BALLENTINE with Mr. LAIRD.

Mr. REAGAN with Mr. HISCOCK.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, with Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts, on this vote.

Mr. BELMONT with Mr. LINDSLEY, for this day.

Mr. BENNETT with Mr. BUCHANAN, on this vote.

Mr. HEARD with Mr. PHELPS.

Mr. ROGERS with Mr. HANBACK.

Mr. BOYLE with Mr. DINGLEY.

Mr. BLAND with Mr. ROCKWELL.

Mr. MAHONEY with Mr. HERMANN.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, with Mr. LA FOLLETTE.

Mr. RANDALL with Mr. LITTLE.

Mr. MCCREARY with Mr. BUTTERWORTH, on this vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. STEELE. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Thursday next.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 17, noes 72.

Mr. STEELE. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. STEELE and Mr. HERBERT were appointed tellers.

Mr. SOWDEN. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STEELE. If I may be allowed to do so, as I do not wish to prolong the session, I withdraw the question of a quorum.

Mr. SOWDEN. Then I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The order will be considered as rescinded by unanimous consent.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of bills under the second hour. The hour begins at twenty minutes before 2 o'clock.

Mr. HERBERT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the unfinished business.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will withdraw the call for the regular order for the present.

Mr. PETERS, Mr. GOFF, and others demanded the regular order.

Mr. HERBERT. Is not the motion I have made in order?

The SPEAKER. Not until after the expiration of the second hour. The order under which the gentleman makes the motion provides that the consideration of the bill to which he refers shall not interfere with the morning hour for the consideration of bills.

Mr. HERBERT. I withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. The call rests with the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SINKING FUND OF THE DISTRICT.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to call up for consideration the bill (S. 1854) authorizing the Treasurer of the United States to credit the District of Columbia with certain moneys in lieu of investing the same in bonds.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House. I will state to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] that I have prepared a substitute which I am authorized by the committee to offer in place of the bill originally introduced. This substitute, I think, covers the objection which the gentleman from Ohio made.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let the substitute be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the consideration of this bill and that the same be considered in the House, stating at the same time he proposes to offer a substitute for the bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Let the substitute be read.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Treasurer of the United States, as commissioner of the sinking fund of the District of Columbia, shall not be compelled hereafter to invest money retained from District contracts hereafter entered into, but may, in his discretion, retain said funds without interest, or invest the same in any class of United States or District of Columbia bonds at the request and at the risk of the contractor whenever the sum retained on any contract shall reach the sum of $100 or more. Any sum less than $100 shall be retained without interest, as above.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill and to consider it in the House?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I desire to say but a few words in explanation of this bill.

Mr. WILSON. I ask for the reading of the Senate bill for which this is proposed as a substitute.

The bill (S. 1854) was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Treasurer of the United States, as commissioner of the sinking fund of the District of Columbia, after paying the interest on the funded indebtedness of the District of Columbia, may, when in his judgment it is for the interest of the United States or the District of Columbia so to do, in lieu of investing the combined funds in bonds of the District of Columbia, as provided in the act of March 3, 1883, making appropriations for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, retain the same in the Treasury and allow interest thereon at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, and make use thereof, principal and interest, for the payment of the bonds of said District as they mature. Said Treasurer may also, in his like discretion, in lieu of investing the money retained from District contractors in bonds, as now provided by law, retain such moneys and pay interest thereon at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, for the purposes for which such retain is provided.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move the adoption of the substitute and the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

The substitute was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now, in pursuance of instructions from the Committee on the District of Columbia, call up for consideration the bill S. 938, which is on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. If it is a private bill it is not in order under this call.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Then I call up for consideration the bill H. R. 10758.

The SPEAKER. The bill to which the gentleman now refers was reported to the House yesterday, and is at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I have a print of the bill here. It must have come from the Printing Office.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised the bill is reported with an amendment. The bill which the gentleman from South Carolina has is the original bill as referred to the committee. The bill has been sent for.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will ask unanimous consent to call up to-morrow the bill which has been sent for, unless I can get it up to-day.

The SPEAKER. The bill may have come up before the hour expires.

SUPREME COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 10757) to provide for an additional term of the circuit court of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and for the appointment of one additional associate justice thereof.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask unanimous consent to have it considered in the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think such a bill as that ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. OATES in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10757) to provide for an additional term of the circuit court of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and for the appointment of one additional associate justice thereof.

Be it enacted, &c., That an additional term of the circuit court of the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall be held, for which juries shall be drawn in the same manner as is now provided by law, which said additional term shall be vested with both civil and criminal jurisdiction, and shall sit during every month in the year, for such part thereof as shall be necessary, except the month of August, to hear and determine, first, all cases of appeal from the police court, and, thereafter, such other causes, whether from the docket of the other circuit or of the criminal court, as the general term may assign to it for trial.

SEC. 2. That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate, one additional associate justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, which said additional associate justice shall have the same power, authority, and jurisdiction as now or hereafter may be exercised by any of the associate justices of the said supreme court, and shall be entitled to receive the same salary, payable in the same manner.

SEC. 3. That in all causes heard and decided by the supreme court of said District when sitting in general term, the justice rendering the decision of the court therein shall do so in writing, and shall file the written opinion of the court in such cause with the clerk of said court, to be kept as a part of the record therein.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. HEMPHILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred House bill 10757, respectfully report that they have considered the same.

Under the existing judicial system of the District of Columbia three of the judges sit in general term and constitute the court of appeals, and on the other three judges devolves the duty of holding the other courts of the District.

The general term sits continuously from the 1st of October until July, engaged in the hearing of causes every working day except Saturdays, which are devoted to consultations. It is usually about one year behind in the business on the docket.

The equity court sits eleven months in the year. In addition to the causes regularly put on the calendar, averaging one case a day, the judge has to hold a probate court. To this he only gives one or two hours in each week.

The circuit court sits ten months in each year and every working day in the week.

The criminal court also sits about ten months in each year and almost every day. In addition to the ordinary criminal business, which is sufficient to occupy the whole of its time, this court takes cognizance of all appeals from the police court. These consume probably one-fourth of the court's time, and as these appeals are often delayed for a year or more before being heard, the witnesses disappear, and the District attorney finds it impossible to secure convictions.

The third section of the bill simply provides that the decisions of the courts of the District, when sitting as an appellate tribunal, shall be in writing. There is no law requiring this now, and the decisions are generally made orally.

In view of these facts, and with the hope of expediting the administration of justice in the District, the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The committee has investigated this subject with a good deal of care. They have obtained considerable information as to the state of the dockets here, the administration of justice, and other matters which would properly come before them in making up their conclusion upon this subject. It is clear from the information we have that an additional justice of the supreme court is essential if the people in this District are to have justice administered as it is in the States and if we are to save expense to litigants and to other people far exceeding the increased expense of having an additional judge.

There is one matter of particular interest to the people of the District, and that is the keeping of the criminals here from the time when they appeal till the time they are tried. The expense of that if they remain in jail of course falls upon the District. These criminals are often held as long as one or two years before their cases can be reached, and the expense which is incurred in their maintenance will, I have no doubt, far exceed the salary which will be paid to this additional judge.

Another matter of very grave consequence to the people of the District who have property here is the fact that there is no judge who gives attention to the probate business of this District. The judge who holds the equity term of the court sits in that court every day of the week. He devotes from one hour to two hours every week to the consideration of the probate business, and people have to wait in the court perhaps six or eight hours till he can have time to come there and transact their business. Every man who is acquainted with the large business which devolves on trustees, administrators, and executors knows it is important time should be given to the investigation of business in order that people who have nobody to take care of them and are not able to take care of themselves shall not have their property wasted by those who ought to account for it.

These are the two principal reasons why there should be an additional justice in this District. There are many other reasons; but, unless some gentleman desires further information upon the subject, I will not stop to state to them but will ask that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I was not aware that this bill was pending, and therefore I am mainly dependent upon the statement in the report and the statement made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] as to the necessity of this proposed legislation, but the facts stated do not impress me with the belief that there is a real necessity for the creation of another judge in this District. There are already, I believe, six judges here, and the business of the District is divided among them, coupled with the courts held in banc. Judging from the experience of the States, it seems to me that that is an ample judicial force here, for a community not exceeding, perhaps, 200,000 people, especially when, as in this case, the business is concentrated within a comparatively limited area and no material commercial interests. I am very confident that a corresponding number of people with much larger commercial interests may be found in most sections of the country getting along reasonably well with a less judicial force than is now provided for this District.

I am impressed, sir, with the belief that we are increasing judicial offices too rapidly. An unusual number have been already created by this Congress. This House recently passed a bill creating an additional judge in one of the Territories; yet the fact now transpires that the business of that Territory is diminishing rather than increasing. I have looked hastily over the list of new offices, civil and judicial, created at the last session of the present Congress, and I have some knowledge of the bills that are still pending for the creation of other new offices. Some of those pending bills are more than likely to become law. Past experience demonstrates to me the reasonable certainty that when such measures come before the House they will receive approval, and therefore I do not address myself to this particular measure with any expectation that it is to be defeated; yet I do wish to enter my protest against the steady increase in the number of Federal officers and employments that is going on here so steadily.

The list furnished us (by the publication required by law to be made at the end of each session) of the new offices created and the number of salaries increased during the first session of this Congress will, it seems to me, arrest the attention of the people when it shall be brought to their knowledge. I regret exceedingly that at this time, when we are in the early years of a new administration, the necessity should seem to be discovered for creating new offices in fields where no such necessity was ever suggested in former years, and where there has been no material increase in the business of Government. This Congress seems to regard with favor the enlargement of the field of Federal employment, yet the antecedents of the party controling the Government have in all former years firmly resisted the creation of new offices unless most imperatively demanded by public necessity.

Mr. BRUMM. That is consistent with "retrenchment and reform."

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman says that is consistent with retrenchment and reform. I agree that it is not, and it is not reassuring that these measures are crowded upon us at this time in such unexampled number, and, what is still more surprising, with such almost uniform success.

Mr. LONG. Is not that an evidence that there was no occasion for "retrenchment and reform?"

Mr. HOLMAN. I can not answer that question, but I do say that I think it becomes this side of the House, when appeals are made for the creation of new offices, to take care, before heeding those appeals, to be reasonably certain that there is a necessity for the offices proposed. I am not willing to stand in the way of the creation of new offices when the public service really requires them. I view with alarm and apprehension the rapid growth of public employments under this Government. The party controling this House has not been accustomed to regard as a thing that should be encouraged the increase of the number of our fellow-citizens who shall live off the industry of the people. It has never been deemed wise in the past that special search should be made by the law-making power for places where new offices might be created.

For my own part I believe that in any field of governmental service the very smallest number of persons that can be employed consistently with the proper performance of the public duties and the proper administration of the Government, is the number that should be employed. I never see a bill brought forward proposing to create a new office without wishing to make the inquiry whether there is really an imperative necessity that the office shall be created. I see no such necessity for the creation of this office, and enter my objection to the passage of this bill, sir, not with any hope of defeating it, for from the beginning of this Congress down to the present time there has been, I believe, no case in which a bill of this character has been defeated. Nevertheless, I wish to enter my protest against such legislation.

Mr. BRUMM. Can the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] inform us whether this is a unanimous report?

Mr. HEMPHILL. This is the unanimous report of the committee, Mr. Chairman. In addition to what I have already said, I will state that when the population of this District was only 75,000 Congress thought proper to give them five judges; three of them, of course, sitting in the Supreme Court, so that they did not try causes on circuit. Since that time the population has been trebled, being now more than 200,000, and yet there are only six judges. My friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has, of course, a general objection to increasing the number of officials, and we all have some feeling of that kind; but when the business of the District is steadily increasing, when the population of the District has increased and is still rapidly increasing, when, in fact, you can make more by having an additional judge than by not having him, then it is simply a question of common sense whether the people of this District shall have a judicial force adequate to the proper and expeditious transaction of business and the proper administration of justice.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ask my friend from South Carolina, whether, looking over his own district, or his own State, and taking any population corresponding with that of this district, including even commercial communities and manufacturing districts (a class to which this city does not belong) he can point out any corresponding number of people where the judicial facilities are as great as they are now in this District?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I can not in my own section of country. But there is one consideration which the gentleman overlooks. If the litigation in this District were confined to people residing here, the gentleman's question would be a very pertinent one; but we know as a matter of fact that it is not. For instance, there are pending upon the calendar of the circuit court here between seven hundred and eight hundred cases for trial by jury. If there should be no new cases, it would take the court every working day for two years to get rid of this calendar; and the showing is that the number of cases is largely increasing every year.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is altogether the number of cases pending?

Mr. HEMPHILL. There are between seven hundred and eight hundred cases pending on the Calendar for trial by jury.

Mr. RYAN. And not one-quarter are ever tried.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is a comparatively small number—a very small number for so large a number of judges.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Only one judge can sit for the trial of those cases.

Mr. HOLMAN. But this business is divided up among six judges. I have just run over rapidly in my mind a number of districts in my own State, rivaling this District in population, but having not one-half or very little more than one-half of the judicial facilities of this district. Yet in those communities in my State there is a great deal more commercial activity than exists here. It ought to be borne in mind that in the District of Columbia the manufacturing or commercial interests are small; and in that respect it is a community as unlikely to have litigation as any community in the United States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But there are plenty of saloons.

Mr. HEMPHILL. This district court has jurisdiction of questions which are never heard of in the districts of Indiana to which my friend refers. The general term of this court has exclusive jurisdiction of all appeals from the Commissioner of Patents; and exclusive original jurisdiction of all mandamus and other extraordinary proceedings affecting the various heads of Departments of the General Government. Those are questions which take up much more time than questions arising from manufacturing interests would do.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask my friend from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] to yield to me for a few words upon this bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Certainly.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I have been somewhat impressed with the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], as I always am with his views upon questions of economy; and I am generally disposed to follow his lead upon these subjects. On this question, however, it seems to me we are to consider whether it costs more to keep prisoners in jail awaiting trial than to provide a judge in order to have their cases promptly disposed of. I have before me the report of the Attorney-General for the last fiscal year, 1886, and I see that in the District of Columbia it cost the United States $45,000 for the support of prisoners.

Mr. HOLMAN. And the whole expense is paid by the United States, is it not?

Mr. SPRINGER. One-half is paid by the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not the whole paid by the United States?

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, I presume this is all paid by the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; so that the District may very well be anxious to have an increase in the number of judges.

Mr. SPRINGER. The case is practically the same either way; for if the expense is paid by the United States, one-half would come out of the District of Columbia and one-half would be appropriated by Congress.

At the present time, as I was saying, the United States Government is paying $45,000 a year to support prisoners in this District. That is nearly three times as much as is paid by the United States for the support of prisoners in any State of the Union.

Mr. BRUMM. How much of that is for supporting prisoners awaiting trial, and how much for those already convicted?

Mr. SPRINGER. As to the expense of supporting those already convicted, of course there can be no change in that respect by a bill of this character, because they must serve out their sentences.

Mr. BRUMM. But the gentleman should be able to tell us what proportion of the amount he has named is for expenses of supporting prisoners awaiting trial.

Mr. SPRINGER. I can not say what proportion of the prisoners referred to are serving sentences, and how many are waiting to be tried.

But I assume that the expense of keeping prisoners in this District is entirely too large. For instance, in New York, a very large State, the item for expense of supporting prisoners of the United States, in the northern district, is $3,000; in the eastern district, $1,800; and in the southern district, which embraces the city of New York, $5,000, annually.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Is it not the fact that in the District of Columbia every violation of law, all misdemeanors of every description, are cases in which the party plaintiff is the United States, which is not the case in other districts, where there are courts representing the State or municipal authority? Is not that fact to be borne in mind in any comparison which may be made?

Mr. SPRINGER. That is what I was about to call attention to—that elsewhere the United States courts adjudicate only cases arising under the general laws of the United States, while in the District of Columbia the jurisdiction of these courts embraces all misdemeanors, appeals from justices of the peace, appeals from the Departments, mandamus cases in reference to Department business and the duties of ministerial officers, &c. The whole expense of maintaining the United States courts in this District for the last fiscal year amounted, according to the report of the Attorney-General, to the enormous sum of $137,000; and this does not include the salary of any judge, such salaries being provided for elsewhere. It embraces the fees of marshals, jurors, and witnesses, the support of prisoners, miscellaneous expenses, attorneys' fees which are assessed and follow the cases, clerks' costs, and the fees of United States commissioners.

It seems to me, therefore, there is great necessity in the District of Columbia for curtailing these expenses, and I am of the opinion that to furnish facilities for speedy trial is much more economical than these long delays keeping persons in prison waiting trial. I think this bill is in the line of economical administration.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before my friend from Illinois takes his seat I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. How does he account for the largely increased force, not only here but throughout the country, required within the last two years? How does he account for the fact that prior to that time no necessity was felt in regard to this increase my friend now speaks of?

Mr. SPRINGER. I account for it from the fact that during the last decade the population of the United States has increased over 25 per cent., and that our population is increasing at the rate of more than a million a year. The more our population increases, as a matter of course, the more persons will be required to administer our public affairs.

Mr. HOLMAN. But that does not answer my question. This increase of population has been going on all the time. How does it happen this large increase is required at this time?

Mr. HEMPHILL. It is because the criminals are now being brought to justice. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Ah!

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OATES reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10757) to provide for an additional term of the circuit court of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and for the appointment of one additional associate justice thereof, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL demanded the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand a division.

Mr. STEELE. Is it in order to move to recommit?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to inquire whether my colleague, who has been so much against increasing the hungry horde of a hundred thousand office seekers, has opposed this bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Yes, but feebly.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 62, noes 25.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 129, nays 96, not voting 92; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. HEMPHILL, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following additional pairs were announced for the rest of the day, namely:

Mr. BENNETT with Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts.

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. WILSON with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.

Mr. CABELL with Mr. CANNON.

Mr. MCCREARY with Mr. BUTTERWORTH.

Mr. LOWRY with Mr. IKE H. TAYLOR.

Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. MCCOMAS, on this vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask now to call up House bill 10758, which had not been returned from the Printing Office when it was called up before.

The SPEAKER. The hour has expired; but if there be no objection, the gentleman's matter may be considered as pending.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask that it be considered as pending.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will state again that this is the bill which was passed over, not having been received from the Printing Office in time to get it before the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DUNHAM. Has not the Speaker announced that the hour is up?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman called up the bill, and the Chair stated that the hour had expired. The gentleman thereupon asked unanimous consent that it might be considered as pending, so as to come up for consideration as unfinished business in the next hour allotted to that committee.

Mr. DUNHAM. How can the gentleman do that?

The SPEAKER. Only by unanimous consent.

Mr. DUNHAM. Then, I object.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Did I not call it up in time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not; the hour had expired a minute over, but the roll-call was not quite concluded within the hour.

WILLIAM R. CRANNA.

Mr. MORROW, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to the widow of William R. Cranna, deceased, late an employé of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to his salary for six months; and that the Clerk be further directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House the expenses connected with the last illness and funeral of said Cranna, said expense not to exceed $250.

AMENDMENT TO THE RULES.

Mr. OATES, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That after Monday, the 7th day of February, during the present session, one hour each day, immediately after the reading of the Journal, shall be devoted to the consideration of bills upon the Calendars, to which there are not ten objections.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I take the floor for the purpose of moving that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the unfinished business, being the bill (H. R. 7635) to consolidate certain bureaus of the Navy Department; but before that I desire to ask gentlemen who are opposing this bill if they will not agree to some limit of debate upon the pending section and all amendments thereto. We have debated the bill, I will state, for three days, and most of the debate has been directed to this pending section. I now ask gentlemen if they will not agree to limit debate upon the pending section and all amendments, say to twenty minutes?

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I shall not object, but I want five minutes myself.

Mr. HERBERT. Well, the gentleman shall have that.

Mr. GOFF. That section embraces all the bureaus of the Department.

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, sir.

Mr. GOFF. I do not think the debate ought to be limited to that time. It is too important a question.

Mr. HERBERT. That section has been already debated for three days nearly.

Mr. GOFF. I do not think so.

Mr. HERBERT. Nearly all of the debate has been applied to that section. I ask gentlemen to agree to limit the debate.

Mr. BOUTELLE. To what extent does the gentleman want to apply the limit?

Mr. HERBERT. On the pending section and all amendments thereto.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not think we want to limit debate on such an important question as that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Alabama.

The gentleman moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill indicated; and, pending that, the gentleman asks unanimous consent that the debate be limited to twenty minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I object.

Mr. GOFF. Regular order.

Mr. HERBERT. Then, Mr. Speaker, pending the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, I move that all debate upon the pending section and all amendments that may be offered thereto be limited to twenty minutes; and upon that I call the previous question.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Alabama a question so that we may understand his proposition. Your proposition is to limit debate as to all of these bureaus and all amendments that may be offered to this section to twenty minutes?

Mr. HERBERT. On all amendments to the pending section.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Which embraces all of these bureaus.

Mr. HERBERT. It embraces all the bureaus, of course; but we have had three days' debate on it already.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope the House will vote that down.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. HERBERT for the previous question; and on a division, there were—ayes 64 noes 23.

Mr. BOUTELLE. No quorum.

Mr. HERBERT. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HERBERT. Before the question is taken, I will ask gentlemen if they will consent to forty minutes' debate?

Mr. BOUTELLE. The proposition made here, as I understand it——

Mr. GOFF. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 124, nays 29, not voting 164; as follows (no quorum voting):

Mr. GOFF. I object.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. TUCKER with Mr. IKE H. TAYLOR, on this vote.

Mr. MATSON with Mr. HARMER, for the rest of the day.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, with Mr. THOMPSON, for the rest of the day.

Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. MCCOMAS, for the rest of the day.

The SPEAKER. On this vote the yeas are 124; the noes are 29. No quorum has voted.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Two messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 5692) for the relief of James B. Russell;

An act (H. R. 191) providing for the erection of a public building at Los Angeles, Cal.;

An act (H. R. 807) granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 7988) granting an increase of pension to Bryant Waters;

An act (H. R. 6313) to release unto the city of San Antonio, Tex., for its use as a public thoroughfare, certain portions of the military reservation near said city;

An act (H. R. 7192) to provide a school of instruction for cavalry and light artillery, and for the construction and completion of quarters, barracks, and stables at certain points for the use of the Army of the United States; and

An act (H. R. 4688) granting a pension to Josephine Da Costa Thomas.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HERBERT. I move a call of the House.

The question being taken on Mr. HERBERT'S motion,

The SPEAKER stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 62, noes 15.

So a call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, and the following named members failed to answer:

Adams, J. J.	Compton,	Hutton,	Rockwell,
Aiken,	Comstock,	Kelley,	Rogers,
Allen, C. H.	Cox, S. S.	Laird,	Rusk,
Bacon,	Davenport,	Lindsley,	Smalls,

Campbell, T. J.	Hermann,	Reese,	Woodburn.
Candler,	Hires,	Riggs,
Cobb,	Hiscock,	Robertson,

The SPEAKER. The doors will now be closed.

Mr. HERBERT. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call which I understand shows the presence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. It appears from the roll-call there are two hundred and forty-seven members present. The gentleman from Alabama moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The question being taken,

The SPEAKER stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HERBERT. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 76, noes 4.

Mr. GOFF. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is not necessary for a proceeding under a call of the House. The "ayes" have it, and further proceedings under the call are dispensed with. The question now recurs on the demand made by the gentleman from Alabama for the previous question on the motion to limit debate to twenty minutes. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 140, nays 11, not voting 166; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 574) for the relief of Robert Strachan.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask unanimous consent that the names of members voting be dispensed with.

Mr. BRADY. I object.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. COMSTOCK] is absent from the House on account of sickness.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. CUTCHEON with Mr. LIBBY, for the rest of the day.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, with Mr. McKINLEY, for the rest of the day.

Mr. HAMMOND with Mr. CASWELL, for the rest of the day.

Mr. BARBOUR with Mr. WAIT, for the rest of the day.

Mr. FORNEY with Mr. RYAN, on this vote.

The SPEAKER. Upon this question there are yeas 139, nays 12. No quorum has voted.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, before making the motion which I propose, I desire to make a very brief statement. We are attempting by this bill to effect a great reform—[cries of "Regular order!"]—in a Department where there has been more extravagance—— [Renewed cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. HERBERT. I move a call of the House, Mr. Speaker. I want the country to know who are the friends of this reform and who are opposed to it.

[Renewed cries of "Regular order!"]

The question was taken on ordering a call of the House; and there were—ayes 77, noes 6.

So a call of the House was ordered.

The roll was called, and the following-named members failed to answer:

Aiken,	Browne, T. M.	Daniel,	Gibson, Eustace
Anderson, C. M.	Bunnell,	Dargan,	Glass,
Bacon,	Candler,	Davenport,	Glover,
Ballentine,	Collins,	Davis,	Green,

Lindsley,	Reagan,	Snyder,	Winans,
Louttit,	Reese,	Spriggs,	Woodburn.
Lyman,	Rice,	Stewart, Charles
Mahoney,	Rockwell,	St. Martin,

The SPEAKER. The doors will now be closed. It appears that there are present two hundred and thirty-nine members.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and on that I call the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Before that resolution is offered, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] asks leave of absence on account of ill-health. If there be no objection the leave will be granted.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WHITE] also asks leave of absence for the remainder of this day on account of sickness. If there be no objection leave will be granted.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the resolution offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms take into custody and bring to the Bar of the House such of its members as are now absent without leave of the House.

The resolution was agreed to—ayes 85, noes 2.

Mr. JOHN M. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. GLASS, be excused. His family are about to leave for Tennessee this evening, and he has gone to see them off.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. GOFF. I move that the House take a recess until half past 7 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The House can not now take a recess.

Mr. GOFF. Then I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. HIRES, be excused, as he is at home ill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. SINGLETON, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. ROGERS, be excused on account of illness.

Mr. PEEL. I was about to make the same request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] has leave of absence. The Chair will state that it is not necessary to ask that any gentleman be excused who is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question for information. Under the previous order does the House take a recess at 5 o'clock to-day?

The SPEAKER. That is the order of the House.

Mr. LITTLE (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.). I move to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

The motion was not agreed to, there being—ayes 7, noes 76.

Mr. MCCREARY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MCCREARY. Under the previous order does not the House take a recess at 5 o'clock?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is it in order to have that order read at this time?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

At 5 o'clock p. m.,

The SPEAKER said: Under the order heretofore made the House now takes a recess until half past 7 o'clock this evening, the evening session to be devoted exclusively to the consideration of measures reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past 7 o'clock p. m.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the order under which the session of this evening is held.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on Tuesday, February 1, 1887, the House will take a recess at 5 o'clock p. m. until 7.30 o'clock p. m., and that the evening session shall be devoted exclusively to the consideration of such measures as may be presented by the Committee on Military Affairs.

SUPPORT OF FAMILIES OF ARMY AND NAVY OFFICERS.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire first to call up the bill (H. R. 8331) to regulate the pay of the officers of the Army and Navy who refuse or neglect to provide for the support of their families. My colleague on the committee, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DARGAN], has charge of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina does not appear to be in his seat.

Mr. BRAGG. I will proceed with the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That when any officer of the Army or of the Navy has been lawfully retired from active service, and such officer has a wife, or a child or children under age, or both wife and child or children, and shall refuse or neglect to provide for the same, the Secretary of War, if such officer belong to the Army, or the Secretary of the Navy, if he belong to the Navy, may apportion the pay and allowances of such officer between him and his wife and child or children, as he shall deem just and equitable, and pay over the same accordingly to him, her, or them.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I presume this bill is all right, but I would like to ask this question: Suppose that the wife of an officer has deserted her husband without just cause, would she receive a portion of the officer's pay under this bill?

Mr. BRAGG. Is the gentleman supposing a case where the wife with her children has deserted the officer?

Mr. BURROWS. With her children, or taking a part of the children with her, and leaving the rest with him.

Mr. BRAGG. All questions of that kind will be determined by the Secretary of War, or the Secretary of the Navy, when ordering the allotment. This bill simply gives the Secretary power when a proper case is presented to make a suitable allotment of the pay.

Mr. BURROWS. He may divide it as he thinks best?

Mr. BRAGG. Certainly.

Mr. FINDLAY. That is provided by the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC PARK, NEWPORT, R. I.

Mr. BRAGG. I am also instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to call up the bill (S. 1154) to authorize the city of Newport, R. I., to use the site of Fort Greene as a public park.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to allow the city of Newport, State of Rhode Island, to use the land belonging to the United States upon which is situated Fort Greene, in said city, as a public park, during the pleasure of Congress, and under such conditions as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

In lines 6 and 7 strike out the words "during the pleasure of Congress," and at the end of the bill add the following:

Provided, That such use of said property shall cease and be terminated whenever the Secretary of War shall elect and give notice of such election to the public authorities of said city; and upon such termination the United States may enter and reoccupy the same as upon a lease terminated; but no right or claim to damage by reason of such termination and reoccupation, nor for any cause growing out of any improvement made or other thing done by the said city under the right conferred by this act, shall accrue to said city or to any person against the United States, or any agent or officer thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROMOTION OF ARMY SURGEONS, ETC.

Mr. BRAGG. I am instructed to call up next the bill (H. R. 7819) to establish the order of promotion in the Medical Department of the Army. This bill is in charge of my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE].

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That assistant surgeons of the Army appointed under the act approved by July 28, 1866, who have served twenty years, shall be nominated and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appointed to the office of surgeon with the rank of major; and said service shall be estimated as is now done in computing service for longevity pay, except that service under present commission shall be counted from the date of said commission: Provided, That no such assistant surgeon shall be promoted unless he has been examined and found qualified for promotion by a duly constituted examining board in accordance with existing law: And provided further, That the whole number of officers in the Medical Department shall not be increased by this act.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

After the word "major," in line 7, insert "to date from the completion of such service."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEELE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ACCEPTANCE OF LANDS NEAR CHICAGO, ILL.

Mr. BRAGG. I next call up the joint resolution (S. R. 78) authorizing the Secretary of War to accept certain lands, &c., near Chicago, Ill.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accept deed and conveyance of a certain tract of land, when the State of Illinois shall cede jurisdiction of the same to the United States, described as follows: Known as the Highwood tract, in Lake County, Illinois, containing 598½ acres, lying on Lake Michigan, north of the city of Chicago, and distant 25 miles; this land being a tract donated by the Commercial Club of Chicago (represented by John A. Doane, C. B. Farwell, and Alexander P. McClurg), for military purposes.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

At the end of the resolution add the following:

"Provided, That the title proposed to be conveyed shall be approved by the Attorney-General of the United States as sufficient to vest the fee-simple of the said above-described land in the United States, free of incumbrance, before the Secretary of War shall formally accept the same."

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I would advise the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] not to urge this measure, as I shall not consent to its passage unless there is a quorum here.

Mr. BRAGG. Perhaps I can make a satisfactory arrangement with the gentleman from Iowa by allowing this bill, with the amendment, and also any amendment which the gentleman may choose to offer, to go over under the previous question, to be acted on in a full House, giving the gentleman fifteen, twenty, or thirty minutes to state, if he chooses, his objections to the bill.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Not at all, Mr. Speaker. I can make no agreement about it. I dislike very much to take this attitude, but I do so because I am decidedly opposed to the passage of the bill. I will state my reasons, if the gentlemen wants to hear them.

Mr. BRAGG. At a meeting of this kind it is better to avoid any controversy and contest, even if we have to lose a bill.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I think so.

Mr. BRAGG. I will, therefore, ask that this bill lie over.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be passed over, if there is no objection. The Chair hears none.

BREVET RANK FOR INDIAN SERVICE.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6758) to authorize the President to confer brevet rank on officers of the Army for gallant services in Indian campaigns.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered, at his discretion, to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint to brevet rank all officers of the Army now on the active or retired list who have been recommended for brevet rank by their commanding general for gallant service in action against hostile Indians since January 1, 1867.

The amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was read, as follows:

Strike out "commanding general" and insert "department commander."

The amendment of the committee was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CUTCHEON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ACCOUNT BETWEEN TERRITORY OF MONTANA AND UNITED STATES.

On motion of Mr. BRAGG, by unanimous consent, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 129) authorizing the Secretary of War to adjust and settle the account for arms, ammunition, and accouterments between the Territory of Montana and the United States; and the same was considered in the House.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust and balance the account for arms, ammunition, and accouterments between the Territory of Montana and the Government of the United States, by crediting said Territory with the balance now standing against it on said account.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILITARY TELEGRAPH LINE FROM SANFORD TO POINT JUPITER.

Mr. BRAGG. The next bill to be called up is a bill (H. R. 4626) for the construction of a military telegraph line from Sanford, Fla., to Point Jupiter, Fla., and the establishment of a signal station.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BRAGG. My colleague on the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. VIELE] has charge of the bill.

Mr. VIELE. I move, by unanimous consent, that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. VIELE. I move that the House bill be laid upon the table, as I propose to take up and pass the bill (S. 2652) for the construction of a military telegraph line from Sanford, Fla., to Point Jupiter, Fla., and the establishment of a signal station, which has already been passed by the other Chamber.

The House bill was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Senate bill is also in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BRAGG. I think it should not be properly there, as it takes no money from the Treasury and makes no appropriation.

Mr. VIELE. I move that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the Senate bill, and it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $17,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury unappropriated, for the construction of a military telegraph line on the eastern coast of the State of Florida, from a point at or near Point Jupiter, Florida, to Sanford, Florida, or to the nearest point of railroad communication, and for the establishment of a station for the taking of meteorological observations and the display of storm-signals at Point Jupiter; the said line and station to be constructed, maintained, and operated under the direction and control of the Secretary of War, in connection with the establishment of signal and display stations for the observation and report of storms for the benefit of commerce and agriculture.

Mr. BRAGG. I think we should have some explanation of the bill.

Mr. VIELE. Mr. Speaker, this bill is intended to make telegraph communication between a point known as Sanford, on the coast of Florida, which is now the lowest station of telegraphic operations on the Atlantic coast, and Point Jupiter, 200 miles distant. Point Jupiter is the point all vessels make coming from the Atlantic to turn the Capes of Florida into the Gulf of Mexico, and the signal stations at that point indicate the condition of the atmosphere and the probability of storms in the Gulf of Mexico. That is a point where there have been numerous wrecks causing loss of property and life.

This bill is asked for by the entire mercantile marine of the Atlantic coast. It is deemed of the utmost importance, not only for the safety of property but for the safety of life.

An estimate has been made by the Chief of the Signal Service as to probable cost, and there is a recommendation on his part this line should be established.

The Senate bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VIELE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDNANCE STORES FOR DAKOTA.

Mr. BRAGG. I move that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8030) to authorize the Secretary of War to credit the Territory of Dakota with certain sums for ordnance and ordnance stores issued to said Territory, and for other purposes, and the bill and amendments reported by the Committee on Military Affairs be taken up and considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas it appears from the records of the Ordnance Bureau of the War Department that the Territory of Dakota stands charged with the sum of $38,625 for ordnance and ordnance stores issued to said Territory during the year 1867, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved April 7, 1866, entitled "An act to provide arms and ammunition for the defense of the inhabitants of Dakota Territory," and the then governor of said Territory, to wit, ————, stands charged therewith and with said amount, all of said ordnance and ordnance stores having been drawn by the Territory of Dakota and used for the purpose of aiding the General Government in the protection of the borders of said Territory against Indian invasions and depredations; and

Whereas said ordnance was issued to the inhabitants of said Territory as in said act directed, and all of the same has been lost and rendered useless in the service: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause the Territory of Dakota to be credited on its ordnance account with the sum of $38,625, and the then governor of said Territory with said amount, upon the delivery to the United States, at such place as the Secretary of War may direct, of all such arms and other ordnance stores remaining in the custody of said Territory of the issues thereof under said act.

The amendments of the committee were read, as follows:

In line 5, strike out "thirty-eight" and insert in lieu thereof "twenty-seven;" and in line 6 strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifty;" also in lines 6 and 7, strike out the following, "and the then governor of said Territory with said amount:" so it will read:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause the Territory of Dakota to be credited on its ordnance account with the sum of $27,650, upon the delivery to the United States, at such place as the Secretary of War may direct, of all such arms and other ordnance stores remaining in the custody of said Territory of the issues thereof under said act."

The amendments of the committee were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

Mr. BRAGG. I call up now for consideration the bill (H. R. 10804) to effect a re-arrangement of grades of office in the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army; of which my colleague, General WHEELER, has charge.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army shall consist of one Adjutant-General, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of brigadier-general; four assistant adjutants-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of colonel; six assistant adjutants-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of lieutenant-colonel; and six assistant adjutants-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of major: Provided, That the vacancies in the grade of colonel and lieutenant-colonel created by this act shall be filled by the promotion by seniority of the officers now in the Adjutant-General's Department.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I think we should have some explanation of this bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, this bill I will state does not create any additional officers; it simply has the effect of increasing the rank of certain officers, already commissioned, in the Adjutant-General's Department.

In all armies of the world the adjutant-general is the chief of staff, and generally has a rank higher than that of all other officers of the staff; but owing to the fact that in the United States Army promotion has been slower in the Adjutant-General's Department than in any other branch of the service, in nearly every case the Adjutant-General is inferior in rank to all the other officers of the staff of the commanding officer. Another reason for this is that it not infrequently happens that a junior officer is giving orders to a superior; and in addition the officer whose dignity and position is highest is compelled to accept a junior place in selecting quarters, and in all of the other emoluments conferred upon officers of the Army.

The report in this case shows that the four officers who will be promoted to lieutenant-colonel from major have held the office of major for periods ranging from eighteen to twenty years.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. And in one case as much as twenty-five years.

Mr. WHEELER. In one case for twenty-five years.

This will cost the Government about $3,000 more than under the present rule. And I will say further that it is recommended by the Secretary of War, by the General commanding the Army, and by General Schofield, the commander of the Department of the East.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that it is entirely unnecessary to detain the House by discussing any further a matter which goes so far toward remedying what has been an injustice, which necessitates so small an expenditure of the public money, and which succeeds in effecting a better organization of the Army. It does justice to officers who, through no fault of their own, have been unjustly dealt with for years.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let me ask my friend from Alabama how many officers are effected by the provisions of this bill?

Mr. WHEELER. Two have their rank increased from lieutenant-colonel to colonel, and four from major to lieutenant-colonel, making six in all.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I will simply add to what has been said by the gentleman from Alabama that the bill is warmly recommended by the Secretary of War, by the General of the Army, and by the Adjutant-General.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHEELER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT BARRACKS, NEWPORT, KY.

Mr. BRAGG. I now call up the bill (H. R. 6066) to authorize the Secretary of War to improve and enlarge the barracks at Newport, Ky., and ask that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from its further consideration, and that the bill be considered in the House.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to make such improvements as he may deem necessary upon the grounds and buildings belonging to the United States and now occupied as a barracks at the city of Newport, in the county of Campbell, in the State of Kentucky, and to purchase in or near the said city and in the said county such additional ground as he may consider necessay for the proper enlargement of said barracks, and to erect necessary buildings thereon; but the cost of such improvements and enlargement shall not exceed the sum of $100,000, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be used for that purpose, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Speaker, I offer, by instruction of the Committee on Military Affairs, the following amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill which has been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to authorize the sale of the United States barracks property in the city of Newport, Ky., and the purchase of a new site and the erection of buildings thereon.

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"SECTION 1. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to sell the property now owned by the United States in the city of Newport, State of Kentucky, known as the United States barracks property, at public auction or private sale, as may be in his judgment most advantageous to the Government. Before disposing of said property the Secretary of War shall cause the grounds to be subdivided and plotted in blocks, streets, and alleys, corresponding as nearly as may be with the plat of the city of Newport in which said grounds are situated, and having reference to the location of buildings thereon. He shall cause the lots and parcels to be appraised separately, and shall not sell any lot or parcel for a less amount than its appraised value. The expenses of advertisement, appraisement, survey, and sale shall be paid out of the proceeds of said sale, and the remainder shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to purchase at as early a day as practicable a suitable site for the location of barracks, officers' quarters, and other necessary buildings in the county of Campbell, State of Kentucky, and as near the city of Newport as suitable grounds for the purpose can be procured; but the same shall not cost more than $60,000, which sum or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purpose aforesaid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

"SEC. 3. That the sum of $100,000 is also hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in the erection of necessary and suitable buildings and the construction of other necessary improvements upon the grounds purchased by him under the second section of this act. But before said purchase is completed the title of the ground proposed to be acquired shall be approved by the Attorney-General of the United States.

"SEC. 4. That the Secretary of War shall transmit to Congress a report showing the amount realized from the sale of said property in the city of Newport, the expenses connected with such sale, the price paid for the new site, and the location and description of the same.

"SEC. 5. That the provisions of the first section of this act shall be inoperative until the Secretary of War shall have obtained for the Government of the United States the option of the right to purchase such suitable land as he may select for a site at a price to be approved of by him."

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I hope we will have some explanation of this.

Mr. BRAGG. I regret exceedingly that my friend from Ohio has omitted to read the report of the Secretary of War. The Secretary specially recommends, in his report this year, the sale of the present site for barracks at Newport, for the reason, first, that they are too small, and that a portion of them in very high water in the Ohio are overflowed and made untenable. And therefore he recommends that such measures be taken as will secure a proper site near Newport. We are informed that the value which the property will net to the Government, which this bill provides shall be paid into the Treasury, will be about $60,000.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And the cost of the new site?

Mr. BRAGG. It is provided in this bill no sale shall be made so as to place ourselves in the hands of speculators until we first get an option to buy at a reasonable price. We hold this property till we have that option. The bill is as carefully guarded, I think, as any bill can be to protect the interests of the United States.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am in favor of the passage of this bill, but I want the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to answer a question which I have seen suggested in the newspapers.

Mr. BRAGG. That is what the chairman of the committee is here for, if he can.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is the title of the Government to the present location such that the Government can sell it, or will the Government by abandonment of it for its present purposes endanger the title so that there might be a claim of reversion to anybody?

Mr. BRAGG. There is nothing of that kind that has ever been suggested by the Department, but on the contrary we are assured there is no reversionary interest to anybody.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have no doubt about the propriety of changing the site. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

The substitute was adopted.

The bill as amended, by the adoption of the substitute, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BBAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILITARY POST NEAR DENVER, COLO.

I now call up for consideration the bill (S. 2477) making an appropriation for the establishment and erection of a military post near the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado.

I ask that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from further consideration of the bill, and that it be now considered in the House.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and hereby is, appropriated for the establishment and erection of a military post or garrison near the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, said appropriation to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War: Provided, That before the expenditure of any of the appropriation hereby made, good and sufficient title shall be made to the United States of not less than 640 acres of land suitable for such purpose, without cost to the United States.

The Committee on Military Affairs recommended the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert as follows:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to establish a military post near the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, at some suitable site to be selected by the Lieutenant-General of the Army, and approved by him, provided that a good and sufficient title, to be approved by the Attorney-General of the United States, be first made to the United States, free of cost, of not less than 640 acres of land in a compact body, including the site so selected.

SEC. 2. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $100,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in the commencement of the work of constructing the necessary buildings, quarters, barracks, and stables for the post to be established under the provisions of this act: Provided, That no part of such money shall be expended until the State of Colorado shall have ceded to the United States jurisdiction over the tract of land which may be selected under the provisions of this act.

Mr. BRAGG. If any member desires an explanation I shall be happy to give it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I should like to hear some explanation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

The substitute recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs was agreed to.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let us now have an explanation of the necessity of this expenditure.

Mr. BRAGG. I have the honor to hold in my hand a letter from the Secretary of War in which he recommends that Denver should be one of the points at which one of the permanent military posts of the country should be located, and that an appropriation should be made for that purpose. I hold also in my hand a letter from the Lieutenant-General in which he states that in establishing the line of posts continuous from the northern frontier through to Texas at points where there are great railroad centers affording convenience for the transmission of troops anywhere over what may be hostile territory, Denver is one of the most available points that can be selected. The ground that has been looked over by the Lieutenant-General is decided by him to be feasible for the purposes of the transmission of troops, and this proposition is pronounced to be valuable as a sanitary measure for having troops changed to that point from warmer climates, as from the Rio Grande. He states also that by carrying out the system of consolidating the Army in posts where there will be something for the officers to do and where the troops can be drilled, Fort Lyon in Colorado, Union in New Mexico, Fred Steele in Wyoming, and the cantonment in the Uncompahgre country in Colorado will be dispensed with, and the little posts can all be taken up and consolidated, which will operate to the advantage of the Army not only for its well-being and discipline, but for convenience in case a demand is made for its use.

Mr. EDEN. I believe this is an appropriation for the commencement of the work. Is there any estimate how much it will cost?

Mr. BRAGG. I will state to the gentleman who asks me this question that the Senate bill recommends $250,000. The House committee thought it unadvisable to make so large an expenditure. They thought it better to commence with $100,000. That will be enough to start the post and make it, perhaps, nearly a four-company post; and then, as the troops are withdrawn from the other forts, we can, by moderate appropriations, increase its size until we have a twelve-company post and take in all the small forts that are now scattered around through that country. And, Mr. Speaker, as I notice that my friends who are asking these questions are great on the economic side, I wish to say to them that it is vastly more economical in the transportation of supplies for cavalry, infantry, and artillery, to do it by railway than to have to hire wagon-trains to haul your supplies 50, 100, or 150 miles, across the country. So, on the score of economy, I have no doubt that my friend from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] will join hands with me.

Mr. EDEN. But the gentleman has not answered my question. I ask him to give some estimate as to what this work would cost.

Mr. BRAGG. As I have said, I think a hundred thousand dollars will make a four-company post, or nearly so, and then it is for Congress to say whether we shall appropriate any more or not.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HOSPITAL STEWARDS, U. S. A.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill (S. 1119) to provide for the appointment of hospital stewards in the United States Army, and to fix their pay and allowance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRAGG. Then I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be considered in the House.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Committee on Military Affairs recommended an amendment, striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof a substitute; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the hospital corps of the United States Army shall consist of hospital stewards, acting hospital stewards, and privates; and all necessary hospital services in garrison, camp, or field (including ambulance service) shall be performed by the members thereof, who shall be regularly enlisted in the military service; said corps shall be permanently attached to the medical department, and shall not be included in the effective strength of the Army nor counted as a part of the enlisted force provided by law.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is empowered to appoint as many hospital stewards as, in his judgment, the service may require; but not more than one hospital steward shall be stationed at any post or place without special authority of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 3. That the pay of hospital stewards shall be $50 per month, with the increase on account of length of service as is now or may hereafter be allowed by law to other enlisted men. They shall have rank with ordnance-sergeants and be entitled to all the allowances appertaining to that grade.

SEC. 4. That no person shall be appointed a hospital steward unless he shall have passed a satisfactory examination before a board of one or more medical officers as to his qualifications for the position, and demonstrated his fitness therefor by service of not less than twelve months as acting hospital steward; and no person shall be designated for such examination except by written authority of the Surgeon-General.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of War is empowered to enlist, or cause to be enlisted, as many privates of the hospital corps as the service may require, and to limit or fix the number, and make such regulations for their government as may be necessary; and any enlisted man in the Army shall be eligible for transfer to the hospital corps as a private. They shall perform duty as wardmasters, cooks, nurses, and attendants in hospitals, and as stretcher-bearers, litter-bearers, and ambulance attendants in the field, and such other duties as may by proper authority be required of them.

SEC. 6. That the pay of privates of the hospital corps shall be $15 per month, with the increase on account of length of service as is now or may hereafter be allowed by law to other enlisted men; they shall be entitled to the same allowances as a corporal of the arm of service with which on duty.

SEC. 7. That privates of the hospital corps may be detailed as acting hospital stewards by the Secretary of War, upon the recommendation of the Surgeon-General, whenever the necessities of the service require it; and while so detailed their pay shall be $25 per month, with increase as above stated. Acting hospital stewards, when educated in the duties of the position, may be eligible for examination for appointment as hospital stewards as above provided.

SEC. 8. That all acts and parts of acts in so far as they contravene the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

Mr. BRAGG. I am instructed by the committee to offer an amendment to the substitute striking out, in line 2, section 6, the word "fifteen" and inserting in lieu thereof "thirteen."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEELE. I move to amend section 3, line 1, by striking out "fifty" and inserting "forty-five."

Mr. BRAGG. I accept that amendment.

Mr. LAIRD. I object. I object to the reduction of the pay of hospital stewards; they do not get any too much.

The amendment was agreed to—ayes 44, noes 15.

The substitute as amended was then agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

"A bill to organize the Hospital Corps of the Army of the United States, to define its duty and fix its pay."

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ROAD TO RICHMOND NATIONAL CEMETERY.

Mr. BRAGG. I call up the bill (H. R. 7209) to authorize the construction of a graveled road to the Richmond National Cemetery, near Richmond, Va.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be considered in the House.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $25,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of constructing a graveled road from the terminus of Broad street at Chimborazo Park, near Richmond, Va., to the Richmond National Cemetery; said money to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, or so much thereof as may be necessary for said purpose.

SEC. 2. That before any money shall be expended as aforesaid, the title to the right of way shall be granted to the United States free of cost.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ROAD TO NATIONAL CEMETERY, VICKSBURG.

Mr. BRAGG. I now call up the bill (H. R. 8593) for the repair and preservation of the road to the national cemetery heretofore constructed by the Government, leading from Vicksburg to the national cemetery adjacent thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask unanimous consent that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the bill be considered in the House.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be used in the repair and preservation of the road heretofore constructed by the United States, leading from the city of Vicksburg to the national cemetery adjacent thereto, the same to be expended by the keeper or person in charge of said cemetery, under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOLDIERS' HOME WEST OF ROCKY MOUNTAINS.

Mr. BRAGG. I call up the bill (H. R. 2075) to provide for the location and erection of a branch home for disabled volunteer soldiers west of the Rocky Mountains. My colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANDERSON], has charge of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be now considered in the House.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers are hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to locate, establish, construct, and permanently maintain a branch of said National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to be by such board located at such place in the States west of the Rocky Mountains as to said board shall appear most desirable and advantageous; and that the sum of $250,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to the said board of managers, and by them expended in the purchase of the necessary land, and the erection of suitable buildings thereon, for said branch of said National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

SEC. 2. That all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who served in the volunteer forces of the United States, and who are disabled by disease, wounds, or otherwise, and who have no adequate means of support, and by reason of such disability are incapable of earning their living, shall be entitled to be admitted to said home for disabled volunteer soldiers, subject to like regulations as they are now admitted to existing branches of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

SEC. 3. That as soon thereafter as practicable from the approval of this act the said board of managers shall secure the necessary lands and commence the erection of suitable buildings for the use of said branch.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs was read as follows:

In line 10 of section 1 strike out "two," and insert "one;" so as to make the appropriation $150,000.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. I move to amend the amendment reported by the committee by striking out the words "and fifty," so that the amount upon the appropriation made by the bill shall be $100,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire, with the consent of the gentleman from Ohio, to make an inquiry or suggestion. This is a proposition to build another soldiers' home.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. Yes, on the Pacific slope.

Mr. CANNON. On the Pacific slope. Now I would be glad to know whether the Committee on Military Affairs has considered a proposition to build a home of this character in each State.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. We have not.

Mr. CANNON. I think it very proper that such a proposition should be considered, for the reason that in many of the States—certainly in my own—a home at State expense has been completed, and is not sufficient to accommodate those entitled to admission. Especially do I think this proposition worthy of consideration and adoption when I take up the returns made by these soldiers' homes. While these institutions are apparently open for the reception of soldiers without regard to their residence, yet in fact there is a much larger proportion admitted from the State where the home is located than from other States. For instance, in the State of Ohio, about equal in population to the State of Illinois, there are admitted to that home twice as many from Ohio as from my own State.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. And the people of the State of Ohio are erecting a soldiers' home at their own expense.

Mr. CANNON. That may be true.

Mr. STEELE. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] in thinking there ought to be a home for each State. The proposition, however, has never been referred to our committee.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman is familiar with this bill. Why not amend it by incorporating such a provision?

Mr. STEELE. This is a proposition to accept on the part of the General Government a donation of land from the State of California for a home already established by the State.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. The people of the State of California at this time own 900 acres of land, upon which they have already established a State home. The value of that property is estimated at from eighty to one hundred thousand dollars. A proposition was made by the proper authorities in California that if the Government would make an appropriation of $100,000 for this home, they would cede the whole of that property to the Government, with the view that upon it there might be erected with this money necessary buildings, thus establishing a home west of the Rocky Mountains.

Mr. CANNON. The Government, then, as I understand, takes the soldiers' home ceded by the proper authorities of the State of California and relieves the State from the support of that home.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. Yes, sir. It is to be a general home for persons from all the States.

Mr. NEGLEY. I think the gentleman from Ohio has overlooked the fact that this is not a State home, but was organized by old soldiers in California, and has been maintained by them through donations from various sources; but being unable any longer to support the large numbers who come there, they ask this assistance from the General Government.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. That is correct.

Mr. NEGLEY. It is not a State home in the sense in which that term might be understood.

Mr. CANNON. After the explanation which has been made I have no disposition to embarrass, by any objection or amendment, the passage of this bill. If it were earlier in the session I would seek to have action by the Committee on Military Affairs for the establishment of additional homes in certain States where I think they ought to be erected; and hereafter I shall endeavor, at least so far as my vote may go, to see that any measure of this character which may be adopted shall look to the establishment of these homes generally throughout the country in the different States.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. I shall be with the gentleman on that proposition.

The amendment of the committee as amended was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF RULES AND ARTICLES OF WAR.

Mr. BRAGG. I move to take from the House Calendar a bill (S. 1490) reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the one hundred and third of the Rules and Articles of War be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following words:

"No person shall be tried or punished by a court-martial for desertion in time of peace, and not in the face of an enemy, committed more than two years before the arraignment of such person for such offense, unless he may meanwhile have absented himself from the United States, in which case the time of his absence shall be excluded in computing the period of the limitation: Provided, That said limitation shall not begin until the end of the term for which said person enlisted."

SEC. 2. That no judge-advocate, or officer acting as such, before any court-martial, shall hold any communication with the court, or with any member of the court, concerning any question, matter, or thing involved in or having any relation or bearing, directly or indirectly, upon the case upon trial, after the court shall be sworn and before judgment is pronounced, except in the hearing and presence of the accused on trial and of his counsel, if he shall have appeared with counsel, and then such communication shall be entered upon and made part of the record of the case.

SEC. 3. That every sentence of a court-martial dismissing an officer from the service shall be inoperative until the President shall approve the same in person; but the order promulgating the sentence and judgment, after such approval, shall be "by order of the President," and signed by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 4. That if any person, being a civilian not subject to military law, having been duly summoned to testify under the laws of the United States, shall refuse or neglect to appear before either a court-martial or court of inquiry, at the time or place mentioned in the process, or if upon his appearance he shall refuse to testify, he shall be liable to the same penalties as would be incurred for a like offense on the trial of a suit in the district court of the United States; and the same power to punish for contempt, and to the same extent, is hereby conferred upon courts-martial and courts of inquiry as is conferred upon courts by the provisions of section 725 of the Revised Statutes of the United States: Provided, however, That no witness shall be required to make any disclosure or discovery which shall tend to criminate him, either under the laws of the United States, or the laws of any State or Territory, or the laws of any foreign state.

SEC. 5. That hereafter, in time of peace, all offenders in the Army charged with offenses now punishable by a regimental or garrison court-martial shall be brought before a summary court, which shall consist of the commissioned officer of the line second in rank at the post or station of the offender, who shall hear and determine the offense and adjudge the punishment that shall be inflicted, and shall also make a record of his proceedings, with a statement of the evidence, and submit the same to his post commander, who shall indorse thereon his action of approval or disapproval, and forward the same to the department commander for examination and action, and to be filed in the office of the judge-advocate of the department; and upon the approval of the same by the department commander, such post commander shall order the execution of the sentence: Provided, That the punishment in such cases shall be limited to that now authorized to be inflicted by a regimental or garrison court-martial. The President may make such rules and regulations governing such courts as to the offenses and punishments as he may deem just and proper, not inconsistent herewith.

SEC. 6. That in all trials and proceedings before any military tribunal, the party accused, or whose action or conduct is under investigation, may, at his option, be sworn and testify in his own behalf, the same as any other witness.

SEC. 7. That in addition to the qualifications now required by law, no person shall be appointed a chaplain in the Army who is not of good constitution and in sound bodily health, and who is more than forty years of age; and hereafter it shall be a part of the duty of post chaplains to have the charge of and act as instructors in post schools.

SEC. 8. That the pay of officers upon the retired-list shall be 75 per centum of the full pay the officer was entitled to receive when retired, and no more.

SEC. 9. That the pay of an enlisted man upon the retired-list shall be 75 per cent. of his pay at the time of his retirement, and $8 per month in lieu of allowances.

SEC. 10. That the Army ration be increased by the addition of one-quarter of a pound of Irish potatoes a man per day, or its equivalent in dried or desiccated potatoes when the issue of fresh ones is impracticable.

SEC. 11. That when there is no land available or suitable upon a military reservation for company or post gardens, the Quartermaster's Department shall, whenever it is practicable, under the direction of the post commander, rent suitable land for that purpose that is attainable most convenient to the post, at the rate of 2 acres per company for each company desiring to cultivate a garden for its use, and procure from the Department of Agriculture the necessary supply of seeds for the same.

SEC. 12. That captains of companies may re-enlist, in their respective companies, to serve one, two, three, four, or five years, in their discretion, any men discharged therefrom of good moral and military character: Provided, That such enlistment is made in ten days from the date of their discharge: And provided further, That hereafter no man who has been convicted of desertion or who has been discharged for disability shall ever be re-enlisted in the service of the United States: And provided further, That whenever an enlisted man shall be convicted of the crime of desertion from the military service of the United States, he shall, in addition to any other punishment that may be inflicted, be indelibly tattooed with India ink with the letter D, an inch long, upon his back, between the lower points of his shoulder-blades.

SEC. 13. That hereafter, in addition to the inspections now required by law of the Pay Department and the accounts and business of its officers, there shall be inspections made by officers of that Department, detailed by the Secretary of War, whenever in his judgment the interest of the public service will be promoted thereby.

SEC. 14. That all acts and parts of acts in so far as they contravene or are repugnant to the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. BRAGG. I move to amend the amendment by striking out section 8, and in lieu thereof inserting the following:

Hereafter no increase of pay shall be allowed or paid to any officer by reason of service on the retired-list.

Mr. CURTIN. What is the use of that?

Mr. PETTIBONE. To that amendment I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided: That nothing in this act shall be held to apply to any officer who has been retired on account of wounds received in line of duty, or to any officer who served in the field during the war.

Mr. WOLFORD. Before the vote is taken on this bill, which I regard as a dangerous and bad one, I desire to say a few words.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will first entertain remarks on the amendment to the amendment. After that the Chair will entertain general debate.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I desire to ask whether the adoption of this amendment will not put that section 8 into the bill and prevent any subsequent motion to strike it out?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The adoption of the amendment to the amendment will simply add to the proposed section the words which the Clerk has read. If the amendment as amended is agreed to it will substitute the amendment as amended for section 8.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Let the amendments be again read so members may understand them.

The amendment and the amendment to the amendment were again read.

Mr. BRAGG. I expected, sir, that there would be opposition to this clause. I have seen the beneficiaries swarm about the corridors of the Capitol. I have been notified through the press, and I understand members of the House have been notified by anonymous letters calling their attention to the injustice, the wondrous injustice of this bill.

I had hoped, sir, we would be able to dispose of our business to-night without being called upon to enter into any discussion at length. I shall confine myself to a simple statement of the section as it is proposed to be amended by the committee.

Mr. DUNHAM. I suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin he will get along with the rest of his bill if he will withdraw this proposition.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. This bill can never pass with that tattooing clause in it without a quorum.

Mr. BRAGG. Then move to strike it out and test the sense of the House when we come to consider that part of the bill.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Why not strike it out now?

Mr. BRAGG. We can not go to the tail end of the bill and begin to amend it there. When we reach the provision you can make your motion and test the sense of the House on it.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It is a brutal proposition, and one that I will not assent to.

Mr. STEELE. I want to say right here——

Mr. BRAGG. It is not necessary to enter into a discussion of that now.

Mr. STEELE. I only want to answer the statement while it is fresh, that so far from that being a brutal section it is one that is calculated to save the reputation of the Army.

From three to eight thousand desertions have been going on from year to year.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. If it is going to be discussed here, I want to be heard upon it myself.

Mr. BRAGG. The provisions of this bill as presented here by the committee are simply in effect a re-enactment of the law as it was, or was understood to be, when the retired-list was created. It was the law as it stood at the time of the creation of the retired-list in 1881. Congress in the original act provided as a reward for service to officers upon the active-list, as it was understood, that for each five years which they served in the field their longevity pay should be increased by the addition to the salaries they were entitled to of 10 per cent. for every five years, provided that the percentage as a whole should never exceed 40 per centum of the salary. That is for active service in the field, and for twenty years, when retired, they drew their full pay with 40 per cent. added at the time of retirement.

Mr. STEELE. Not necessarily for service in the field.

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir; but for active service.

Then follows a provision for the retired-list, and that provides that officers on the retired-list shall receive 75 per centum. Now after fifteen years, yes, almost twenty years, practically, under that law, with a uniform construction, the Supreme Court took upon itself to decide a question as to the understanding of Congress, and on a question involving military ethics, and they determined that these gentlemen on the retired-list who run banks, who practice as attorneys, who are claim agents in the city of Washington, who are clerks in the Pension Office, who are clerks in the Treasury, and clerks in every other Department of the Government, were officers on the active-list, and sufficiently so to receive that additional 40 per centum provided by the law to which I have referred. Under that decision this Government has paid out in round numbers more than one and a half millions of dollars, and have paid out annually more than $270,000, to which it has now grown.

The question before the House is not one of sympathy or sentiment, but simply this: Are the men who are upon the retired-list, who are transacting business for themselves, within the purview of that class of men for whom the law was originally designed, giving them for each five years of service 10 per cent. in addition to their pay up to the amount of 40 per cent.?

An officer upon the retired-list has no commission; an officer upon the retired-list has no command. He has a titular rank, and nothing more. The retired-list is the pension-list of the regular Army; and are we prepared to say that a man serving upon the pension-rolls for five years shall have his pension increased 10 per cent.? Do we say that to the other pensioners of the Government?

Now as to the particular class that make complaint, and who will be covered by that proviso, I will state that there are men on the list retired for wounds who are as well to-day as the day they entered the service. There are men on the retired-list who have no disability whatever. There are chaplains on the retired-list who served but two years, and are drawing this additional 40 per cent. There is not a chaplain on the list who served to exceed fifteen years, and yet each one is drawing this additional percentage for the prayers I suppose sent up for us as he labors in his addresses to the Eternal Being.

The officers who have attracted the attention and sympathy of my friend from Tennessee [Mr. PETTIBONE] are officers who were transferred from the volunteer army without ever having received their disability. One man, perhaps, out of one hundred regiments from a State, who had political influence enough, after he had lost a leg in the volunteer service and was unfitted to perform duty in the regular Army, secured an appointment into the regular service, and was transferred to a regiment, remained unassigned, and in a few months went on the retired-list, while his companion, who stood side by side with him in the breach, is remitted to a pension-list of fifteen, twenty-four, thirty-six, forty, or fifty dollars a month, while he draws $150 and wants 40 per cent. more.

A strict application of the rule and a revision of that retired-list as it ought to be revised would reject every man from it who did not receive his disability in the Army, for which that retired-list is provided. These men are not satisfied with the benefits they have obtained over their comrades, but being located here in Washington they beset members of Congress and ask that that discrimination against their comrades shall be increased 40 per cent. I say justice to them only requires of us that we shall give to them the retired-pay to which they were entitled under the law when they were retired. We shall give them that, although it does discriminate against their comrades in the volunteer service, and we think with that they ought to be thankful. If this list is to be ever broken down it will be broken down by the inordinate greed of those men who have been fortunate enough to get upon it—men who served from two to four, or six, seven, eight, or nine years in the regular Army, coming out and going into business for themselves, and then asking to have the same addition to their pay which is made to the men who are doing service in the field.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, the amendment will not be adopted, but that the amendment proposed by the committee will be adopted.

Mr. CUTCHEON. May I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question?

Mr. BRAGG. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Does the chairman of the committee understand this takes away from any of these officers the longevity pay already accrued, or does it prevent the further accumulation of pay?

Mr. BRAGG. Simply the further accumulation.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It stops this accumulation.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. There is no necessity for wasting further time over this bill. I shall object to its passage in any event.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that he can move to amend it.

Mr. WOLFORD. It can not be amended.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It could not be properly debated or amended in a week.

Mr. BRAGG. All right. I withdraw the bill.

Mr. DURHAM. I suggested to the gentleman some time ago that the bill should be withdrawn.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I submit that the bill can not now be withdrawn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER). There having been no decision on any part of the bill, it can be withdrawn.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It has been under debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is the right of the gentleman who called up the bill to withdraw it at any time before there has been a decision on any part of it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Only certain sections of the bill have been objected to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill has been withdrawn.

PRESCOTT AND ARIZONA RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BRAGG. I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 9339) granting the right of way to the Prescott and Arizona Central Railway Company across the Fort Whipple Military Reservation, in Arizona. This bill my colleague from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] has in charge.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be considered in the House.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Prescott and Arizona Central Railway Company, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the Territory of Arizona, are hereby granted the right of way, 100 feet in width, for their said railroad, across and through the Fort Whipple Military Reservation, located in said Territory of Arizona, not to interfere with any buildings or improvements on said reservation, and the location of the line of said right of way to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

The Committee on Military Affairs recommended the following amendment:

In line 7 strike out the word "Fort" and after the word "Whipple" insert the word "barracks"; so that it will read: "and through the Whipple Barracks Military Reservation."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. CAREY. There can be no objection in the world to this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the bill as amended to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. What is the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will again report the bill.

The bill was again read.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CAREY. I move that the title be amended so that it will read:

A bill granting the right of way to the Prescott and Arizona Central Railway Company across the Whipple Barracks Military Reservation in Arizona.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRAGG moved to consider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to consider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHEYENNE AND NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BRAGG. I now call up the bill (H. R. 8037) to authorize the Cheyenne and Northern Railway Company to build its road across the Fort Russell and Fort Laramie Military Reservations.

Mr. CAREY. I suggest that that bill was disposed of in the last session. A Senate bill identical with this passed both Houses.

Mr. BRAGG. All right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the bill which was passed was a Senate bill. In the absence of objection the House bill (H. R. 8037) will be laid on the table.

There was no objection and it was so ordered.

FREMONT AND MISSOURI VALLEY RAILROAD.

Mr. BRAGG. I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 10048) to authorize the Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley Railroad to build its road across the Fort Meade Military Reservation. This is a bill which is on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is in Commitee of the Whole House.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be considered in the House.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley Railroad Company, a corporation in the State of Nebraska, be, and is hereby, granted a right of way, not to exceed 100 feet in width, across the Fort Meade Military Reservation, upon such line as may be approved by the Secretary of War.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH FORT BLISS RESERVATION.

Mr. BRAGG. I call up the bill (S. 388) to grant the right of way through the Fort Bliss Military Reservation to the Rio Grande and El Paso Railroad Company.

The SPEAKER, pro tempore. That bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be considered in the House.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there is hereby granted to the Rio Grande and El Paso Railroad Company right of way 100 feet wide, on such route as the Secretary of War may designate, through the Fort Bliss Military Reservation, Texas.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RESTORATION OF PROPERTY.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 2208) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to deliver to the rightful owners the contents of certain boxes deposited in the Treasury Department by the Secretary of War. The bill is on the House Calendar.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to the proper claimants or owners, any silverware, jewelry, portraits, watches, or other articles deposited in the Treasury of the United States by the Secretary of War, as property captured by the United States Army during the late war, and now in the possession of the United States Treasury: Provided, That in all cases proof satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury be made by the said claimants of the ownership and identification of the said silverware, jewelry, portraits, watches, or other articles.

The Committee on Military Affairs recommended an amendment, adding at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided further, That all of said articles remaining in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury not identified to his satisfaction in two years from the passage of this act shall be sold by the said Secretary of the Treasury at public auction, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary may prescribe; and the net proceeds thereof shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I think there ought to be some explanation of this bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The bill can be explained in a very few words. The articles to which it relates were taken possession of during the late war by the commandant of the post at Point Lookout, which was used as a place for the confinement of confederate prisoners. These articles were the effects of deceased prisoners, which were left there and have been in the keeping of the Government, in the hands of the Secretary of War, and of the Secretary of the Treasury, ever since. The amendment to the bill was draughted by the Secretary of War, and the entire bill is approved by both the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Treasury. Its object is to get this property (consisting of watches, rings, jewelry, and a little plate), which was left upon the hands of the Government in the manner I have stated, during the late civil war, returned to its legitimate owners if they can be found.

Mr. MILLS. Have you the names of the parties from whom any of these articles were taken?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I do not know that we have; but if we have they are in the possession of the Secretary of the Treasury. Claimants are to have two years in which to be identified and make their claims, and if within two years they do not appear, identify themselves, and make their claims, then the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make sale of these articles under such regulations as he may prescribe.

Mr. MILLS. Are all of these articles the effects of prisoners?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes, sir.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed

Mr. CUTCHEON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THE TWIGGS SWORDS.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I now call up the bill (H. R. 10790) authorizing the President to return the Twiggs swords.

The bill is a substitute for a joint resolution which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to deliver up the so-called "Twiggs swords," which are now in his custody, and which were captured or seized by General B. F. Butler, in 1862, to such person, or to the legal representatives of such person, as was owner thereof at the time they were captured or seized. For the purpose of determining who was such owner the Secretary of the Treasury shall send the petitions of all persons who may claim said swords to the Court of Claims. Said court shall thereupon examine such claimant or claimants, and such other legal evidence as may be offered in behalf of such claimant or claimants, and determine who was such owner and who is entitled to receive said swords under the provisions of this act. Said court shall certify their judgment to the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, however, That all claims for said swords shall be filed with the Secretary of the Treasury within three months from the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CUTCHEON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HENRY EAST.

Mr. FINDLAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 8922) for the relief of Henry East.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. FINDLAY. Then I ask that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be considered in the House.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the military record of Henry East, late a private in Company H, Second Maryland Volunteers, by removing therefrom the charge of desertion: Provided, however, That the said East shall not be entitled to or receive any back pay, bounty, pension, or other allowance of any kind whatsoever.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FINDLAY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARTIN COUGHLIN.

Mr. STEELE. On behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs, I call up the bill (H. R. 8319) for the relief of Martin Coughlin.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is in Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. STEELE. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be now considered in the House.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the record of Martin Coughlin, late a private in Company A, Thirty-fifth Indiana Volunteers, so as to show he was absent with leave, and to grant said Coughlin an honorable discharge.

Mr. STEELE. I move to amend by inserting after the word "leave," in line 6, the words "from February 28, 1864, to May 3, 1886."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEELE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ROBERT W. SPANG.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I call up the bill (H. R. 9446) for the relief of Robert W. Spang.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar will be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and it will be considered in the House.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove from the rolls and records in the office of the Adjutant-General of the United States Army the charge of desertion against Private Robert W. Spang, late of Company B, Ninety-third Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ERMENTROUT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARTIN H. M'CHESNEY.

Mr. BRAGG. I call up the bill (H. R. 5289) affirming the action of the President of the United States in annulling and revoking an order dismissing Martin H. McChesney from service in the armies of the United States, and honorably discharging said McChesney from said service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is in Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be now considered in the House.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas Martin H. McChesney, late a captain in the Second Regiment New York Volunteer Mounted Rifles, was, by an order from the War Department, erroneously and improperly dismissed from the service of the Government for absence without leave, when the said McChesney was, and had been for many months prior thereto, a prisoner of war in the hands of the enemy; and

Whereas by reason of his erroneous and improper dismissal, as aforesaid, the said McChesney is, under the rulings and decisions of the accounting officers of the Government, deprived of certain pay and allowances to which he would otherwise have been entitled by reason of his services: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the action of the President of the United States in revoking and annulling said order of dismissal, and honorably discharging said officer from the service as of date of May 11, 1865, be, and the same is hereby, affirmed; and the accounting officers of the Government are hereby authorized and directed, in the settlement of the accounts of the said McChesney, to pay to him the same pay and allowances that he would have been entitled to receive had no such order of dismissal been issued as aforesaid in his case.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

In lines 5 and 6 strike out "May 11" and insert "March 18."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FRED B. BARNES.

Mr. BRAGG. I call up the bill (H. R. 8591) directing the Secretary of War to cause the name of Fred B. Barnes to be entered as a private on the muster-roll of Company I, Seventh Tennessee Cavalry, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar will be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and it will be considered in the House.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the muster-roll of Company I, Seventh Tennessee Cavalry, the name of Fred B. Barnes, as private, as of the 1st day of February, 1864, with the following remarks: "Captured by the confederates with his regiment on the 24th day of March, 1864, at Union City, Tenn., and sent to Andersonville, Ga., where he died in prison of chronic diarrhea, February 16, 1865." And the proper accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to settle the accounts of the said Fred B. Barnes for pay, bounty, and commutation of rations from February 1, 1864, to February 16, 1865, deducting any and all payments which may have been made him, and pay the same to the heirs of said Barnes. And so much money as may be necessary therefor, in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, is hereby appropriated for such purpose.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE D. PAUL.

Mr. LAIRD. On behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs, I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6937) for the relief of George D. Paul. I move that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be now considered in the House.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That in view of the faithful services rendered by George D. Paul as a member of Company A of the Fourth Regiment of Michigan Infantry Volunteers, during the war of the late rebellion, he be regarded in the administration of the pension laws as though no charge of desertion had been made against him upon any records of service prior to that in the said Fourth Regiment of Michigan Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LAIRD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM FIGLEY.

Mr. CUTCHEON. On behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs, I call up the bill (H. R. 5935) to remove the charge of desertion against William Figley. I ask that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be now considered in the House.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove from the records of the War Department the charge of desertion against William Figley, late a private in Company A, Eleventh Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, and that he give to the said Figley an honorable discharge.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CUTCHEON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE LEMON.

Mr. BRAGG. I call up, on behalf of the committee, the bill (H. R. 5056) for the relief of George Lemon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar will be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and it will be considered in the House.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the records of the War Department in such a manner as to relieve of the charge of desertion the name of George Lemon, formerly a member of Company G, Fourth Regiment United States Infantry.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

T. J. PAYNE.

Mr. BRAGG. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 1710) for the relief of T. J. Payne. I ask that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be now considered in the House.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to remove the charge of desertion made against T. J. Payne, late a private in Company F, Second Tennessee Mounted Infantry, and to place him on the muster-rolls of said company.

The amendment reported by the committee, to strike out, in line 5, the words "mounted infantry," and insert "cavalry," was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FRANKLIN W. M'CAULEY.

On motion of Mr. FINDLAY, the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6535) to close the account of Franklin W. McCauley; and it was considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That to close the account for disbursements of Franklin W. McCauley, late a first lieutenant in the Ninety-eighth Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, required to allow and credit him the sum of $750, amount of debit items found by them in settlement of his accounts, per statement of differences, dated Treasury Department, Third Auditor's Office, February 16, 1883.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FINDLAY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HENRY B. JAY.

On motion of Mr. LAIRD, the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1449) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Henry B. Jay; and it was considered in the House as in Committee on the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now standing upon the records of the War Department against the name of Henry B. Jay, late of Company C, Seventy-third Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and to grant him an honorable discharge, with the same pay, bounties, and benefits he would have been entitled to if the charge of desertion had not been entered against his name.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read a third time, and passed.

Mr. LAIRD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

STEPHEN O'CONNOR.

On motion of Mr. STEELE, the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calender was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 798) for the relief of Stephen O'Connor; and it was considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Second Lieut. Stephen O'Connor, of the Twenty-third Infantry, late a first lieutenant in the Twenty-third Infantry, a first lieutenant of infantry in the Army of the United States, with his original rank and date of commission; and that he shall be assigned to the first vacancy occurring in his grade in the Twenty-third Infantry.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. How did this officer happen to get out of the service?

Mr. STEELE. This is the case of an officer who was erroneously put out of the service. The President undertook to reappoint him, but failed to get him back in his proper place. The officer is now in the service, and this bill merely provides he shall be restored to the rank to which he is entitled.

Mr. McMILLIN. What took him out of the Army?

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] will explain the matter.

Mr. PETERS. This officer was court-martialed, but it was afterward discovered that a mistake had been made, and he was restored by President Hayes. He was a first lieutenant, but was only restored by the President as a second lieutenant. This merely puts him back to the position he would occupy if he had not been erroneously put out of the Army.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does it give him any arrears of pay of the higher rank until he assumes that rank?

Mr. STEELE. It does not.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEELE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PURCHASE OF ARMS.

On motion of Mr. CUTCHEON, the bill (H. R. 1686) to repeal certain provisions of the act approved March 3, 1875, relating to the purchase of arms for the use of the States, was taken from the House Calendar and read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That so much of section 3 of an act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875, as provides that so much of the appropriations between the 1st of January, 1861, and the 9th of April, 1865, under the act of April 23, 1808, therein referred to, as would have been used for the purchase of arms to be distributed to the several States that were in rebellion shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay to those States, respectively, the amount of the balance due them which remained undrawn in consequence of said proviso in the appropriation bill of 1875, to the end that the credit lost to the States of Alabama, Florida, North Carolina, and South Carolina under the annulling proviso in the said act of March 3, 1875, be restored to said States.

The amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out the following:

And out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay to those States, respectively, the amount of the balance due them which remained undrawn in consequence of said proviso in the appropriation bill of 1875, to the end that the credit lost to the States of Alabama, Florida, North Carolina, and South Carolina under the annulling proviso in the said act of March 3, 1875, be restored to said States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I will make a brief explanation. Under the act of 1808 certain amounts were distributed among the several States for militia and arms. During the rebellion certain States did not draw them. Under the act of 1873 they were permitted to be credited with those amounts and draw them. That was in force but two years when in the appropriation bill of 1875 it was ordered to be covered into the Treasury. This simply repeals that paragraph of the act of 1875 and allows them to have credit as the other States did. The amount is small, only a few thousand dollars.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CUTCHEON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM J. MULVEY.

On motion of Mr. BRAGG, the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7996) for the relief of William J. Mulvey, and it was considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President is hereby authorized to revoke so much of General Orders No. 46, headquarters Department of West Virginia, April 4, 1865, as relates to and directs the dismissal from the Army, with loss of all pay and allowances, of Second Lieutenant William J. Mulvey, of Company D, Second Regiment West Virginia Veteran Volunteers, and to grant him an honorable discharge of that date, and that the military record of said Mulvey be amended accordingly: Provided, That said Mulvey shall receive no pay or allowances after the date of said order of dismissal.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES ROACH.

Mr. BRAGG. I now call up the bill (H. R. 228) for the relief of James Roach, and ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from its further consideration, and consider it in the House.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be removed from the records the charge of desertion now uncanceled and standing against James Roach, late a private in Company E, Seventeenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES W. KINGON.

Mr. WHEELER. I call up the bill (H. R. 9860) to correct the record of the military service of James W. Kingon, and ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from its further consideration, and consider it in the House.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to correct the record of the military service of James W. Kingon, late of Company E, Twenty-second Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, and of Company H, Forty-second Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, and to set aside the approval of the proceedings and the findings and sentence of a court-martial which was convened at Camp Irwin, August 26, 1865, pursuant to orders from the headquarters of the Second Division, Fourth Army Corps, of June 28, 1865, in so far as said proceedings, findings, and sentence refer to or have any effect.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHEELER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CAPT. JAMES H. BONE.

Mr. WHEELER. I now call up the bill (H. R. 9486) to correct the military record of Capt. James H. Bone, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from its further consideration and put it upon its passage.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the military record of Capt. James H. Bone, late of Company D, Thirty-fifth Regiment of Ohio Infantry Volunteers, be changed so as to show that he was entitled to the rank of captain to date from September 30, 1864; and that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Capt. James H. Bone, late of Company D, Thirty-fifth Regiment of Ohio Infantry Volunteers, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the pay and emoluments of a captain in the Army of the United States for a period of five months and twenty-seven days, that amount being now due the said Capt. James H. Bone for his services from the 30th day of September, 1864, to the 27th day of March, 1865.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHEELER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SILAS D. BALDWIN.

Mr. NEGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 19) for the relief of Silas D. Baldwin, and put it upon its passage, with the amendments recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The joint resolution was read at length.

The committee recommend the following amendments:

(1) Strike out the preamble.

(2) Insert after the word "to," in the fourth line, the words "be corrected so as to."

The resolution will then read as follows:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the records of the War Department to be corrected so as to recognize the said Colonel Silas D. Baldwin as the Colonel of the Fifty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry from the 30th day of June, A. D. 1863, to the date of the muster out of service of said regiment, and to grant the said Colonel Baldwin an honorable discharge from the service of the United States, bearing date the same as that of the muster out of service of the said Fifty-seventh Regiment: Provided, That by reason of this resolution or of the amendment of the record of the said Silas D. Baldwin, hereby provided for, the said Silas D. Baldwin shall receive no pay, allowance, or pension for any period or disability subsequent to the said 13th day of June, 1863."

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NEGLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ISAAC CRAWFORD.

Mr. STEELE. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7176) for the relief of Isaac Crawford, and put it upon its passage in the House.

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Whereas Company F of the Third Tennessee Mounted Infantry was, its time having expired, mustered out of service, so far as the records of the company show, on the 30th of November, 1864, but on the same day, and before disbandment, was ordered from Knoxville, Tenn., to the neighboring county of Greene, to repel a force of the enemy; and

Whereas Isaac Crawford, a member of said company, while strictly obeying orders, was captured in actual conflict and taken as a prisoner of war to Richmond, Va., and there held until exchanged on March 1, 1865: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the Adjutant-General of the Army be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant an honorable discharge to the said Isaac Crawford, to date from March 1, 1865, in place of the discharge granted him dated November 30, 1864.

The committee recommend the following amendment:

Strike out, in the 5th line, the date "March 1," and insert "March 22."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEELE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM N. CANADY.

Mr. BRAGG. I now call up the bill (H. R. 6712) for the relief of William N. Canady.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the Committee of the Whole House will be discharged from the further consideration of this bill.

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to amend the military record of William N. Canady, late a private in Company A, Eighth Regiment Iowa Veteran Volunteer Infantry, and grant him an honorable discharge, so that he may draw all arrears of pay, bounty, and other allowances to which he would be entitled had not the charge of manslaughter been made, and for which he was subsequently pardoned.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PHILIP TAYLOR.

Mr. BRAGG. I now call up the bill (H. R. 4727) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Philip Taylor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the Committee of the Whole House will be discharged from the further consideration of this bill.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the records to be so amended as to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Philip Taylor, late a member of Company B, of the One hundred and fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and that an honorable discharge be granted the said Philip Taylor, with all the pay and other emoluments due him at date of expiration of his term of enlistment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being duly engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN ROCKWELL.

Mr. LAIRD. I ask to call up the bill (H. R. 3600) for the removal of the charge of desertion from John Rockwell, late a private in Company F, One hundred and twenty-first Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the Committee of the Whole will be discharged from the further consideration of this bill.

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the charge of desertion now standing on the rolls and records in the office of the Adjutant-General of the United States against Private John Rockwell, late of Company F, One hundred and twenty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteers, war of 1861, be, and the same is hereby, removed; and said soldier having been regularly and honorably discharged from the service of the United States, the Adjutant-General of the United States is hereby directed to so correct the rolls and records in his office that said John Rockwell shall be restored to all his rights and privileges as an honorably discharged soldier.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LAIRD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM A. WIGHAMAN.

Mr. LAIRD. I call up for consideration from the Private Calendar the bill (H. R. 4709) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William A. Wighaman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the Committee of the Whole House will be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and it will be considered in the House.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William A. Wighaman, late a member of Company G, Fifth Pennsylvania Reserve Volunteers.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LAIRD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CAPTAIN EDMOND G. FECHÉT.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I call up for consideration from the Private Calendar the bill (H. R. 1173) to correct the record of Capt. Edmond G. Fechét.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the Committee of the Whole House will be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and it will be considered in the House.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That in order to correct the record of Capt. Edmond G. Fechét, of the Eighth Regiment of Cavalry, United States Army, and fix his relative rank as provided in section 1219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to commission the said Edmond G. Fechét a captain in the Eighth Regiment of Cavalry aforesaid, to date from the 23d day of May, 1870, that being the date his present commission as captain would have been dated had not an error been made in the first arrangement of the lieutenants of said regiment: Provided, That the issuing of such commission shall not entitle said Fechét to any extra pay or compensation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CUTCHEON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANDREW J. EDGERLY.

Mr. BRAGG. I call up for consideration from the Private Calendar the bill (H. R. 10353) for the relief of Andrew J. Edgerly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the Committee of the Whole House will be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and it will be considered in the House.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to so amend the military record of Andrew J. Edgerly, late a first lieutenant of the Fourth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, as to grant to him an honorable discharge as of March 10, 1863.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM C. SPENCER.

Mr. BRAGG. I call up for consideration from the Private Calendar the bill (H. R. 9905) for the relief of William C. Spencer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the Committee of the Whole House will be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and it will be considered in the House.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That William C. Spencer, late a lieutenant in the Second Infantry, and more recently a captain in the Seventeenth Infantry, United States Army, is hereby relieved from any liability to the United States for moneys received by him for disbursement as a lieutenant in the Second Infantry and as a captain in the Seventeenth Infantry; and that the proper accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to close all accounts of said William C. Spencer as such lieutenant and captain in accordance with the intent of this act: Provided, That the amount for which credit shall be given under the provisions of this act shall not exceed the undermentioned amounts, to wit: On account of recruiting, $92.63; on account of Quartermaster's Department, $151.75; and on account of subsistence of the Army, $132.06; making a total of $376.44.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALFRED HEDBERG.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. I call up for consideration from the Private Calendar the bill (H. R. 38) for the relief of Alfred Hedberg.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the Committee of the Whole House will be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and it will be considered in the House.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be, and hereby is, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Alfred Hedberg (late a captain in the Fifteenth Infantry) a captain of infantry in the Army of the United States, with his former rank and date of commission; and that he, the said Alfred Hedberg, shall be assigned to the first vacancy of his grade occurring in the infantry arm of the service: Provided, That said Alfred Hedberg shall receive no pay for the time he was out of service, but only from the date of his appointment under this act.

The Committee on Military Affairs recommended the following amendment:

In lines 9 and 10 strike out the words "infantry arm of the service" and insert in lieu thereof "Fifteenth Regiment of the United States Army."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to hear the report read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report which had been submitted by Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I ask that the further reading of the report be dispensed with. I do not know that any one asked for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asked for it.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the report.

Mr. T. J. CAMPBELL. I ask that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The report in full is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 38) for the relief of Captain Hedberg, beg leave to report:

Your committee have carefully read and considered the testimony in this case, and have endeavored to look at the case in all its phases, that justice might be done the party complaining. We find that Alfred Hedberg was born in Sweden, and educated there in the military service of his native country, and on the breaking out of our civil war came to this country to participate in the wars of this country, enlisted as a private soldier, and by his energy and soldierly conduct won, in the course of time, a commission of captain in the Fifteenth United States Regulars; in the meantime acquired our language, and became greatly attached to the institutions of his adopted country.

Fortune favored him until about 1872, when a charge was made against him, involving his standing as a gentleman and officer; but when fully investigated by a Regular Army officer, Captain Hedberg was acquitted of the charge and fully sustained. Later, in the same year, he was charged with three charges, subdivided into thirteen specifications. Captain Hedberg was put under arrest and under guard, and he was taken for trial to Santa Fé, a distance of 400 miles from his post, and was not furnished with a copy of the charges until four days before trial; but at that time we find the prosecution had their witnesses already at hand and ready for trial.

We find five of the prominent witnesses on the prosecution were officers in the Army, who in a short time thereafter were court-martialed and dismissed the service, and others of the witnesses we find to be camp-followers, drunkards, harlots, and Mexican greasers, wholly unworthy of belief, and the court must have violated every principle of the law of evidence to arrive at the result by them reported in their findings and sentence.

Your committee cannot find sufficient testimony to support any one of the charges or any part thereof, nor is there sufficient testimony to support a civil action much less the grave charge which, if the accused was guilty, would dismiss him from the service and disgrace him forever.

The testimony is weak and flimsy, and will convince any one that the court was controlled by something other than evidence. We find the court in some instances find Captain Hedberg guilty, but say they "attach no criminality." We find that the one hundred and sixth Article of War, Revised Statutes, page 241, volume 1, is as follows:

"ART. 106. In the time of peace no sentence of a court-martial directing the dismissal of an officer shall be carried into execution until it shall have been confirmed by the President."

Strange as it may seem, here was an officer court-martialed in the time of peace, and dismissed without the confirmation of the President; in fact the proceedings were never submitted or even sent to him for confirmation, and we have the anomaly of an officer dismissed the service by a court-martial in open violation of law and of the rights of the accused, and without the confirmation of the President; yet he was dismissed, and a great wrong perpetrated, which should be corrected as far as possible.

Your committee find that Captain Hedberg does not ask pay or other emoluments, but that this unjust and illegal sentence be set aside, and the President authorized to appoint him to the first vacancy of the grade of captain in the Fifteenth United States Infantry (his old regiment), and thus restore him as far as possible to the place he was unlawfully deprived of.

Your committee beg to report that Captain Hedberg sustains an excellent reputation in private life, and his record as a soldier is of the first order.

The Committee on Military Affairs in the Forty-eighth Congress examined this case and reported favorably, and as that report contains many details not set out in this report we make the report in this case so made in the Forty-eighth Congress a part hereof, and marked Exhibit A.

Your committee report the bill (H. R. 38) back with an amendment, as follows:

Strike out, in the ninth and tenth lines, the words "infantry arm of the service," and insert in lieu thereof "Fifteenth Regiment of United States Army."

And your committee ask that the bill so amended do pass.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HOTEL AT FORTRESS MONROE, VA.

Mr. NEGLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the joint resolution (S. R. 73) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a permit to John F. Chamberlin to erect a hotel upon the lands of the United States at Fortress Monroe, Va., with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the joint resolution will be considered in the House.

There was no objection.

Mr. NEGLEY. The Committee on Military Affairs report as a substitute for the Senate joint resolution the House joint resolution (H. Res. 208) having the same title.

The Senate joint resolution (S. R. 73) was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant permission to John F. Chamberlin to build a hotel upon the lands of the United States at Fortress Monroe, Va., upon such site and with such plans and dimensions as may be approved by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the State of Virginia, by its General Assembly and governor, shall, by proper legal enactment, give the consent of said State to the erection of such hotel, and that the building or buildings erected shall be removed, at the expense of the owner or owners, whenever the Secretary of War shall so direct; and no claim for damages by reason of such removal shall be made upon the Government of the United States: And provided further, That the buildings so erected shall be subject to State and national taxation as other property.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant permission to John F. Chamberlin to build a hotel, with its appurtenances, upon the military reservation of the United States at Fortress Monroe, Va., in accordance with the plans, dimensions, and specifications submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs, July 21, 1886, and embodied in the report of that committee, upon such site or location on said reservation as shall be assented to by the Secretary of War: Provided, however, That the said hotel building or buildings shall be fully completed within two years subsequent to the date of such approval, and with the further understanding that all the buildings constructed under the authority herein granted shall be destroyed or removed at the expense of the owner or owners, whenever military exigencies require the same to be done and the Secretary of War shall so direct; and no claim for damages by reason of such destruction or removal shall be made upon the Government of the United States: And provided further, That the State of Virginia, by its General Assembly and governor, shall, by proper legal enactment, give the consent of said State to the erection of said building or buildings as a condition-precedent: And provided further, That the building or buildings so erected may be made subject to State and national taxation the same as other property."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion to strike out all after the enacting clause in the Senate resolution, and to adopt the amendment which has been read.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs a question: whether or not the Legislature of Virginia meets within sufficient time to enable Mr. Chamberlin to carry out the provisions of the bill?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. They may be called together in extra session.

Mr. TUCKER. The legislature will not meet until next winter in regular session.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Why not pass the Senate bill? I understand there is no provision of that character in it.

Mr. BRAGG. That is the reason the House committee did not adopt it.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I presume the committee did not consider the point I have suggested. I ask the chairman of the committee whether he will not consent to pass the Senate bill?

Mr. BRAGG. I do not think the Senate bill is a proper bill. I do not, however, desire any discussion over this.

Mr. LIBBEY. I shall insist upon a quorum.

Mr. NEGLEY. I trust the gentleman will state his objections to the bill. Its provisions have been very carefully guarded, and I hope that before making any captious opposition he will state his objections.

Mr LIBBEY. I do not care to take up the time of the House in that way to-night, and I do not propose to do it; but I shall call for a quorum upon that bill.

Mr. NEGLEY. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that that is hardly fair to a proposition which is intended to remove a monopoly. Such a course seems scarcely fitting in the friends of an existing hotel that is seeking to maintain a monopoly on the public domain, and I hope the gentleman will state the grounds of his opposition to the bill other than the mere defense of that monopoly.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Would there be any objection to inserting a clause against pooling? [Laughter.]

Mr. NEGLEY. Does the gentleman insist upon his objection?

Mr. LIBBEY. I shall certainly insist upon a quorum.

Mr. NEGLEY. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have no desire——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. NEGLEY] withdraw the report?

Mr. NEGLEY. No; I do not withdraw it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question then is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The question being taken,

The SPEAKER pro tempore declared that the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LIBBEY. I ask for a division.

Mr. NEGLEY. Too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will put the question again.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 29, no 1.

Mr. LIBBEY. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LIBBEY] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. NEGLEY] to act as tellers.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, to ask permission to withdraw the bill.

Mr. NEGLEY. I will withdraw it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. STEELE. There has been a vote, and I ask that the bill be allowed to go over until to-morrow morning, so that we may have a vote upon it when there is full House.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. LIBBEY. I object.

Mr. CURTIN. That motion will certainly prevail.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. NEGLEY] withdraws the bill.

Mr. STEELE. I object to the withdrawal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has the right to withdraw it. There has been no action. The question was taken on agreeing to the amendment, but no quorum voted and no decision was had, and that being so, the gentleman has a right to withdraw the bill.

Mr. NEGLEY. I should insist upon action if any result could come from it, but as the gentleman [Mr. LIBBEY] is determined to make a factious opposition, I think I had better withdraw the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is withdrawn.

HENRY DURKEE.

Mr. BRAGG. I call up the bill (H. R. 8620) for the relief of Henry Durkee, and I ask that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from its further consideration, and that the bill be considered in the House.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas Henry Durkee was enrolled and served as a private in Company B, Second Regiment of Wisconsin Infantry, from the 20th day of February, 1862, until the 11th day of April, 1862, when he was discharged, and also afterwards enrolled and served as a private in Company E, Fifth Regiment of Wisconsin Infantry, from the 27th day of August, 1864, until the 17th day of May, 1865, when he was discharged, both of said enrollments and terms of service being under the name of Henry Grant, the same being his step-father's name; and

Whereas since his discharge he has assumed his right name, to wit, Henry Durkee: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be authorized and directed to issue to Henry Durkee a discharge from each of the above-named regiments, under the name of Henry Durkee, and is hereby directed to correct the records so as to make it appear that Henry Durkee served in Company B, Second Regiment of Wisconsin Infantry, from the 20th day of February, 1862, until the 11th day of April, 1862, and also served in Company E, Fifth Regiment of Wisconsin Infantry, from the 27th day of August, 1864, until the 17th day of May, 1865.

The Committee on Military Affairs recommended an amendment, adding at the end of the bill the following:

Provided, That before the discharges are issued to Henry Durkee he shall file satisfactory proof with the Adjutant-General of the Army that he is the identical person who served in Company B, Second Wisconsin Infantry, and Company E, Fifth Wisconsin Infantry, under the name of Henry Grant.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHNSON S. PRALL.

Mr. BRAGG. I call up the bill (H. R. 329) for the removal of the charge of desertion against the record of Johnson S. Prall.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to remove any charge of desertion which may stand on the records against Johnson S. Prall, late a private in Company I, First Regiment Michigan Engineers and Mechanics.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HENRY LINEBAUGH.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 4260) for the relief of Henry Linebaugh, late of Company A, Third Tennessee Mounted Infantry Volunteers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar will be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and it will be considered in the House.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas Henry Linebaugh was enlisted and sworn into the United States service as a private soldier in Company A, Third Tennessee Mounted Infantry Volunteers, on the 1st day of July, 1861, but before his command was mustered into the United States service was captured and held a prisoner of war, and so was never mustered into the service, nor was able to rejoin his command until its term of service expired; and

Whereas the said Henry Linebaugh was never borne on the rolls of said company, yet by no fault of the soldier: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause the name of Henry Linebaugh to be placed on the roll of Company A of the Third Regiment of Tennessee Mounted Infantry Volunteers, and give to him an honorable discharge, to date at the time of the discharge of said regiment; and that he be paid from the date of his enlistment up to the date of the muster out of the said company and regiment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EDWARD BYRNE.

Mr. LAIRD. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 1207) for the relief of Edward Byrne.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar will be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and it will be considered in the House.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Edward Byrne, late a captain in the Tenth Regiment of Cavalry, a captain of cavalry in the Army of the United States, with his original rank and date of commission, and that he shall be assigned to the first vacancy occurring in his grade in the cavalry arm of the service: Provided, That he shall receive no pay for the period he was out of the service other than that already received at the time of his muster out.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, strike out the words "a captain of cavalry," and insert "a first lieutenant of said Tenth Cavalry."

Strike out all after "United States," in line 7, down to and including "service," in line 10, and insert "to rank as such from the first day of July, 1875; and he shall be assigned to the first vacancy occurring in the grade of first lieutenant in said Tenth Cavalry."

In line 14, after the word "pay," insert the words "or allowances."

At the end of the bill strike out the words "other than that already received at the time of his muster out."

So that the bill will read as follows:

"Be it enacted &c., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Edward Byrne, late a captain in the Tenth Regiment of Cavalry, a first lieutenant of said Tenth Cavalry, in the Army of the United States, to rank as such from the 1st day of July, 1875; and he shall be assigned to the first vacancy occurring in the grade of first lieutenant in said Tenth Cavalry: Provided, That he shall receive no pay or allowances for the period he was out of the service."

Mr. BRAGG. I shall object to the passage of this bill.

Mr. LAIRD. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that objection. This is certainly as just a measure as any of this nature which the House has considered.

Mr. BRAGG. I do not want to discuss the merits of the bill.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The question being on ordering the bill as amended to be engrossed and read a third time,

Mr. BRAGG called for a division.

The question being taken; there were—ayes 4, noes 3.

Mr. BRAGG. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum having voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. BRAGG. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 2, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SURVIVORS OF JEANNETTE EXPLORING EXPEDITION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of State, together with a copy of the report, which it incloses, of Lieut. William H. Schuetze, United States Navy, who was designated by the Secretary of the Navy, in pursuance of the act of Congress of March 3, 1885, making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1886, to distribute the testimonials of the Government to subjects of Russia who extended aid to the survivors of the Jeannette exploring expedition and to the parties dispatched by this Government to aid the said survivors.

The report is interesting alike to the people of the United States and to the subjects of Russia; and will be gratifying to all who appreciated the generous and humane action of Congress in providing for the testimonials.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, February 1, 1887.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message will lie on the table and be printed. The question of printing the accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 1, 1887.

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to furnish the House with a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes, the original copy having been lost or mislaid.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate grant the request of the House of Representatives? The Chair hears no objection and the request is granted.

DISTRICT ACCOUNTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1854) authorizing the Treasurer of the United States to credit the District of Columbia with certain moneys in lieu of investing the same in bonds, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Treasurer of the United States, as commissioner of the sinking fund of the District of Columbia, shall not be compelled hereafter to invest money retained from District contracts hereafter entered into, but may, in his discretion, retain said funds without interest, or invest the same in any class of United States or District of Columbia bonds at the request and at the risk of the contractor whenever the sum retained on any contract shall reach the sum of $100 or more. Any sum less than $100 shall be retained without interest, as above.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10757) to provide for an additional term of the circuit court of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and for the appointment of one additional associate justice thereof, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of Joseph Neumann, of California, praying that $800 be appropriated to provide a show-case for the preservation and exhibition of the first American flag made of native American silk, now in the National Museum; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. ALLISON. I present a circular letter, which is in the nature of a petition, requesting Congress to pass what is known as the Miller pleuro-pneumonia bill. The paper comes from a stock-breeding association of the State of Iowa, and I move its reference to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I present a petition of representatives of the heirs of William Hickey, with reference to a proposition to sell to the Government the copyright of the work known as Hickey's Constitution of the United States. As the petition is brief and states all the facts in connection with the case, and may be of some interest to all the members of the Senate, I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

The petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on the Library; as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialist respectfully represents that he has been duly authorized by the heirs of the late General William J. Hickey, author and owner of the work known as "Hickey's Constitution of the United States," to offer the opportunity to the Government to purchase and own the copyright and stereotype plates of this work for $50,000.

Your memorialist respectfully submits that "Hickey's Constitution of the United States" is a work recognized by jurists, lawyers, statesmen, and people of all classes as the only standard authority for that great instrument. Three times prior to the civil war thousands of copies were purchased by Congress and put in general circulation. It had the unqualified indorsement of Webster, Clay, Calhoun, and the leading statesmen, and the entire Supreme Bench of that day, as will be seen by a copy of the book herewith filed.

George M. Dallas, then Vice-President, said "it should be in the hands of every freeman." Silas Wright advocated its adoption as a class-book in the schools.

If important then, how vitally important now, in this day of monopolistic and socialistic forces, that it should be in general use.

With a population now of over 60,000,000, nearly three times as large as when this book was first issued, a large majority of whom have never seen and have no conception of what our great charter of freedom is.

With an enfranchised race now more than double the number of our whole population when our fathers gave us this great instrument, a vast number of whom are slowly emerging from the densest ignorance.

It is needless to multiply reasons which will very readily occur to your enlightened body. I will simply add that there has been no general circulation of this document since the adoption of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments, and it is believed to be the duty of the Government to give it wide circulation among the schools and the people, hence this offer is made.

Respectfully submitted.

EDMUND P. HICKEY,
Attorney for the heirs.

Mr. EVARTS presented two memorials of owners and masters of fishing vessels and fishermen of Gloucester, Mass.; and a memorial of owners and masters of fishing vessels and fishermen in the State of Maine, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H. R. 5538) limiting the taking and landing of mackerel; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER presented petitions of citizens of Fairfax and Rockingham counties, in the State of Virginia, praying for the passage of what is known as the Colquitt bill to regulate the granting of certain licenses in the District of Columbia; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. INGALLS. I present concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Kansas concerning the alleged want of mail facilities in that State, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the railway mail facilities of the State of Kansas have failed to keep pace with the rapid development of the State; and

Whereas there are 500 miles of railroad in operation in said State upon which there is no mail service; and

Whereas the car facilities on many of the through lines are insufficient for a proper distribution of the mail; and

Whereas there is not a sufficient number of postal clerks on many of the lines in the State to properly perform the services required of them; and

Whereas the superintendent of the seventh division of the railway mail service has apparently failed to recognize the growing needs of the State: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Kansas (the senate concurring therein), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are hereby respectfully requested to use their utmost endeavors to secure the necessary improvements for the proper distribution and prompt delivery of the mail.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be directed to forward a copy of this resolution to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

I, E. B. Allen, secretary of state of the State of Kansas, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the original resolution now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my official seal. Done at Topeka this 27th day of January, A. D. 1887.

[SEAL.] E. B. ALLEN, Secretary of state.

Mr. MILLER presented a memorial of citizens of New York interested in the navigation of the Arthur Kill, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. 3183) amending the act authorizing the Arthur Kill bridge, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of 215 citizens of Washington, D. C., residents on Water street southwest and B and E streets northwest, and a petition of 496 citizens of Washington, D. C., residents on Sixth street northwest, praying for the passage of the bill for the incorporation of the Washington Cable Railway Company; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

DISTRIBUTION OF SEEDS IN TEXAS.

Mr. GEORGE. I am instructed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10203) to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to make a special distribution of seeds in the drought-stricken counties of Texas, and making an appropriation therefor, to report it favorably without amendment. I am also instructed by the committee to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate for its immediate consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS and Mr. HARRIS. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Commissioner of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, empowered and directed to make a special distribution of agricultural seeds for the year 1887 to the drought sufferers of those counties in Texas who are engaged in agricultural pursuits and in need of such relief, which distribution may, in the discretion of said Commissioner, be made through the county judges of said counties so suffering on account of drought; and in the ascertainment of such counties the said Commissioner may seek information from the governor of Texas.

SEC. 2. That in order to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to carry out the provisions of this act the sum of $10,000, to be immediately available, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear an explanation. It may go on subject to objection, so far as I am concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will be considered, subject to objection, as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GEORGE. The bill proposes to make an appropriation of $10,000 to buy seed for distribution in certain counties in Texas where the crops were wholly destroyed by drought last year. The Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] will explain it.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, this appropriation is proposed to be made for the purpose of supplying seeds to about forty counties in Texas which have suffered from the drought which destroyed all agricultural productions last year, leaving the people almost entirely without seeds. The number of persons who are thus destitute is estimated at some thirty-five or forty thousand. The amount proposed to be appropriated is $10,000, not reaching as much as 30 cents per capita. The object is to enable the people who are not able to supply themselves with seed to plant and raise something for this year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly it must be a very deserving object, to provide people with seeds who have not any; but can it be possible that there are forty counties in Texas where from a drought of a single year the farmers are so destitute in respect of credit that they can not buy their seeds at the agricultural seed stores in Texas, just as other farmers do when they need some seed?

Mr. COKE. I will state to the Senator that the Legislature of Texas is now in session, and is making provision for those destitute people.

This bill comes to us from the other House. It is in line with appropriations which are annually made by this Government for the purchase of seed for general distribution, and it is proposed simply to appropriate this amount for particular distribution in that particular district.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was under the impression that the line of annual appropriations for seeds was, as the law I believes states it in substance, for the purpose of experimenting with different kinds of new seeds in different parts of the country, in order, not to help the particular person or community to whom those seeds were sent, but to employ that method of trying the exchange of seeds in different climates, so as to promote the general interests of agriculture, and not to make a general or special distribution of seeds to particular farmers or counties, or to particular States, or to all of them, for the sake of helping a farmer to a peck of wheat seed, instead of letting him buy it as he might. I do not know of any such line of appropriations as that.

So it seems to me that under whatever guise you put it, it comes simply to a donation of $10,000 to be spent for a particular purpose, to be sure, to certain counties in Texas that have had a drought. It is a gift, and you might just as well give those farmers the money and let them go down to Galveston, or wherever, and buy the seed themselves, and I have no doubt they would buy it a great deal better and more economically than they would to send the seed there from Washington or somewhere else. That is just what it is.

Mr. COKE. This appropriation is to be expended by the Commissioner of Agriculture for seed, just as he has heretofore been expending the annual appropriations for seed, and the only difference between this and any other appropriation for such a purpose is that this is to be expended in a particular section of country where the necessities of the people for the seed are greater than elsewhere.

The theory of the Senator from Vermont, that these seeds are to be used for experimental purposes, is all very well as a theory, but in practice the seeds are distributed without reference to any such idea, and this appropriation simply recognizes the fact and the practice, and places the seed where they are most needed.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to say simply that I know something personally about that portion of Texas where these seeds are to be distributed, and about the condition of things prevailing there now. There is no doubt of the almost entire destitution of those people and of the fact that the ordinary agencies of credit will not avail them. Therefore if the General Government is to engage in anything of this kind at all, this is a very proper place to begin.

Mr. DAWES. What is the area of country affected?

Mr. PLUMB. In order to bring this matter to the comprehension of my friend who sits in front of me, I will say that I think the area of country which has been affected by this unfortunate condition of things is about the size of Massachusetts. Nothing, I think, would bring it more fully to his comprehension than that statement.

About the question of the propriety of the expenditure I should like to have heard a little more fully from the Senator from Texas.

Mr. COKE. What does the Senator say?

Mr. PLUMB. I said that on the question of the propriety of the national expenditure of money for this object, I regretted that I did not hear more fully from the Senator from Texas. I myself have not heretofore been troubled with those scruples which I have heard so much about from that side of the Chamber, and somewhat notably perhaps from my friend from Texas. If he is willing now to say that his sympathy for these people who are in distress, as I know, and who are very near to him in a very proper way, is such that he is willing to overcome his constitutional scruples at this moment, I think the bill will be agreed to unanimously.

Mr. COKE. In response to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] I have to say, without reference to the propriety of this expenditure, that money has been expended, and has been expended annually for such a purpose since the establishment of the Agricultural Department. Originally the question was a debatable one whether there was constitutional power to expend money in this way. It has grown into a precedent, and has gathered force each year, until now it is an established fact that the Government exercises jurisdiction of this character. As the Government does exercise it, and exercises it whether this special appropriation is made or not, I think that where a large section of country such as is destitute in Texas needs the appropriation it is perfectly proper to make it and expend it in that way.

Mr. CULLOM. I did not hear what the Senator from Texas said about what his own State is doing with reference to these people.

Mr. COKE. The Legislature of Texas is now in session and will make provision for these people. Bills have been introduced and are now in progress through the two houses of the Legislature for their relief. This appropriation of $10,000 will not amount to 30 cents per capita.

Mr. CULLOM. Does not the Senator think he had better defer the consideration of this bill until he sees what his own State will do for the relief of those people?

Mr. COKE. The State of Texas will act liberally toward those people. There is no question about that. If this bill is to be passed it must be passed now or there will be no use in passing it at all, because planting time is already at hand in Texas.

Mr. CULLOM. I myself think the State had better take care of it.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Texas be good enough to state the constitutional grounds on which he rests the power of Congress to do this thing?

Mr. COKE. Not at this time.

Mr. HARRIS. I chance to know very well one of the counties within the drought-stricken section of Texas, and I desire to say that if any relief is to be given to those people it is even now late, and delay will be absolutely fatal to any effort to relieve them.

I wish to say, in answer to some of the questions which have been raised, that from my knowledge of the people of the county with which I am familiar there are perhaps about one-half of the agriculturists within its limits who are able to provide themselves with seeds, but perhaps one-half of the agricultural population of that county have neither the means nor the credit to procure seed for the crop of this year, and they are bound to suffer unless relief comes from some quarter. My own opinion is that this is not the proper quarter to give that relief or to be applied to for that relief, and I can not find myself justified in voting to give it. Therefore I shall not so vote.

But it is a fact that with the extremest efforts during the last year, within the limits of the county of Callahan to which I have referred, there was a total failure of crops of every description in the agricultural line. There has been, there is now, there must be in the immediate future suffering to the people by reason of the drought that extended for fourteen months without a single season that was to any extent beneficial to the prospects of crops.

I should be very glad to see those people relieved, but I can not vote the money out of the Treasury for their relief.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Tennessee, as he is familiar with the subject, whether the Legislature of Texas is not in session?

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] has so stated, that it is now in session and considering the question.

Mr. TELLER. Then why can not those people get their relief from Texas? Texas is able to donate $10,000, is it not?

Mr. COKE. Texas is able to take care of those people and will take care of them.

Mr. TELLER. All right.

Mr. COKE. But the Government of the United States is expending money every year for the purchase of seeds for distribution throughout the United States, and it is but right that they should make a special application of some of the seeds thus purchased in a district of country so needful of them as the one in Texas.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is not any doubt, as the Senator from Texas says, that so far as there is need of seeds or other pecuniary assistance to its citizens in those counties of that empire, the wealthy and populous and old State of Texas is quite able, as he says, to take care of her own citizens, being on the spot and knowing precisely what amount is needed, and what kind of aid they need, and how it ought to be extended. Therefore I think it is almost an unkindness, almost an insult to the State of Texas, for the United States to rush in voluntarily and take the thing out of the hands of the State of Texas or offer to contribute something in the mite-box, as if Texas did not know what the needs of her own people were and what is best to be done about them; it seems to me so.

But my friend from Texas is mistaken in saying that there is any precedent for this bill in the law regarding the distribution of seeds through the Department of Agriculture. The administration of that service may be what the Senator says it is. If it is, it is wrong and ought to be stopped.

Mr. COKE. I do not think I am mistaken in the law—I know I am not in the fact—as to the mode in which the seeds that are purchased annually are distributed.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me to interrupt him for a moment? Congress passed a similar bill to this to distribute seeds in Alabama some years ago, and it passed a similar provision to this to distribute seeds in the Mississippi Delta in 1882 on account of the overflow that year. There is precedent for this proposed legislation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall not take the time to hunt up the law about the powers of the Department of Agriculture, but I repeat that I am confident that its authority and duty is by law to distribute new varieties of seeds and change old varieties from one climate in this vast country to another, which would be a new variety there, in order to test, for the general welfare, the adaptability of improvements in grains, fruits, vegetables, &c. That is right, and I am for it. Whether the law is administered so that Senators and Members of Congress and clerks in the Department of Agriculture and all others use very cheap and poor seeds that are bought on a commission by somebody in Philadelphia, to return political favors or to court political favors from the persons to whom they are sent, is another thing.

As the Senator from Mississippi says, I dare say it is true that in respect of Alabama Congress did make provisions of food, &c., as it has for people who were rendered desolate by floods; and the theory upon which it proceeded was that in respect of these seeds in Alabama and the floods the great mass of people there who were the sufferers were colored people who had been recently enfranchised, who were known to be utterly poor, and poor by counties, and that the State was in slender circumstances, its Legislature was not in session, and perhaps would not feel able to help them if it were in session. Therefore we did it, and I dare say I voted for it, because I believe it to be perfectly constitutional for Congress to give away as much money for such a purpose as it thinks fit; whether it is wise or not is another thing.

Now, you come to the State of Texas. Here is a scarcity of seed that must have occurred last fall—three or four months ago—when the failure of the crop to ripen from the drought took place. I think it must be shown that there is such a vast destitution that the State Legislature in session can not provide for it, or else that it is an emergency which has so suddenly happened (not six months, four months, three months ago) that it is impossible to do anything in the ordinary way.

That is not the case. The State of Texas is rich, and powerful, and respectable, and able, and populous. The farmers and everybody else are prosperous. Of course a smaller farmer, who has just bought his farm, starting his little stock, who loses all his seed and his crop, is, of course, very much pinched. What does he do? He goes to his neighbor who is less pinched and borrows money on his property and buys his seed, or if he is too poor to do that he appeals to the people, who in every instance are bound to take care of such cases, and proud to take care of them, I hope, to help them out; and that is what the Legislature of the State of Texas proposes to do.

Therefore I do not think the bill ought to pass; and I want to ask for the yeas and nays on its passage.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to hear the bill read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I am sorry that my honorable friend from Texas would not give us at this time the benefit of the constitutional reason which operates on him in voting for the bill, because it seems to me that it is no more than fair reciprocation that if we furnish seeds to Texas, where they need them, Texas should furnish constitutional law to us, who need it, especially when we are obliged to vote upon this bill.

But, being left in the dark by my honorable friend who represents that State, I shall vote for the bill with great pleasure for the reason which occurs to me, and that is the practice of distributing seeds to the people of the United States, not merely new and untried varieties but seeds the excellence of which is supposed at any rate to have been tested by the Department of Agriculture, which are distributed all over the country, and every Congressman and Senator has large quantities of them to distribute.

Certainly in our distribution of these seeds we should have regard for the exact principle of this bill; that is, if there were any farmers in our State or neighborhood who were specially poor and in need, and who wanted the seeds, or especially if they had had a particular affliction, like a drought or flood or anything else which has destroyed their power to get them for themselves, any Senator would regard that as a reason for preferring that class of persons in his own State.

I do not see, therefore, why Congress may not make a slight addition to the amount provided for that purpose and have similar regard to the special need of a particular community. I shall vote for the bill with great pleasure.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope the Senator from Texas will not press this bill, because I shall be compelled to vote against it out of regard for the history of Texas as it will read hereafter. With 278,000 square miles, a magnificent empire, a small portion of which was settled when Texas achieved its independence and was annexed to the United States, the body of that State must have been public lands belonging to the State. It tossed out 3,000,000 acres to contractors to build a new State house. It is rumored that there is a little distress in a corner of that State, that the crops will not be good until this year, and that there is some trouble about seed for the spring. It is proposed to pass the hat here for $10,000 to the United States that the Department of Agriculture may go into the market and purchase seeds and transport them from here to Texas to supply the people of the counties who have had none since last autumn and who would be short in the spring.

The Legislature has been in session there for weeks; it is a State without a dollar of debt, an empire that is a boast to us when we talk with Europeans about our sovereign States, and it is here passing the hat for $10,000. I submit that if my Legislature in the little State of Connecticut was asking $10,000 for garden seeds and got it I would resign.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, the Legislature of Texas is now in session and is proceeding to pass bills for the relief of the people in the drought district, comprising some forty counties. By estimate the destitute people in those counties are some thirty-five thousand or forty thousand. The State of Texas is amply able to take care of her own people and will do it; she asks charity from nobody, neither from the Government of the United States nor from any other source. She is able to maintain herself anywhere and everywhere financially and in every other way. Wherever it has been necessary for that State to make an effort it has always been and it ever will be an effort worthy of a great State. We ask no charity from Congress; we ask no aid from the National Government.

We only ask to be treated as the people of other States are treated. Justice, not charity, is what we ask. The proposed appropriation comes out of the National Treasury, which the people of Texas pay their full quota to fill. The same constitutional power exists to buy the seeds provided for in this bill that exists to purchase seeds for annual distribution. As an original question I would vote against the expenditure of a dollar for the purchase of seeds, but when it is now and has been for years a fixed fact that seeds are to be purchased for distribution I propose to claim the benefits of it for my State.

Money is expended here every year for the relief of people in different parts of the United States. Money was expended for the relief of the people of the great State of Ohio when they suffered from floods. There is not a session of Congress that money for the relief of people somewhere in the United States is not expended. We ask no departure from any precedents established by the Government. We simply ask that a system of expenditure for the purchase of seed for general distribution may be enlarged in this instance to meet the exigencies of a particular case. The Senator from Connecticut calls that charity and says we are passing around the hat. I deny it. I say that we are not asking except for that which has always been freely granted to others having no greater rights or equities than ourselves. We simply ask that the Agricultural Department may extend its operations to a particular section of Texas with greater liberality, instead of distributing the seed over the whole country and in sections where they are not so much needed.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not understand that statement to be exactly in accordance with the purpose of the bill. The Senator from Texas closed his remarks by saying that this was simply to localize the efforts of the Commissioner of Agriculture, intimating that there was to be a withdrawal to that extent from other portions of the country of the amounts that were to be disbursed in Texas. If that statement is correct, the bill does not express it, because, if I heard the language correctly, this is a provision for $10,000 in addition to the regular annual appropriation for the distribution of seeds.

Mr. COKE. That is correct.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas whether the area of destitution is in the older settled portion of the State of Texas?

Mr. COKE. It is not; it is in the frontier counties; it is in a new country.

Mr. INGALLS. Where agriculture, then, has been largely experimental. There has been an invasion by this population of territory hitherto supposed to be not qualified for agriculture.

Mr. COKE. The country over which the drought extended has heretofore yielded well to the efforts of the farming population of the community. Such a drought never occurred there before.

Mr. INGALLS. The people of Texas and of Kansas, socially and commercially, are intimate; and I have been familiar in many ways by the reports of visitors and by accounts in the press with the singular and exceptional calamity that has fallen upon the people living in that portion of the State. The earth has been iron and the heavens brass, as the Senator from Tennessee said, for a great many months, and they had neither the early nor the latter rains.

There are many precedents for the course that is invited by this bill. I remember in Kansas not many years ago, when there had been a devastation by grasshoppers or locusts, and in the Ohio Valley by flood, and in Alabama and the Mississippi Valley by the inundation of that great river, we have from time to time made appropriations for the relief of the distress of the people; but this case appears to be different from those, in that there is no special donation of money, but simply a proposition to extend the area of the operations of the Department of Agriculture.

I agree fully with what the Senator from Connecticut stated about the unfortunate attitude that this great empire State presents in asking for this alms. The Senator from Texas repels the idea that this is charity or mendicancy, or that, to use the figurative language of the Senator from Connecticut, the State is passing the hat, but in terms it is simply a request from the State of Texas for the donation of $10,000 for the purpose indicated.

Mr. COKE. I ask the Senator wherein does it differ from the appropriation made for the flood sufferers in Ohio?

Mr. INGALLS. I say that it does not differ in principle from that, and yet it appears to me that in the case of a State like the State of Texas, opulent both in population and resources, with its Legislature in session, and, as the Senator from Texas says, amply able and fully disposed to relieve all the wants of its inhabitants, the aspect is unfortunate; but if the Senator from Texas says that it is desired by the people of that State, if they can afford to take it I can afford to vote for it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am opposed to the appropiation of money from the Treasury of the United States for any purposes except those which are constitutional and within the legitimate scope of our power. I do not believe we have any right to take the people's money brought into the Federal Treasury by taxation and make donations of it to persons in Kansas, Texas, or elsewhere. We are acting as trustees for the people, bound to faithfully account for our trust and apply the money raised by taxation of the people to the legitimate demands of the Government, to the support and maintenance of the Government. We are not almoners of charity to anybody. That is my view of our constitutional power and duty.

The precedents cited are, in my opinion, the very strongest argument which could be made against this appropriation of money. We see what we are coming to. Year after year applications come up here from some section of the country for donations of money out of the public Treasury. We ought at once to put our foot down upon such proceedings.

I have as much regard for the people of Texas as I have for the people of any other section of the country. I would as soon appropriate money out of the public Treasury to relieve distress in Texas as I would in New York or Massachusetts or Delaware; but I do not believe we have any right to use the people's money in any such way. I have no doubt that the distress the Senator from Texas speaks of actually occurred, and that those people are as worthy of appropriations of money from the public Treasury as other people; but I can not vote for the proposition, because in the first place I do not believe I have a right as a Senator of the United States to take money out of the public Treasury and give it to the people in any particular locality in the country, and I will not do it. I never have, to the best of my knowledge, voted for any such appropriation, and with the help of God till I leave here I will not give such a vote.

Mr. CULLOM. If it is in order to do so I object to the further consideration of the bill.

Several SENATORS. Oh, no; let us get through with it; let us vote.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senate is ready to vote, very well; but in that case I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MILLER. I simply desire to say a word. The bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It was not thought that this bill in any way reflected upon the honor or credit of the State of Texas. It was not considered that it was in any way a matter of charity to that great State, but simply a matter of justice.

The principle that the Federal Government can aid its own citizens wherever they are located, in any State or Territory, has been well established by this Congress and by Congresses which have preceded it, and this distribution of seeds from the Agricultural Department is simply following a line of precedents which have been established for many years. If the State of Texas be a great and rich State it can ask this in justice, and it has a right to ask for this appropriation, in my judgment, from the Federal Treasury. We are constantly appropriating money to that State for the improvement of its rivers and harbors and for other purposes; and certainly it seems to me that no one can say or ought to say that the State of Texas in asking this appropriation to aid sufferers within its own bounds is passing the hat or is in any way demeaning itself by asking for this appropriation. I trust that it will be made. I believe it to be just and proper and right that it should be made.

Mr. TELLER. I do not intend to vote for this bill; not because I can not find authority under the Constitution so to do, if the case seemed to me to require it. I do not understand that the State of Texas has asked any legislation of this kind. I do not understand that there is any pretense anywhere that the State is not willing to and will not take care of her people.

Mr. MILLER. Her representatives have asked for it.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that. Perhaps the representatives of Texas, who can not find the authority in the General Government to vote money for educational purposes, think we have a right to vote it for the purpose of supporting people or furnishing them with seeds. If we have a right to furnish them with seeds, we have a right to furnish them with clothing and with food to keep them from starving, and fuel to keep them from freezing. I do not think there is any necessity for it. If there was I might endeavor to find a constitutional right to vote it.

The case is entirely dissimilar from that of Ohio, which has been mentioned. In that case there was a great misfortune extending over a large area of country, and the Legislature of the State was not in session—not that that would make any difference on the constitutional question, but it would, if we believed the constitutional power exists, on the propriety of taking action. In this case the Legislature is in session; the State is rich and strong, and abundantly able to take care of these people; and if you furnish seed to them you will be called upon to furnish them to hundreds of others.

Is there any reason why you should furnish to a poverty-stricken man in Texas what you decline to furnish to a poverty-stricken man in Dakota, who, owing to grasshopper raids or droughts, or some other unforeseen and unfortunate circumstance, has been compelled to find himself in the spring of the year without money to buy seed? I have seen the farmers of a whole region in the West deprived of seed, seed being brought hundreds of miles by wagon, and I never heard that they were unable to plant in the spring. There is not any community in the United States, unless where there is a very extended calamity, where the people can not of their neighbors obtain seed upon credit.

When wheat was $6 a bushel in the State of Colorado, when there was no wheat to be had except by sending off for it, the people were able without money to obtain credit sufficient to seed their ground, and so they are to-day in Texas, and so they are everywhere unless a whole State or more than a State should be included in the calamity. In this case there is but a little section, one corner of the State, a county or so as I understand.

Mr. GEORGE. Forty counties, I understand.

Mr. TELLER. Forty counties is a small portion of Texas, and there are only a few people in them. What is $10,000 to purchase seed for them? If there are forty counties, and you are going to give them any relief at all, you need more than $10,000. I do not see any necessity for the bill, and therefore I am going to vote against it; not because under certain circumstances I would not vote for it; not because I might not find power to give to these people this assistance; but because I am not convinced that it is necessary that the Government of the United States should interfere.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. TELLER. On that question the yeas and nays have been called for, I understand.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAWES (when his name was called). I am paired with the absent Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY]. I do not know how he would vote on this question. Does his colleague know?

Mr. COKE. He would vote "yea."

Mr. DAWES. As the Senator from Texas would vote "yea," I vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 34, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Beck,	Dolph,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Blackburn,	Evarts,	Miller,	Spooner,
Blair,	Farwell,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Vance,
Call,	Frye,	Palmer,	Van Wyck,
Cameron,	George,	Payne,	Walthall,
Cheney,	Gibson,	Plumb,	Williams,
Coke,	Hampton,	Pugh,	Wilson of Iowa.
Conger,	Hoar,	Sabin,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Sawyer,

NAYS—16.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sewell,
Berry,	Hale,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Teller,

So the bill was passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. EDMUNDS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3178) for the relief of Charles Murphy, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2898) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the East River between the city of New York and Long Island, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2374) granting a pension to Mrs. Arabella Coddington, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 603) for the relief of J. R. Jones, late postmaster at Boydton, Va., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3218) granting an increase of pension to Maria Hunter, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Laura A. Wright, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 3260) granting a pension to Laura A. Wright; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2576) for the relief of William J. Martin, of Oregon, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3246) making an appropriation for the improvement of the naval hospital park at Portsmouth, Va., reported it without amendment.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5262) for the relief of Mrs. Frances Marshall, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. BECK. I desire to have that bill placed on the Calendar.

Mr. DOLPH. Let that order be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. DAWES. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10394) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, to report it, together with amendments and also with a written report. I give notice that I will call up the bill as early as possible after the passage of the pending appropriation bill.

LANDS IN SEVERALTY TO INDIANS.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That 500 copies of the bill (S. 54) entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," in form as it finally passed both Houses of Congress be printed for the use of the Senate.

MILITARY ACADEMY REPORT.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution to print 2,500 additional copies of the annual report of the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy for the year 1886, to report it with an amendment. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That 2,500 additional copies of the annual report of Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy for the year 1886 be printed; 2,000 for the use of the Senate, and 500 for the use of the Senate members of that board.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Printing was, in line five, after the word "printed," to insert "and bound in paper covers;" so as to read:

That 2,500 additional copies of the annual report of Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy for the year 1886, be printed, and bound in paper covers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a bill (S. 3261) to declare valid the titles to certain lands sold by the officers of the Land Department in Florida, for which patents have not yet been issued; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SABIN introduced a bill (S. 3262) for the relief of Anson Northrup, of Minnesota; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GRAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOWEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3184) granting the Utah Midland Railway Company the right of way through the Uncompahgre and Uintah reservations, in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. SAWYER (by request) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

RAILROAD LAND GRANTS IN IOWA.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, directed to furnish to the Senate, as soon as practicable, information in relation to what has been done under the land-grant act of Congress of May 12, 1864 (13 Statutes U. S., 72), as follows:

Copies of lines of location of railroads and correspondence in relation thereto; copies of lines of roads as constructed; copies of patents or certifications of land to the State of Iowa; copies of letters to register and receiver of local land office at Des Moines withdrawing lands from market, with maps designating lands withdrawn, and answers to such letters; copies of correspondence with railroad companies in relation to location and relocation of roads; copies of correspondence with State officers of Iowa in relation to lands granted and relating to restoration of lands to the United States; separate lists of lands within the counties of O'Brien, Dickinson, Sioux, Plymouth, and Woodbury, of the four following classes:

1. Those within the 10-mile limits of the road of the Sioux City and Saint Paul Railroad Company and not within the 10-mile limits of the Chicago, Milwaukee and Saint Paul road.
2. Those within the 10-mile limits of said last-named road and not within the 10-mile limits of the former.
3. Those within the 10-mile limits of both said roads.
4. Those within the overlapping 20-mile limits of both roads, with a map showing such lands.

A list of lands, if any, patented to homestead claimants who were permitted to take only 80 acres of land in said counties named by reason of the first line of location of said Chicago, Milwaukee and Saint Paul road or its predecessor, the McGregor Western Railroad Company, and which are not within the 10-mile limits of said road as constructed upon the last location of said road; a list of lands taken by pre-emption claimants within similar limits, with map showing both locations of roads and the lands so taken; a list of lands with maps showing what, if any, lands were patented or certified to or for each company in said counties as lands in place which are not within the 10-mile limits of said roads as constructed, and what, if any, portions of said roads have not been completed, or if completed what, if any, portion of either has not been completed as a land-grant road; with such other information as may be necessary to determine whether either of said companies is entitled to any lands not yet certified or patented in its favor or to all the lands which have been so certified or patented, and a statement of lands in said counties certified or patented as indemnity lands.

CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE BILLS.

Mr. ALLISON and Mr. CALL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida rise to morning business?

Mr. CALL. I do not.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before that motion is received the Chair is bound to submit a resolution which comes over from yesterday, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. HARRIS yesterday, as follows:

Resolved, That on and after Monday, the 7th instant, at the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall at any time otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of House bills and joint resolutions favorably reported on the Calendar, and continue such consideration until 2 o'clock, under the provisions of Rule VIII as herein modified, until the Calendar of such bills and resolutions has been completed.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that will lead to debate. I ask the Senator from Tennessee to let it go over.

Mr. HARRIS. If it does lead to debate I shall not contest with the Senator; I shall not ask its consideration; but I had hoped the Senate was ready to act on the resolution without discussion.

Mr. INGALLS. I desire to debate it.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well. I shall not insist on its consideration this morning.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its

Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 10804) to effect a re-arrangement of grades of office in the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 19) for the relief of Silas D. Baldwin.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 388) to grant the right of way through the Fort Bliss Military Reservation to the Rio Grande and El Paso Railroad Company;

A bill (S. 129) authorizing the Secretary of War to adjust and settle the account for arms, ammunition, and accouterments between the Territory of Montana and the United States; and

A bill (S. 2652) for the construction of a military telegraph line from Sanford, Fla., to Point Jupiter, Florida, and the establishment of a signal station.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. 1119) to provide for the appointment of hospital stewards in the United States Army, and to fix their pay and allowance;

A bill (S. 1154) to authorize the city of Newport, R. I., to use the site of Fort Greene as a public park; and

A bill (S. 2477) making an appropriation for the establishment and erection of a military post near the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. PLUMB, in line 1350, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "ten;" so as to make the clause read:

> For surveys and resurveys of public lands, at rates not exceeding $9 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $7 for township, and $5 for section lines, $50,000; and of the sum hereby appropriated $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended for the examination of surveys in the field.

Mr. BECK. I should like to hear some reason for that change. Considering the great difficulty they have had in regard to the surveys heretofore made, perhaps $10,000 would not be at all sufficient for that purpose.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] offered the amendment. I will send for him.

Mr. BECK. Let it be passed over informally until he comes in, without losing its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that order will be made.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. At this stage of the bill I desire to submit some observations respecting the inquiry put to me last evening by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. HOAR. I have to be absent at a committee meeting very soon for many hours, and the amendment I want to offer I think will be received without any sort of objection. I should like to offer it now.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. I move an amendment to come in after the provisions about the Library of Congress; I do not now remember the line.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Can the Senator indicate the page?

Mr. HOAR. I desire it to come in after the provisions for the Library of Congress.

Mr. ALLISON. Page 101 is the place.

Mr. HOAR. Very well. On page 101, after line 2452, I move to insert:

> That the Secretary of State, the Librarian of Congress, and the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, and their successors in office, are hereby constituted a commission whose duty it shall be to report to Congress the character and value of the historical and other manuscripts belonging to the Government of the United States, and what method and policy should be pursued in regard to editing and publishing the same, or any of them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. There will be no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], in line 1350, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "ten."

Mr. BECK. Before the vote is taken I wish to say a word, as I asked to have that amendment passed over until the Senator from Kansas came in. I do not know whether $10,000 is enough to provide for looking into these surveys and resurveys. I understand that quite a number of them have to be re-examined, and perhaps this changes the adjustment in such a way that it can not be done sufficiently.

Mr. PLUMB. Of course, if the Department is able to show, as I think it will not be, that it needs $25,000 to inspect $25,000 worth of surveys, of course the conference committee will yield the point; but on the face of the thing, this is entirely out of proportion. I remind the Senate of what I stated yesterday, that when this provision was before the Senate at the last session the Senate by a vote followed the committee in making this amount $10,000 in place of $25,000, and in conference the amount of $25,000 was restored. I only ask that the Senate repeat its action of last year. Of course if there can be any showing made that $25,000 is necessary, the office will have it and ought to have it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOWEN. On page 6, after line 116, I move to insert:

For repairs on the United States mint building at Denver, Colo., $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. On page 3, after line 60, I move to amend by adding:

For the foundation of the public building at Key West, Fla., $8,000.

That has been recommended by a report of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury in consequence of a discovery made that the foundation will have to be repaired by artificial means underground, and we have now expended a considerable amount of money on that building.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, yesterday the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] inquired of me whether or not there would be a surplus in the Treasury in case Congress, before the end of the session, should make appropriations in accordance with the estimates of the Treasury Department. I think, perhaps, in my desire to complete the bill last night, I failed to state all that I should have stated in response to that inquiry.

The regular estimates of the Departments, submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury; amounted to $376,000,000 in round numbers; but since that time there have been added supplemental and other estimates amounting to considerable sums, as, for example, there is an esmate of nearly $5,000,000 to carry out the provisions of the Mexican pension bill. As yet no estimates have been submitted of the amount required for the purpose of carrying out the disability pension bill which has passed both Houses, but has not yet received the signature of the President. It is safe to assume that during the next year $7,000,000 or $8,000,000 will be required for that purpose. There have been already submitted estimates for deficiencies amounting to $7,000,000 more. So the total of the estimates for the next fiscal year, without including miscellaneous appropriations, will amount to $395,000,000. I think it is safe to assume that Congress will not appropriate fully up to the estimates.

Mr. PLATT. Why not, if the Senator will permit me to ask a question? And if he will permit me another word, I will say that these officers of the Departments are supposed to know what the wants of the Government are upon an economical scale. Now the question that I want to have answered is whether they have estimated the Government expenditure upon a scale which is extravagant or upon a scale which is economical, and if economical why do we not appropriate according to their estimates?

Mr. ALLISON. Taking the total of the estimates, they include various things that can be done this year or can be postponed until next year; and therefore, without saying that the estimates are either extravagant or improvident, Congress may not feel willing to enter upon all the expenditures which are proposed in the Book of Estimates. So I would not say that the estimates of the Departments are extravagant estimates, although I will say that in some respects they are in excess of estimates hitherto made by prior Departmental officers and in excess, perhaps, of the immediate necessity of the Government.

As I have said, the estimates for next year are $395,000,000. The revenues are conjectural, necessarily. Curiously enough, perhaps naturally enough, the Secretary of the Treasury this year makes no estimate in his report as to the revenues in the future. It has been the custom of former Secretaries of the Treasury to make estimates for the current fiscal year, giving the actual returns for the period prior to the meeting of Congress, including the entire first quarter of the year, and then estimating for the remainder of the year, and estimating the receipts also for the next ensuing fiscal year. A careful examination of the law discloses the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury is not bound to make those estimates. So we have no actual guide as to what the revenue either of the current fiscal year or of the fiscal year for which we are now appropriating will be, except that derived from the estimates made last year, and from the receipts of the first six months, up to the first of January of this fiscal year.

Mr. PLATT. May I make another inquiry?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT. I inquire whether this estimate of $395,000,000 includes any considerable sum for coast defenses?

Mr. ALLISON. It includes, for fortifications, $5,000,000. The total Navy estimate is $20,000,000. So I assume that these estimates do not include what we should regard as a sufficient expenditure for coast defenses, or for the Navy, if we enter upon that subject.

Mr. PLATT. Five million dollars for fortifications is practically what the Senate appropriated in the last fortification bill, and that is still in conference between the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. ALLISON. We passed a bill providing for $6,000,000.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to ask my colleague whether there is included in the $395,000,000 the amount that is to be carried to the sinking fund.

Mr. ALLISON. That is included.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Together with the standing appropriations?

Mr. ALLISON. All permanent appropriations are included in the $395,000,000 and the Secretary's estimate of what should be applied to the sinking fund, thirty-six and a half million dollars.

Mr. PLATT. If then it should be deemed advisable to spend a larger sum than $5,000,000 for coast defenses during the next fiscal year that would increase the estimate beyond the $395,000,000.

Mr. ALLISON. To that extent; and if we should appropriate more than $20,000,000 for the Navy, that excess should be added. The naval appropriation bill, as reported to the House of Representatives, provides $22,000,000 for the Navy.

What will probably be the receipts for the next fiscal year? The total receipts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, were $336,000,000, as stated by the Secretary of the Treasury in his report, and by the Treasurer, and by the President in his message; but that does not include the receipts from postal revenue, and those receipts should be added to the $336,000,000.

Mr. MCPHERSON. How much are they?

Mr. ALLISON. They were, for the year 1886, $43,948,000, or, in round numbers, $44,000,000. So that the receipts for the year amounted, in round numbers, to $380,000,000. This year the Postmaster-General estimates that the postal revenues will be $50,000,000 next year. I think, in view of the actual receipts of last year, that is an excessive estimate. I do not believe they will reach $50,000,000 next year, but assuming that they will reach $50,000,000, and assuming that the ordinary revenues of the Government will be what they were last year, $336,000,000, we have, in round numbers, $386,000,000 as the current receipts for 1888. These receipts will not be added to, except from duties on imports. Whatever increase of receipts there may be will be found to be from customs duties. The customs receipts for the year 1886 were $192,000,000. Of course I am speaking now only in round numbers. The customs receipts for the first six months of this fiscal year, in round numbers, were $107,000,000. So there has been an increase of $10,000,000 in the customs receipts this year as compared with last, so far.

Assuming that this will continue, the customs receipts for the current year will be $214,000,000, and assuming that they will be the same for the next year that will be the amount of the customs receipts. The total receipts for the first half of this fiscal year amount to $180,000,000 in round numbers, so that on the 1st of July we shall probably have a total revenue of $360,000,000 for this current year as compared with $336,000,000 for the last year, because in this estimate for the current year I do not include the postal receipts, nor are they included in the statement of $336,000,000 for last year. So we shall have then for the next fiscal year $360,000,000 of receipts and a probable expenditure of $395,000,000. During the first six months of the current fiscal year the actual receipts have been from customs, $107,408,120$\frac{4}{100}$; from internal-revenue, $57,642,779$\frac{69}{100}$; from miscellaneous sources, $15,632,007$\frac{45}{100}$; total, $180,683,007$\frac{45}{100}$. For the month of January just closed the total receipts from all sources have been $28,395,921$\frac{49}{100}$.

Mr. MORRILL. May I ask the Senator from Iowa if he does not think he ought to make some difference between the first half of the year and the last half of the year as to the receipts from customs revenue? I think they are much larger in the first half of the fiscal year than in the last half.

Mr. ALLISON. It happens so sometimes, and sometimes it is the reverse, so that I do not think it is accurate to make any such statement.

I say the receipts may be expected to be $360,000,000 next year. Add the estimated postal revenues and the receipts will be $410,000,000. Then take the estimates as suggested by the Senator from Connecticut as the measure of our expenditures for 1887-'88, to which should be added the pension legislation, and we have a total expenditure of $395,000,000 which will make the surplus—which was the question suggested to me by the Senator from Connecticut—$15,000,000, assuming now that we comply with the law relating to the sinking fund. In order to comply with that law we are compelled to buy bonds in the open market, either four-and-a-halfs or 4 percents., or what are known as the currency sixes, being the bonds issued to the Pacific Railroads.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. TELLER. Why does the Senator say "assuming that we purchase bonds for the sinking fund"? Is not the law imperative? Can there be any question but what the Government will provide according to law for the sinking fund?

Mr. ALLISON. There is a question whether the Government is bound to purchase in the open market at a large premium its own bonds for the purpose of complying with the sinking-fund law, when in fact the sinking fund now is over $300,000,000 in excess of the requirements of that fund as provided for by the act of 1862.

Mr. TELLER. I will call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the sinking fund provides not for a total amount, but for so much each year.

Mr. ALLISON. I give my own answer, which is that this Government, in my judgment, is not bound by law or by good faith to the bondholders to purchase, at a premium, bonds of the United States not yet due, when this sinking fund projected for their benefit is more than $300,000,000 in advance of the general requirements of the law providing a sinking fund. That is my view.

I admit, however, that the letter of the law requiring the setting apart of 1 per cent. of the total debt of the United States each year, as the law stands now, is a requirement; but that law can be so changed in good faith as not to require that that shall be done; but it is a question whether or not the promoters of that law intended that the Government of the United States should go into the open market and pay 28 per cent. premium for bonds in order to comply with its provisions.

Mr. INGALLS. How has it happened then, the law being imperative as to the annual amount to be set aside for the sinking fund, that it is now $300,000,000 in excess of the amount that should be so held for that purpose?

Mr. ALLISON. That is a mere question of arithmetic, as the Senator from Kansas will certainly see. The law requires that 1 per cent. shall be set apart annually.

Mr. INGALLS. No more and no less?

Mr. ALLISON. It does not say "no more and no less," but impliedly it means no less. Now, the Government of the United States has purchased and put in the sinking fund, as I think it had a right to do, a sum largely in excess of the amount required by the 1-per cent. requirement. For many years we did not purchase bonds at all, because we were selling bonds, and for other years we have purchased, I believe, as high as $130,000,000 of bonds for the purpose of the sinking fund.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Iowa I think could answer that by saying that we passed an additional law authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to meet any bonds that were payable with any surplus revenue we had, and that made the excess.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a very good answer, although the law did not specifically require that those bonds should be put in the sinking fund, which I understand to be the inquiry of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PLATT. I am glad I have listened to this very lucid explanation of the prospective revenues and expenditures for the next fiscal year. I understand from it that if Congress makes the appropriations which are really needed according to the estimates which have been submitted by the Departments there will not be a surplus of receipts over and above the expenditures, which will be likely to exceed, say, $50,000,000 at the outside. The Senator from Iowa does not give as much room as that for a surplus.

But I want to say, Mr. President, that if we are not to have a surplus for the next fiscal year exceeding $50,000,000, I desire to be reckoned as an opponent of any scheme which will lessen that surplus, and I do not want this Congress to adjourn until it has provided in some way that a sum equal to $50,000,000, or nearly equal to $50,000,000, shall be immediately available to commence, a system of coast defense in the United States. I think Congress will be negligent of its duty, will be justly and severely criticised by the people, will have forgotten the best interests of the country, if it shall adjourn without having made such a provision; and I for one want to be counted as an opponent of any scheme which shall reduce the revenues of this Government to a point where there will not be plenty of money to inaugurate and carry on most vigorously a thorough system for coast defenses in the country.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I heard rather indistinctly the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and I do not propose to contradict anything that he has said without very careful examination. I will see what he has said in the RECORD in the morning; but I think he is mistaken as to the estimates running up to $396,000,000, as I understood him.

Mr. ALLISON. The estimates in the Book of Estimates amount to $376,000,000 in round numbers—not quite that sum, three hundred and seventy-five millions and some odd thousands.

Mr. BECK. I have it in my Book of Estimates $325,000,000, on page 246.

Mr. ALLISON. But that statement does not include the postal expenditures; and confusion is constantly created because the Treasury Department's and our accounts here are not alike in that respect. They only give the deficiencies in the postal revenues usually in their statements, while in our appropriations we appropriate the whole amount. So if the Senator will add $50,000,000 of estimated revenues from the Post-Office Department to the $325,000,000 he will have exactly the estimated expenditure as proposed by the Treasury Department. I have added to that the $7,000,000 of deficiencies which are already estimated for by the Secretary of the Treasury. I have added to it $5,000,000 as the estimated amount required to pay the Mexican war pensions, and I have added to it also an estimate of $7,000,000 or $8,000,000 for the purpose of paying the disabled soldiers their pensions. Taking these three items in addition to the estimates made in the Book of Estimates, we have an expenditure proposed of $395,000,000. That is my statement.

Mr. BECK. The chairman may be correct. Those estimates when they are analyzed I think will embrace all the work that the engineers say they could carry on provided they were allowed the money.

Mr. ALLISON. It includes only $10,000,000 for a river and harbor bill.

Mr. BECK. It includes all that may be spent for public buildings provided we see fit to finish them all in one year, and includes a great many things which are merely advisory as to carrying out what has been provided for by law.

There will be, however, another appropriation bill up for consideration pretty soon, and I do not want any question raised now to impede the passage of this bill; but I will take care to look into this matter, and if I am not mistaken I can show that the surplus revenue this year will be nearer $90,000,000 than $15,000,000.

Mr. TELLER. Without reference to the sinking fund?

Mr. BECK. There is no such thing as a sinking fund and can not be. We absolutely give away our money to enhance the price of bonds. Does the Senator from Colorado believe that it ever was intended that if the sinking fund was $25,000,000 a year, and we had a surplus of $50,000,000, and applied that $50,000,000 one year, we were still obliged to apply $25,000,000 the next year to make up the deficiency, or let that money lie idle and bear no interest in order to wait for the 1st day of July to come? The whole idea of the sinking fund was that we should at least pay 1 per cent. per annum to let the bondholder know that the debt would be liquidated in time and not be considered a permanent debt; and if we had a surplus at any time, in advance of what we had agreed to do, and applied it so as to prevent it from being locked up in the Treasury and to save the interest, the bondholder and everybody who was to be protected by that sinking fund got the security as absolutely as if it lay idle till the beginning of another year and then was so applied. The total result is that three hundred and odd million dollars, as the Senator from Iowa says—I think $500,000,000—has already been applied above all that any sinking-fund law requires, according to any construction that can be given to it. But I do not want to go into that question now. I want this bill to pass, and therefore am seeking to avoid discussion.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not wish to open up a discussion of this question; yet the Senator from Connecticut asked me last evening a question which I did not fully respond to then and I completed the response this morning. I want to say to the Senator from Kentucky that my statement was in reply to the Senator from Connecticut, which was, if we appropriate up to the estimates in every particular, what will the surplus be? I stated this morning—the Senator perhaps did not give attention to that—that in my judgment we would not appropriate within several millions of dollars of the estimates of the Departments. We never have done so, and I presume we shall not do so this session.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon of the Senator from Iowa, because I am desirous not to contradict him, for I know how careful he usually is; but I could not help the expression of some surprise at the idea that the surplus would be so small in the face of all that we are advised in regard to it, and I said I would take the time if need be on some other appropriation bill to give my reasons for dissenting from him. If I find in the RECORD that he is correct I shall take care not to do so.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Kentucky asks me what I think about the statute. The Senator from Iowa proposed to state what the men who passed this statute intended. I have been educated to understand that the plain words of a statute were not to be construed away. I have always been educated to understand that the executive department of the Government has nothing to do with the propriety or impropriety of the passage of a bill. It is their duty to execute the law as they find it upon the statute book. I find that the sinking fund is provided for as follows in the act of February 25, 1862:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That all duties on imported goods shall be paid in coin, or in notes payable on demand heretofore authorized to be issued and by law receivable in payment of public dues, and the coin so paid shall be set apart as a special fund, and shall be applied as follows:

First. To the payment in coin of the interest on the bonds and notes of the United States.

Second. To the purchase or payment of 1 per cent. of the entire debt of the United States, to be made within each fiscal year after the 1st day of July, 1862, which is to be set apart as a sinking fund, and the interest of which shall in like manner be applied to the purchase or payment of the public debt as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time direct.

Third. The residue thereof to be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Certain bonds were to be applied to the sinking fund and all other United States bonds redeemed or paid by the United States were to be canceled and destroyed. It was never contemplated by anybody when this legislation occurred that the Government of the United States was simply to pay off its debt by installments of 1 per cent. per annum. Nobody thought of that. It is true that that clause was probably put in the law for the purpose of strengthening the bonds. It is undoubtedly true that it was in the interest of the people who were to buy Government securities, to give them character and to give them strength; and it was probably a wise proposition then; certainly it is there in unmistakable terms that this executive department of the Government is bound to recognize, and unless that statute is repealed, in my judgment it is bound to buy these bonds as it can. I do not say that it is wise policy; I do not say that it is right; but it is the law. I repeat again that it is the duty of the executive departments of the Government to enforce existing law, which I am sorry to say they do not always do. But I will not go into that.

It is not any answer to the assertion for the Senator from Kentucky to ask me do I think it is wise to pay great interest. That is a question for us here; that is a question for the legislative branch of the Government to determine; and if we sit still and leave the law upon the statute book as it is till all the bonds that are LOW payable are paid, then it will be the duty of the Government to buy the other bonds each year or else it will violate the plain, unmistakable language of the statute. I do not know what it will do. I have not any idea—I will not say that, for I have—but I do not know what it will do. I think, however, in all calculations that we are making with reference to the revenue and its reduction we should take into consideration a belief that the executive department will enforce the law, and if we do not want that to be done it is our duty to legislate upon the subject.

The country has been full of complaints of the great amount of money coming into the United States Treasury. I admit I have heard no complaints of that kind. I do not believe any considerable portion of the people of the United States anywhere are to-day complaining that there is too much money going into the Treasury of the United States. I do not believe to-day that 1 per cent. of the people of the United States are complaining of the rates of taxation either on imports or by way of internal revenue. I do not believe that that is the cause of complaint; but the complaint is that when this money comes into the Treasury, there it is locked up and kept where the public do not have the use of it, and it ceases to be of any practical benefit to the people of the United States.

Every monthly statement that comes from the Treasury Department shows us an increasing amount of money in the Treasury; every monthly statement shows an increase that is destructive of the business interests of the country; and yet we sit here and hesitate to legislate upon that subject, and we say the remedy is not to pay the money out, not to provide for paying your debts, and not for the purpose of conducting the Government as it ought to be conducted, but you should go to work and see how you can prevent the money from coming into the Treasury. It is exactly as if a great manufacturing establishment was getting too much money, and they commenced saying, "We will not take out any," when they have opportunities to pay it out, and pay it out with profit.

I am not going over this subject in detail. We have in the Treasury of the United States a very large amount of money now that is not needed there. It is a crime against the public that it is there, and if the executive department has not the authority to pay it out, then the responsibility should be laid at the door of the legislative department, that they do not provide for the proper payment of this money for some proper purpose. If we have not any other proper thing to pay it for, then let us provide how the Treasury Department may pay the public debt, upon what plan or upon what principle it may say to the people who own the debt that is not yet due, that it will pay it. But, sir, we need not do that. There are plenty of opportunities, and wise opportunities, to pay out the excess of revenue that is in the Treasury, and all that will come in, if there should be $90,000,000 of surplus next year.

A few days ago the Admiral of the Navy sent to a distinguished member of the other House a letter which appears in the RECORD, and the astonishing statement is there made by the Admiral of the American Navy that with all the ships that we have got we have one ship only that could in three months do service if we were assailed, and that ship has upon it one single gun. He makes a statement over his signature that can not be misunderstood or mistaken. He says the Dolphin is the only vessel we have got that could be put to sea within three months.

Think of it, Mr. President! Yet we are crying out against the surplus that is coming into the Treasury when we are without a fortification on any of our coasts, with all our great seaports that could be raided by any of the fifth-rate powers of the world. Chili, China, Japan, Spain, or any of the inferior nations, when compared with ours, could wipe out every seacoast city that we have got; and not only that, Mr. President, but every city on the great lakes. By our treaty with Great Britain we agreed to keep on those lakes but one war vessel, a vessel that to-day, I understand, has a cast-iron gun, used to announce the rising and the setting of the sun, and scarcely good for that. England could put on the great lakes a fleet that would knock down every single town on the great lakes in twenty-four hours; while we were endeavoring not to build a navy because we had time to determine whether we ought to build a navy. With the Welland Canal they have access to the lakes, and they could put in their fleets of iron-clad war vessels and bombard Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, and all the great cities on the lakes.

Mr. President, is this wisdom? Is it worth while to spend our time in determining what shall be the reduction of the revenue when we have the necessity for such a vast expenditure? Spain is not regarded to-day as a first-class nation, and yet her war vessels are all over the world, and recently Spain mortgaged her forests and her public lands for $45,000,000 to put into war-ships. We not only have not any ships, we not only have not any fortifications, but we have not any guns. Only a few days ago the press published a telegram that Great Britain had sent across to the western coast more efficient guns than the United States was able to muster all told. Let me call attention to what the Admiral says about the number of guns. In the letter to which I have called attention, and which I commend to the perusal of Senators, he says:

> It is not twenty, nor forty, nor a hundred guns that we require, but it is thousands of them, especially in a country whose motto seems to be "festina lente." England has such a start of us that she has to-day 7,000 rifled guns that she can bring into action in time of war, France has 6,000, and Russia about 5,000. Here you have at once three leading naval powers combined with 18,000 high-powered guns, while we can boast of but 29.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that that bill be informally laid aside.

Mr. BECK. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is asked to lay aside informally the unfinished business until the pending bill has been completed. The Chair hears no objection, and that order will be made. The sundry civil bill continues before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TELLER. The Admiral continues:

> We have some old 8-inch rifles, converted from 11-inch smooth-bores, by which a good smooth-bore was spoiled and a poor rifle was made.
>
> There should be at least six hundred of the heaviest high-powered guns purchased abroad at once for the use of the Army and Navy, so as to have armaments for our ships as soon as they are built, and to be able to defend the principal cities of the Union, which are liable to be attacked by any nation. It is not Great Britain, Russia, France, or Germany that we have to fear in our weakness so much as some of the small South American countries. Even Venezuela is about purchasing ironclads in Europe, it is supposed to resist the mild demands made upon her by this Government for many years. She finds it cheaper to buy ironclads than to pay a debt that does not altogether meet her ideas of justice.

Mr. President, we have been going on in this way for a great many years. We have been practically without war vessels, practically without seacoast defenses for many years. There was at one time some excuse, and that was when the country was uncertain whether it was ever going to be able to pay its great debt or not. But since the debt has been so rapidly reduced, since money has accumulated in the Treasury in such quantities, there can be no further reason why we should not make preparations for the defense of our seacoast.

I know it has been said on this floor that you did not need forts, that you did not need ships, that modern science had provided another method of meeting a hostile fleet, and that was by the torpedo. But you can not use a torpedo on any of the coast unless you have a place at which you can put your men that is bomb-proof. And as the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] suggests, we have not got any torpedoes, and they could not be made in a day. We are absolutely at the mercy of every people who choose to assail us, and I listened with astonishment the other day when the question was asked, "do you mean war?" There is no nation in the world that is so unready for war to-day as the people of the United States. We could be buffeted and insulted by the smallest power in the world, and we should be compelled, for a time at least, to submit in humiliation and chagrin.

Take the Pacific coast. There is a hundred million dollars in the subtreasury in the city of San Francisco. A single ironclad in that harbor could compel the authorities to put every dollar of it on that vessel, or suffer the consequence of the destruction of the city. An ironclad coming into New York Harbor could levy tribute of millions and millions upon that city, and if the state of affairs existed that existed one hundred and fifty years ago in the world, when privateers went out, or pirates more properly speaking, we should be at the mercy of a common pirate. And yet we sit here day after day and do nothing except to consult as to how we may reduce the revenue, whether we ought not to take the tax off sugar, and whether we ought not to take the tax off tobacco, or whether the tariff should not be reduced upon imports in some respects.

Mr. President, I live in the interior. The people whom I represent have not any special interest in this. They are away and would be away from the noise of war, because that kind of war would be upon the coast and the coast only. But the people there believe it to be the duty of the Government of the United States to put itself in position where it can be independent of the powers of the world.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] said here the other day that all the forces of the world, of five worlds like this, could not subdue us upon our own soil. That may be true. We can create an army in a night. You cannot create a navy in two or three years. You can not build a gun in a year and a half. You cannot build fortifications under two or three years; and when six millions is proposed there are Senators on this floor and others in public life who are staggered at the vast sum of money that is going into fortifications on the coast. Torpedo shelter could not be built with it.

Mr. President, I think it is the duty of the legislative department of the United States—for it is only responsible for this neglect—to at once take some steps, not to reduce the revenue, not to see how little money can come in, but to put us in a position where we shall not be disgraced by the Admiral, the highest officer of our Navy, declaring to the world that of all the ships we have got that we could put into use to-day there is but one, and that has upon it one single gun! As an American I am ashamed of the showing. I read it with chagrin. I knew it was true. The people of the United States believe that it is the duty of the legislative department to go to work and devise some method by which the coast may be protected; and that necessitates the building of guns, and that necessitates the building of ships.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to another thing, that the money is now in the Treasury with which it may be done; and 95 per cent. of every dollar that shall be put into a fortification, 95 per cent. of every dollar that shall be put into a great gun, 95 per cent. of every dollar that shall be put into a great ship is paid to American labor, is money well spent to start the wheels of business and all departments of commerce and trade. It is not a waste. The maintenance of a great army in time of peace is a waste of money. I am not in favor of it. We know the spirit of the American people and know we can make soldiers out of them in a day, not as good as they will be after a year's service, but we can make soldiers out of them at once. But, I repeat, you can not build ships and you can not build fortifications, and you can not make guns in a day; these things require money and require time, patience, industry, and skill.

Mr. President, this discussion may seem foreign to the pending bill, but whenever there is a question of the reduction of the revenue, and whenever a bill comes in here of this character we always hear something about the reduction of the revenue, and we are admonished that the revenue is too great. I want to put in my protest, as the Senator from Connecticut did his. I am opposed to the reduction of the revenue in any branch of the Government until preparation is made for the defense and honor of this country commensurate with its greatness and its internal strength. With more money in its Treasury than all the other combined powers of the world, with more money coming in, with a people who have the ability to pay, and the willingness to pay, we are the laughing-stock and the scorn of the smallest nation of the earth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations for an explanation of the purpose of the proviso on the fourteenth page, commencing in line 314.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am willing to wait until the bill is in the Senate before I ask my question.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I desire to call the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to what must have been an oversight on the part of the committee. By the act approved July 7, 1886, entitled "An act providing for the establishment of certain light-houses and fog-signals, and for other purposes," provision was made for the purchasing of a site and establishing of a number of light-houses, among others one at San Luis Obispo, Cal., $50,000; at Point Sur, California, $100,000; at Castle Hill, Rhode Island, $10,000; above Pulpit Point, Whitehall Narrows, New York, a light to guide vessels through said narrows, $200; also for the erection of a light-house on Crabtree's Ledge (so called), between Bean Island and the mainland of Crabtree's Neck, in Frenchman's Bay, Hancock County, Maine, $25,000; Deer Island, in Boston Harbor, Massachusetts, $35,000; also for the establishment of a light-house at Two Harbors, Minn., $10,000; for a light-house on Gould Island, Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island, $10,000. Appropriations were made in the sundry civil bill at the last session of Congress for the following places provided for in that bill: Castle Hill, Rhode Island; Whitehall Narrows, New York; Crabtree's Ledge light-house, Maine; Deer Island light-house and fog-signal, Boston Harbor, Massachusetts; Two Harbors light-house, Minnesota; and all the rest, with a single exception, have been put in the pending bill, the exception being the light-house at Cape Meares, Tillamook Bay, Oregon. The act to which I have called attention provides as follows in reference to that:

Also for the purchase of a site and the construction of a first-order coast light-house at Cape Meares, Tillamook Bay, Oregon, the cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $60,000.

In the report of the Light-House Board the steps taken under the sundry civil act of last session to execute the act of July 7, 1886, are stated. In a further letter from the Light-House Board to the Secretary of the Treasury, in which are specified those light-houses that are deemed indispensable to the commerce of the country, this light at Cape Meares, Tillamook Bay, Oregon, is mentioned. It is also contained in the Book of Estimates. On page 162 I find:

Cape Meares light-station, Oregon: For the purchase of a site and the construction of a first-order coast light-house at Cape Meares, Tillamook Bay, Oregon, or at Cape Lookout, Oregon, if, in the opinion of the Light-House Board, that site is more advantageous to mariners, $60,000.

I said that all the light-houses provided for by the act of July 7, 1886, have been provided for either in the sundry civil bill of last year or in this bill, with this single exception. I do not know of any reason why it should not go in.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the amendment suggested by the Senator?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I have not offered any amendment yet; but is there any good reason why this item should not go in? I am not able to see any reason why all the rest should be contained in the bill and this one be left out.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt there should be a light-house at this point; but my recollection is, and I speak only from memory, that if the Senator will look at the Book of Estimates he will see that this is in the alternative, either at the point named by the Senator or at Cape Lookout, Oregon; but my recollection is that the secretary of the Light-House Board stated to us that there was difficulty about locating the site for this light-house, that they had not yet done so, and that they were not likely to do so in the very near future, for some reason which they gave but which is not now in my mind. I know what the Senator says is correct, and I noticed at the time that it was marked "indispensable" in the letter addressed to the Committee on Appropriations of the other House——

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Dated November 20, 1886, and put in the list of indispensable light-houses estimated for. I will move an amendment to meet the requirements of the law.

Mr. ALLISON. The only trouble is about the site.

Mr. HALE. How would the Senator from Oregon fix the location?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Congress, by the act of July 7, 1886, provided for it, and I propose to direct the Light-House Board to execute the law.

Mr. ALLISON. What does the Senator propose?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon sends up an amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10, after line 231, it is proposed to add:

Cape Meares, Tillamook Bay, Oregon: For purchasing a site and the erection of a first-order coast light-house, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Before the bill is reported to the Senate I desire to say a word in reference to the amendment offered yesterday in regard to the cable at the mouth of the Columbia River, which was passed over. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations suggested that it was a matter more properly belonging to the deficiency bill. Perhaps we can get some more information for the Senate in regard to that matter from the Secretary of War after the bill is reported to the Senate, and I shall not press my suggestion now.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to move an amendment on pages 50 and 51, but before I make the motion I ask that the two letters which I send to the desk may be read. I wish Senators would give a little attention to the reading of the letters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letters will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 2, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions relative to the transfer to the Pension Office Building of certain bureaus of this Department, as proposed in the sundry civil appropriation bill, and to invite your careful consideration to the objections to such transfer therein set forth.

I concur in the opinion of the Commissioner to the effect that very considerable embarrassment and inconvenience in the transaction of the public business would result from the crowding of other bureaus into the office building.

Very respectfully,

L. Q. C. LAMAR, Secretary.

Hon. W. B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, February 2, 1887.

The honorable the Secretary of the Interior:

Referring to the conversation I had with you last evening, and in response to your verbal request, I have the honor to give you the following statement as to the practicability of housing and accommodating in this building any other than the clerical force of the Bureau of Pensions.

The number of persons at present borne upon the rolls and employed in this building is 1,242, and as I have already noted there will be accommodations required for immediate use for 221 additional employés, (who will be assigned to existing divisions) for work upon the Mexican Pension bill.

The building is in a state of incompleteness. Its floors are torn up and littered with the material for construction. Great piles of sand, mortar, and brick obstruct its main floors.

The fourth floor, which was directed to be added by an act of the present Congress at its first session, is only partially completed, and its construction has greatly delayed the occupation and use of the remainder of the building, as great joists of iron and large quantities of other material had to be hauled into the building, obstructing its floors and galleries, and are still being removed into position.

When the work shall have been completed, as I have before pointed out, the new fourth floor will not add to the clerk accommodating capacity of this building, for the reason that the added upper rooms being but 2 feet in height, and being directly under the great metal roof of the building, will be of a torrid temperature and insufficiently lighted from above, by sky-lights, yet to be completed.

All the improvements that may be made having for an object the use of the new fourth floor, will but fit it for the storage of files.

According to the best estimates that I am able to obtain, the work on the new building will not be completed much, if any, earlier than a year from this time; how much sooner or later I can not tell, but workmen will be going in and out for probably that or a longer time.

I respectfully suggest that the chairman of the committees of Congress, Senate and House, having the matter of the location of the clerical force of the Government in charge, be respectfully requested to visit the building now occupied by this Bureau to the end that they may personally verify the correctness of the statements and conclusions herein made and reached. I do not think but that they will conclude that the addition at this time of other clerical force than that belonging to this Bureau will be to the detriment of the public service.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

JOHN C. BLACK,
Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. ALLISON. The Commissioner of Pensions seems to utterly misapprehend the scope and intent of our amendment. The provision in the House bill provides practically that this shall not be done until the completion of the present building. It says "within the fiscal year 1888," that it may be done a year from now or a year from next June and still be within the provisions of the law.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to move to strike out, beginning in line 1218, on page 50, the words "shall within the fiscal year 1888" and insert "may within his discretion," which will authorize the Secretary of the Interior to transfer if in his judgment it can be done at any time without reference to date, to that building.

I should like to say that I called at the Pension Office this morning and saw the Commissioner of Pensions. This building, as the Senator from Kentucky perhaps will recollect, was appropriated for after General Meigs had been before the Committee on Appropriations; and when asked how much money he wanted appropriated for a certain number of clerks in the Pension Office he gave his sum, and this building was erected for the number of people who were then in the office, and the plans were all made on that basis. Since that time there has been a very large increase of the employés of that bureau, and there must be a very great increase hereafter. It was built while I had the honor to be Secretary, and I desire here to say that I am not at all responsible for the architectural beauty of that building. I did not have anything to do with that. I had to locate, with others, the site, and had to see that the money appropriated by Congress was properly paid out, and that was the extent of my jurisdiction; but having that matter in the Department when I was Secretary, I took some interest in the work as it progressed, and I felt confident yesterday that no portion of these outside bureaus could be put into that building without detriment to the service. So I called this morning for the purpose of ascertaining whether I was mistaken and to determine what the suggestion of making some changes in the roof had done toward it. I find the upper rooms can only be used, as they are, for file-rooms and document rooms, and not at all for clerks. It will be utterly impracticable to put clerks there, and this provision ought not to be imperative on the Secretary. Therefore, I move that the clause be amended to leave it in that way, so as to place it within the discretion of the Secretary, who will undoubtedly do it if it is necessary and proper to have it done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, about the only merit this new building has is its immensity, and it is proposed now to take that away; that is, not to utilize the space that is found within the four walls and under that marvelous roof which disturbs the vision of every beholder.

The Committee on Appropriations in considering this matter were confronted with the House provision, which puts bodily into this building several of the very large bureaus of the Government, including the General Land Office, the Indian Office, the Bureau of Education, which is a smaller bureau, the Office of the Commissioner of Railroads, which is a smaller bureau, the Bureau of Labor, the office of the agent for the payment of pensions in the District of Columbia, and the Geological Survey. The estimate of the House of Representatives of the capacity of this building was that it would hold the Pension force and all of these other large forces. The Committee on Appropriations, giving very careful consideration to the subject, and summoning the Secretary of the Interior in order to consult with him, concluded that the House had put in too much, that the building would not hold all of these large bureaus; but it did decide that in its judgment there was room to put in the small Bureaus of Education of Labor, and of the Commissioner of Railroads; and when the Secretary of the Interior, who has since transmitted the documents sent to the desk by the Senator from Colorado, was asked if that could be done, he expressed his willingness to attempt the use of that building for this purpose.

Mr. TELLER. To hold all these bureaus?

Mr. HALE. No, those that the committee selected, the small bureaus. He said it was impossible to put in these larger bureaus, but that with these small bureaus which the committee have selected to put in there, which altogether have not a large force, he believed he could get along. I have no doubt that he can get along. I have no doubt that more than the Committee on Appropriations have provided for might be put into this building in addition to the present force now there. I can understand that the force which is there now and the Commissioner of Pensions at the head of that force, would prefer that nobody else should be there, that it should be his exclusive domain, and that nobody should trench upon it, and that he should have entire say and sway in that building. That is natural enough; I am not speaking of it complainingly; the committee finds that everywhere; but I believe that in that immense building there is room for a good deal of clerical force aside from all the Pension Bureau will need for its purposes for years to come, and I think the committee has been very moderate in selecting so small an additional force to be put into the building. But of course the Senate can settle this matter in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado. If it is left to the discretion of the Secretary, beset as he will be by the Commissioner, who is determined that nothing more shall go into the building, nothing more will go into the building. Unless we fix it in the bill and declare in terms who shall occupy this building there will be no addition to the present force there.

One remarkable thing is seen in Washington, that build no matter how much we may, add whatever number we may feel obliged to do to the great spacious edifices here owned by the Government, upon the ground that when we build them it will be true economy in the saving of rents paid by the Government, still the renting of outside buildings goes on increasing, and it will always be so until Congress takes the matter of the uses of these buildings into its own hands and sees that they are properly filled up, and that there shall not be such waste places. There is no reason why in a room 20 by 30 feet there should not be more than half a dozen clerks. More than that number can work to advantage, very many more.

Mr. TELLER. They can not.

Mr. HALE. More than that number can work in a room 20 by 30 feet. One merit that is claimed for this building in particular is that its ventilation is such, its light is such that more room can be utilized than in any other building in the city. Whether that is so or not, I do not know. I am not inclined to believe much in the merit of the building any way, but I know that that is claimed. I know if the amendment suggested by the Senator from Colorado is adopted there will never be anything in there but the pension force.

Mr. TELLER. This building is a fair illustration of the impropriety of Congress attempting to deal with details. This building is the result of the wisdom of a committee of this body in the interest of the economy spoken of by the Senator from Maine, a monstrosity that everybody who goes up and down the streets on which it stands is ashamed of; and yet the architect was bound to build a building with a certain amount of space for a certain amount of money.

Mr. HALE. That was not it. It was started with the idea of a limit, but, like almost every other public building, that limit was soon exceeded and the appropriations were made at the suggestion of the architect after that, without regard to limit. So he was not held in an iron clamp so far as money was concerned.

Mr. MCMILLAN. It was very unfortunate that Judiciary Square was taken for it.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator says it was unfortunate that Judiciary Square was taken for it. Let us see about that. I think so, too, but in the interest of economy and with a determination not to give the executive officers any control over it, for fear they would abuse it, the committee, of which the Senator from Maine was a member, provided it should be put upon the public property of the United States in this city; that no land should be bought. You could not afford to do that. We had two places where we could put it. One was down by the market, where the old canal used to be, where the evidence was that the water had stood 4½ feet within the last ten years—because it is since I have been in the Senate, I have forgotten the year—right where the building was proposed to be put. No basement could be put there, no fires could be kept at such a time, and twelve hundred or fourteen hundred clerks would be turned out without anything to do. The Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of War, and the architect, General Meigs, were authorized to locate this building. They had their choice to locate it there or upon Judiciary Square. Nobody doubted where they would locate it. It would have been a criminal offense, in view of the character of the soil upon which the building was to be put, the unhealthy condition it would have been in after it was built, to have put it in the other place, and so it was put on Judiciary Square.

Now the Senator from Maine says that Congress should designate where the employés are to be put. Was there ever such a proposition? Congress to determine where the Secretary shall put his clerks, and how many he shall put in a room!

The Senator complains that all the time we erect buildings and the departments want more. The Senator lives in a part of the country that is completed and finished and which is practically standing still. He ought to remember that the greater part of this country is increasing all the time in population; that where we had 30,000,000 people a few years ago and our buildings were largely built for 30,000,000 people, we have now 60,000,000, and the business increases proportionately, and will continue to increase. We can not erect buildings fast enough to keep up with the demand. There are employés to-day in the Interior Department crowded to such an extent that in some cities of the world the public officers would be indictable for keeping so many people in that space. They would be indictable in any place where there was proper and due regard for the health of the people. Yet the officers are compelled to keep them there in such a condition as to injure their health and destroy their lives in the interest of economy, in the interest of saving a few dollars.

I say that it is an imposition upon the head of a department to say that he has not the judgment to determine where he can put his clerks, and it is an imposition upon the Executive Department of the Government for this body, or the other, or both together, to say they will detail the clerks to particular rooms. The Senator says Congress ought to do this.

Look at what the other House have done in the bill which they have sent us. If it becomes a law as it came from the House, the Secretary of the Interior could not crowd those people into the rooms if he put them doubly as thick as they are to-day. Yet the Senator says that Congress knows more about it than the head of the Department, that Congress is the proper authority to determine it, and yet he has before him the bill which he himself admits is impossible of execution. To put the Land Office with its records and all other things, the Indian Office with its records and its numerous clerks there, is impossible, and the committee admit that it is impossible. That is an evidence which ought to be taken by Senators of the inability of the Senate or the House to legislate upon the subject.

How many Senators on this floor know whether there is room there or not? The Senator from Maine does not know it. He has never been there to see. No one knows it who has never been there; and the men who have been there and who know the condition of things say that there is not room.

Let the legislative department of the Government attend to its part, which is to legislate for and not to administer the Government. When we have done this, next year we shall be asked to detail the clerks by a bill to some particular room, No. 24 or No. 25, if the Senator from Maine thinks he knows more about it than the head of the proper department.

It is not any answer to say that it is hands off for the Senate to say, "You are demanding more room every year." They will be demanding more room every year for many years to come, and it would be wisdom for that committee, instead of sitting back and saying that they must utilize what they have, to go to work and provide for the erection of great buildings. The Government of the United States is paying rent upon property at the rate of 10 and 12 per cent. per annum when there are millions of money in the Treasury unused which could be appropriated, or, if the Government wanted to borrow the money, it could borrow it at 2 per cent. per annum with which to erect these buildings.

Although this is an administration with which I am not in sympathy and for which I am not responsible, I am willing to trust the heads of all the departments with all proper executive matters. I think it is proper and just that this matter should be left to the Secretary of the Interior, and if he does not put other offices there it will be evidence to my mind that they ought not to be put there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have the yeas and nays upon the question. It is not very big, but I want to know whether we are to proceed in this way, and whether we propose to administer for the different departments in matters of detail. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BLAIR. Let the amendment be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Interior," in line 1218, it is proposed to strike out the words "shall, within the fiscal year 1888," and insert "may, within his discretion;" so as to read:

The Secretary of the Interior may, within his discretion, cause to be removed to the Pension building the office of Commissioner of Railroads and Bureau of Labor, &c.

Mr. HALE. I wish to say that there is no attempt here made to interfere with the proper administration of the departments by the heads of those departments, as suggested by the Senator from Colorado, but Congress has found whenever we have erected new buildings and appropriated money to pay for them, sometimes in very large sums, that it has to do something about the occupation of the buildings more than simply leaving it to the discretion of the heads of the departments. There was a long controversy about the occupation of the new State, War, and Navy building. A committee of Congress spent a great deal of time and bent its steps to that building a great many times for the purpose of determining how the space should be divided between the different departments, and how much force should be put in, because the heads of departments are constantly, as I said before, beset with importunities not to bring many people into the building. In this very bill, with reference to the State, War, and Navy Department building, there are provisions that certain bureaus in the War Department shall be put into that building. The danger would be, if Congress did not intervene, that they would not be put into the building, and that they would go on occupying outside rooms and buildings, and thousands of dollars would have to be appropriated yearly to pay for the rent of outside buildings.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator if that does not arise from the fact that there are three departments of the Government occupying one building?

Mr. HALE. No; it does not.

Mr. TELLER. I think it does.

Mr. HALE. Some of the difficulty arises from that fact, but the main difficulty, the fundamental trouble is that if the matter is left entirely to the heads of the departments, the danger is that they will not get in more than 60 per cent. of the force that the building has actual capacity for. It is to meet that danger that Congress, which appropriates the money and furnishes the buildings, continues its supervision over the occupation. It does not attempt to interfere with the little details as to where a clerk shall go, what room he shall occupy, for that would be nonsensical, but it has the right, and ought to exercise it, when it has spent millions of dollars upon the building, taking the revenue coming from the people, to say something about the capacity of the building and how far it shall be occupied.

I hope I shall never see the day when the argument advanced by the Senator from Colorado is entertained and adopted here, that Congress has no right and that it is interfering improperly with a department when it undertakes to say how much force shall be put in a building.

Mr. TELLER. Congress never did say that. We have in the bill a proposition to say as between three departments how one building shall be divided. That is proper. The vice in that case was in erecting a building for three departments without providing in the original plan of the building the space that each department should occupy. Of course the head of each department is anxious to get the best rooms and the most room for his department.

That is a different thing from this proposition. Here is the Secretary of the Interior with certain buildings under his charge, or all of them would have been except that by a special act this building was set apart for the Pension Office, so that perhaps he can not without this legislation control it. But it is the interest of the Secretary to distribute his force properly, and he will not keep in the basement of the building where he sits, people crowded into rooms if there is room anywhere else for them.

I know something about the complaint that has been made of sickness and of death because there was a failure to provide suitable room for the employés of that great Department, a Department that deals with more matters in which the people are interested than almost all the others, a Department in which the people have a direct and immediate interest, in pensions, and lands, and schools, and railroads, and labor, and Indians. Do you suppose that if the Secretary of the Interior found a vacant room in that building, and the clerks were crowded in the basement of the building where he is, he would not move them? He would consult the heads of the bureaus, of course, but he would not allow the head of a bureau to keep a number of clerks in a room that was too small when in another place they would not be crowded.

The Secretary for years has been compelled to decide as to the distribution of space between the Land Office and the Patent Office and the Indian Office, and I never heard before that he was not able to give equitable relief and to make a proper distribution in proportion to the whole room at his disposal. He can do it again, and the present Secretary can do it as well as any of his predecessors.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I do not see any reason why Congress, which makes the appropriation of money to pay for these buildings, should not give attention to the character and extent of their occupation. The controversy to which the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] alluded, which I think is fresh in the recollection of all those who were members of the Senate at that time, in regard to the occupancy of the new State, War, and Navy Department building, shows conclusively that unless Congress does act there will be no economy of space in the use of any public building.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is logical in this matter, because his position is that the executive officers of this Government have a right to do just as they please, and that Congress is here chiefly for the purpose of ratifying what they do, and of doing what it is told by them to do. I want to dissent most vigorously and emphatically from any such idea. I will turn that proposition exactly square around.

I assume from the experience I have had in this Government that there is no overcrowding of rooms in the capital of any consequence. I know plenty of rooms in the Interior Department larger than the room of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate in which only three persons work. If it was the property of private individuals there would be twenty clerks in such a room, and there would then be plenty of space for all of them. This talk about overcrowding is the same kind of talk we hear about putting in elevators, and so on. Persons coming here from the country want to get these things; when at home they can go four steps at a time on a steep stairway, but when they get into the Government service they want to get somebody to carry them all the time, and want to be curried and rubbed down. My friend from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] says they want to have fine baths, &c., but that I think is applied principally to members of the other House. [Laughter.]

The building which has been put up on the north side of Judiciary square is a building which ought to be occupied. It has a large amount of room in it; and not only a large amount of room, but room which is well situated for official purposes. It is well ventilated and has a large court in the interior of the building, which makes it one of the best ventilated buildings in the city of Washington. There can be put into that building two or three times as many people as are in now without any discomfort or without any danger as to loss of life.

Speaking about the matter of loss of life, the mortality among Government officials has not been so great that anybody has been known either to resign or decline an appointment or fail to besiege the doors of the appointing power until he has worn out his shoe-leather if he did not get a place before; so that the mortality is not such as to assume the form of an epidemic. It does not frighten anybody out of the Government service, and the number of the persons who are seeking to get in is as large or larger than ever before, and they now come from a class of people, I think, chiefly who belong to a section of the country where there is plenty of air, and who have had plenty of space to move around in.

Mr. TELLER. And they want plenty of air.

Mr. PLUMB. They are willing to take a room of 20 feet space, and two individuals to the room, if they can get in.

I think the trouble about our legislation is that we do not supervise the executive officers enough. When I say that, I do not mean to reflect upon the heads of departments for what they do. This is a great Government; it goes on and on. The man who goes into office finds he can carry it on in a somewhat loose way, which comes to prevail finally. His duties are simply sitting at a desk and signing letters which are prepared for him. He finds it a comfortable thing to do, and he does not meet the responsibility because the clerks under him do all that for him, and they will certify up to him, from time to time, according to the precedents which have been established in the department, or according to the ones which they shall establish; and he finds that it is much more comfortable for him to do that, and go down to his office, go to receptions and balls, and things of that kind, during seven or eight hours of the twenty-four, than it is for himself to go to the bottom of the administration of the Department of which he has charge, and settle for himself as he ought, being the responsible head, whether what is going on is right or not. So these estimates come up, and these objections to legislation come up, and these recommendations about legislation come up from the clerical branches of the service, and without receiving much, if any, consideration at the hands of the heads of the departments.

One of the most competent men who I think ever was at the head of a department of this Government, and one who sat around the Cabinet table of President Arthur along with my friend from Colorado, told me that he could carry on the business of his department, if permitted to run it as he would run his individual business, for 25 per cent. less money than it took to carry it on, and he said, "I will go a step further; for one-third of the salaries I could carry it on with 25 per cent. less force." He said he had no doubt that was true of all the departments. I have no doubt of it either.

It is because Congress has not exercised sufficient authority over these matters that these things are allowed to go on. The knife has not been put in deep enough. It is not that the Secretary of the Interior is not given discretion enough about what he should do with the public buildings and all the public interests under his control.

I do not speak of it as any reflection upon him; the trouble is simply in the system. It is by thrusting in the knife occasionally by means of appropriation bills that you give strength and vigor and vigilance and efficiency to these departments, and that is about the only way they do get it. In other words, they get into a certain rut.

I do not want to speak of my friend's administration of the Interior Department with any disrespect. That part of it which came under his observation no doubt he disposed of according to his conscientious belief of what the public interest required; but it was a machine in the presence of which he or anybody else who appreciated the situation would have felt helpless. He realized that he would stay there only two or three years. There was no use of his going into it for the purpose of reaching a result unless he could follow it up to a completed system, which he could not do within his term of service.

I am prepared to believe that more use could be made of the Pension building. I think the move should be made, not for the sake of moving, but it will not do any hurt; at least it will shake up some old things, carry off some accumulated dust, and put it into a new relation with things. If there is, as the Senator from Colorado has said, a crowd of people in the Interior Department beyond the capacity of that building, then why, in Heaven's name, not send them down to the Pension Office, where there is room?

Mr. ALLISON. Yesterday the Senate struck out the provision including in this clause the Bureau of Education, which the Committee on Appropriations believed might properly be placed in the Pension building in addition to the bureaus that are now left in by the bill as amended. The Bureau of Education has 39 clerks, the Bureau of Labor 42, and the Commissioner of Railroads has 7; so that as the bill now stands we have provided the enormous situation of adding 49 people to the new building. Now, the Senator from Colorado says that we can not do this because of the overcrowded condition of that building.

Mr. TELLER. No, I have not said that.

Mr. ALLISON. Words to that effect.

Mr. TELLER. I was not speaking of that building as being overcrowded. I was speaking of the other building, where the Secretary himself has his office.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator reads from the Commissioner of Pensions a letter protesting against this assignment because his building is occupied, and yet in the same letter he suggests that he can put 221 more people in it. He gives as a reason why we should not put 49 more people in the Pension building that in the future we are likely to appropriate money to add 221 clerks to the Pension Office.

Mr. TELLER. Is not that a fact?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know whether it is or not. I do not myself believe that it is necessary for executing the pension laws with reference to Mexican war pensions to add at once 221 clerks to the force in the Pension Office.

Mr. PLUMB. It will not be necessary to add 50.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Kansas says it will not be necessary to add 50. I do not believe that it will be necessary to throw into that building 221 new people unfamiliar with the subject of paying pensions and adjusting accounts and records with reference to pensions. So, according to the admission of the Commissioner himself, if we do not appropriate for 221 new people we can put in at least 49 people.

I wish to say one word with reference to this much-abused Pension building. In the first place, when the Committee on Appropriations—because this particular building had its origin in that committee—proposed this new building, we found the city filled with buildings occupied by the Government at a high rent. We found a great granite building going up in the western end of the city, nearly all of it hall-space and stairway, and the Committee on Appropriations believed that it was a wise thing in some way to direct and supervise the building which we intended to erect for the purpose of accommodating the Pension Office, which then had a thousand clerks. Therefore we made the best inquiry we could. General Meigs, who had experience as an architect, as all will agree, among other persons, was called before the committee, and he said he could erect a building of plain brick, fireproof, and sufficiently large to accommodate a thousand people, for $400,000, which was the sum appropriated. That was his suggestion.

At that very session of Congress, contemporaneous with that appropriation, we enlarged the number of clerks in the Pension Office to about thirteen hundred, and when General Meigs prepared his plans for the building he prepared them on a basis of utilizing a force of sixteen hundred people in the building. You may call General Meigs now before any committee of this body and he will tell you that sixteen hundred people can be usefully occupied in the building in a clerical way as clerks usually are employed; that they will have ample space, ample vetilation, and ample light.

The Commissioner of Pensions discloses that there are about twelve hundred people there. I venture to say that there are not twelve hundred people there daily in the occupation of the rooms assigned for the clerical work of the office. That may be the number upon his rolls.

Mr. TELLER. There must be space for them, however.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. Now, then, all the Committee on Appropriations propose to do, as the bill now stands, is to put in that building the Bureau of Labor and the force of the Commissioner of Railroads, forty-nine people. That is the way the bill stands now; and yet the Commissioner of Pensions finds it necessary to appeal to the Senate for the purpose of excluding absolutely any use of the building except by his own clerical force. I regard that as outside of and beyond the duties of the Commissioner of Pensions, and I am glad to see that the Secretary of the Interior, in forwarding the letter here, wrote a very guarded letter respecting it.

Mr. TELLER. He agreed with the Commissioner.

Mr. ALLISON. He said that from the statement made he had reason to believe it would be crowding the force.

For one I think we have gone as far as we can afford to go in the way of curtailing what is proposed by the House of Representatives with reference to the occupation of the Pension building. We are paying $6,000 a year for the rent of a building for the Bureau of Education for the purpose of carrying on the operations of that bureau, which has thirty-nine clerks. The Senate excluded that bureau from the Pension building by its vote yesterday, and I do not care to test that again. The Bureau of Labor has forty-two clerks and the Commissioner of Railroads seven, and the Commissioner of Pensions protests against these forty-nine people coming in, when he states that he has room for two hundred and twenty-one more.

Mr. TELLER. The Commissioner of Pensions assumes that the two hundred and twenty-one additional clerks are to be put in. If they are not put in I think I can say it will be because the Senate does not give him that increased force. It will be given him elsewhere, I understand, beyond question. The Senator from Iowa will not stand up here and object to a sufficient force to execute the law that he voted for. That is what the Commissioner says. He says, "if you give me these people," he does not say if there is to be no more force he could not take the forty-nine. His whole letter goes upon the supposition that he is to have the two hundred and twenty-one people in addition to the force he has.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] says that the Senator from Colorado wants the Executive Department to be independent of the legislative. I do not. In the years that I have served in this body I think my votes will show that I am for holding the Executive Department to a strict construction of the statutes, and I am for holding the legislative department to the legislative business of the country, and not the executive. The legislative department has no more right under our form of Government to invade the Executive than the Executive has to invade the legislative. It is a Government of co-ordinate departments, and when we go beyond proper legislation we go beyond our power.

The details of a matter of this kind ought in all decency to be left to the head of the proper department. It ought not to be interfered with by Congress. It never can be intelligently done by Congress, although the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Kansas may be the principal movers in the legislation. They may as members of the Committee on Appropriations dictate to us, as they do very largely, the legislation of this body, but they cannot enter into the details of the administration of the Government.

The Senator from Kansas complains and says that the departments might be run with less men. I have not any doubt about it. I have not any doubt if you would put at the head of any department a man and give him absolute authority he could administer the Government with half the money; but he must administer it as the legislative department of the Government says he shall.

There is not a man living, with ordinary intelligence and judgment, who could not take the Indian branch of the service and save a very large percentage of the money every year, and hire clerks for less money than the legislative department of the Government says that he must pay for them. But it is the policy of the legislative department of the Government, and has been for years, to say to the executive departments, you must hire so many men at such a salary. If a hundred men offer to do the work for half the money you must hire two hundred men to do it. If a man says "I am willing to work for $1,200 a year," you must see how many men you can put in, and if you put in another one you must put him in at $1,600 if the legislative department says so, although he could procure a man to fill the place for $1,200.

There was a time when all these appropriations were made in a lump and sent to the departments, and the departments hired their clerks at such prices as they saw fit to give. It was thought that was not wise by the legislative department, but that every man employed should be employed at a salary fixed by the legislative department and not by the executive department. The effect of that legislation was to largely increase the expenditures of the Government and not to decrease them. Every time that the legislative department puts its hand upon the Executive Department in matters of detail, it can be demonstrated that it has been at the expense of the Treasury of the United States without a single exception, whether it be in Indian matters, or in lands, or in anything else.

If the legislative department of the Government has the right to say that this bureau shall be put in that building, it may say that all the bureaus shall be put there, and it is destructive of the discretion which ought to be given to the head of a department with reference to the distribution of its clerical force.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1753) for the relief of Mathew H. Fulton;

A bill (H. R. 6538) to define the boundaries of the collection districts of Miami and Sandusky, in the State of Ohio; and

A bill (H. R. 10412) to authorize the construction of a high wagon and foot-passenger bridge over the Mississippi River between the city of East Dubuque, in the State of Illinois, and the city of Dubuque, in the State of Iowa.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1368) for the relief of Richard H. Porter and James Porter, with amendments; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolution, this day received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 38) for the relief of Alfred Hedberg;

A bill (H. R. 228) for the relief of James Roach;

A bill (H. R. 329) for the removal of the charge of desertion against the record of Johnson S. Prall;

A bill (H. R. 798) for the relief of Stephen O'Connor;

A bill (H. R. 1173) to correct the record of Capt. Edmond G. Fechét;

A bill (H. R. 1449) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Henry B. Jay;

A bill (H. R. 7819) to establish the order of promotion in the Medical Department of the Army;

A bill (H. R. 7996) for the relief of William J. Mulvey;

A bill (H. R. 8922) for the relief of Henry East;

A bill (H. R. 8030) to authorize the Secretary of War to credit the Territory of Dakota with certain sums for ordnance and ordnance stores issued to said Territory, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 8319) for the relief of Martin Coughlin;

A bill (H. R. 8331) to regulate the pay of the officers of the Army and Navy who refuse or neglect to provide for the support of their families;

A bill (H. R. 8591) directing the Secretary of War to cause the name of Fred B. Barnes to be entered as a private on the muster-roll of Company I, Seventh Tennessee Cavalry, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 8593) for the repair and preservation of the road heretofore constructed by the Government leading from Vicksburg to the national cemetery adjacent thereto;

A bill (H. R. 8620) for the relief of Henry Durkee;

A bill (H. R. 9339) granting the right of way to the Prescott and Arizona Central Railway Company across the Whipple Barracks Military Reservation, in Arizona;

A bill (H. R. 9446) for the relief of Robert W. Spang;

A bill (H. R. 9486) to correct the military record of Capt. James H. Bone, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 9860) to correct the record of the military service of James W. Kingon;

A bill (H. R. 9905) for the relief of William C. Spencer;

A bill (H. R. 10048) to authorize the Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley Railroad to build its road across the Fort Meade Military Reservation;

A bill (H. R. 10353) for the relief of Andrew J. Edgerly;

A bill (H. R. 10790) authorizing the President to return the Twiggs swords; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 19) for the relief of Silas D. Baldwin.

The bill (H. R. 10804) to effect a re-arrangement of grades of office in the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army was read twice by its title.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask that that bill may lie on the table. There is a Senate bill reported on that subject and it is now on the Calendar of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will lie on the table if there be no objection.

The bill (H. R. 1753) for the relief of Mathew H. Fulton was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The bill (H. R. 6538) to define the boundaries of the collection districts of Miami and Sandusky, in the State of Ohio, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 10412) to authorize the construction of a high wagon and foot-passenger bridge over the Mississippi River between the city of East Dubuque, in the State of Illinois, and the city of Dubuque, in the State of Iowa, was read twice by its title.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that that bill may lie on the table. The Committee on Commerce of the Senate have under consideration a similar bill, and intended to report it this morning. I desire, when they make their report to substitute the House bill, which I ask may lie on the table in the mean time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the bill will lie on the table.

GOVERNMENT GROUND IN NEWPORT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1154) to authorize the city of Newport, R. I., to use the site of Fort Greene as a public park, which were in lines 6 and 7 to strike out the words "during the pleasure of Congress," and at the end of the bill to add the following proviso:

Provided, That such use of said property shall cease and be terminated whenever the Secretary of War shall elect and give notice of such election to the public authorities of said city; and upon such termination the United States may enter and reoccupy the same as upon a lease terminated; but no right or claim to damage by reason of such termination and reoccupation, nor for any cause growing out of any improvement made or other thing done by the said city under the right conferred by this act, shall accrue to said city or to any person against the United States, or any agent or officer thereof.

The amendments were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ARMY HOSPITAL STEWARDS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1119) to provide for the appointment of hospital stewards in the United States Army, and to fix their pay and allowance; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MILITARY POST NEAR DENVER, COLO.

The PRESIDING OFFICER also laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2477) making an appropriation for the establishment and erection of a military post near the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. That bill is substantially the bill that passed the Senate, except that the Senate passed a bill appropriating $250,000, and the House has appropriated $100,000. I should like to move to concur in the House amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it lie on the table for the present and we can take it up in the morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will require unanimous consent to lay aside the appropriation bill and take this bill up.

Mr. TELLER. Let it lie on the table. I can call it up in the morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will lie on the table for the present.

RICHARD H. PORTER AND JAMES PORTER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1368) for the relief of Richard H. Porter and James Porter.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment is simply a change in the bill so as to make it the surviving partner of a firm, and in the title of the bill the name of the firm is changed. I should like to have the amendment concurred in so as to dispose of the matter.

Mr. BECK. That is all there is of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. Then I must also yield to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the amendments will be stated.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were in line 1, after the word "Porter," to insert the words "surviving partner and assignee of the late firm of R. H." and to amend the title so as to read "An act for the relief of Richard H. Porter, surviving partner and assignee of the late firm of R. H. & James Porter."

The amendments were concurred in.

MILITARY POST NEAR DENVER.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Iowa having yielded to the Senator from Missouri, I ask him to yield to me that I may ask the Senate to concur in the amendment of the other House to Senate bill 2477. It will not create any discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to taking up for consideration the bill? The Chair hears none, and the amendment of the House of Representatives will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2477) making an appropriation for the establishment and erection of a military post near the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to establish a military post near the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, at some suitable site to be selected by the Lieutenant-General of the Army and approved by him: Provided, That a good and sufficient title, to be approved by the Attorney-General of the United States, be first made to the United States, free of cost, of not less than 640 acres of land, in a compact body, including the site so selected.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, to be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in the commencement of the work of constructing the necessary buildings, quarters, barracks, and stables for the post to be established under the provisions of this act: Provided, That no part of such money shall be expended until the State of Colorado shall have ceded to the United States jurisdiction over the tract of land which may be selected under the provisions of this act.

Mr. TELLER. The amount was reduced by the other House from $250,000 to $100,000. I shall make no objection under the circumstances. I ask the Senate to concur in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Colorado will withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. TELLER. I will withdraw the call for the yeas and nays. There seems to be rather a slim quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. There was an amendment passed over last night to strike out lines 1987, 1988, and 1989, the amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations, in the following words:

Yorktown monument: For erection of a cottage for use of watchman at Yorktown monument, $1,000.

And to insert:

That so much of the unexpended balance ($5,176.74) of the appropriation of $100,000 in the act of Juue 7, 1880 (21 Stats., page 163), for the erection of a monument at Yorktown, Va., as may be necessary therefor, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, may be applied to the building or purchase of a plain, substantial dwelling for the keeper of said monument, and for the care of the same after construction, and of the grounds around the monument: Provided, That the total cost of said building, tool and wood house, &c., shall not exceed the sum of $2,500; and of the balance thereafter remaining not more than $200 shall be expended in any one year in the care of the grounds, buildings, &c., pertaining to said monument.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia what is the reason for changing the amount from $1,000 to $2,500? Nobody in that part of Virginia has a house so expensive as that. I do not want to set a bad example down there.

Mr. MAHONE. Mr. President, I wish to make an explanation. The amendment which is proposed in this case comes from the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate based upon a recommendation of the Secretary of War.

It appears that for the Yorktown Monument there was originally appropriated $100,000. In the erection of the monument all has been expended of that $100,000 save and except $5,000 and a fraction over. It has been advised by the engineer in charge of the work that it is very necessary and proper that the monument should be inclosed, and that some suitable provision in the form of a house should be provided for the accommodation of a keeper.

Therefore, we find in the Book of Estimates for the last fiscal year a recommendation on the part of the Secretary of War that he be authorized to expend this sum for that purpose, that is to say, for the erection of a suitable house for the accommodation of a keeper and for a proper inclosure of the monument, the balance to be used in paying the person in charge a sum not exceeding $200 per annum. We find that in the Book of Estimates of last year.

We also find in the sundry civil appropriation bill of last year an item authorizing the expenditure of a sum not exceeding $5,000 of this balance.

What is proposed in this case is to substitute for the appropriation of $1,000 recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, authority to expend the balance on account of the former appropriation of $100,000, in the direction I have indicated.

As will be seen by the amendment, it does not require absolutely the construction of a house, but it authorizes the Secretary of War to purchase, if there should be a suitable house found.

It is proper to say in this connection that there is an old historical building within 150 feet of the monument, a very large and comfortable building, built of English brick in colonial times, which had a very conspicuous connection with the battle of Yorktown. It was the headquarters of the English army, and it is said that one of our generals, General Nelson, after whom the house is called, gave the artillerymen on our side a guinea for every shot they would throw into that house.

So it has a very historical connection with the monument. It may be that that house can be purchased for a sum not exceeding that for which a suitable building can be erected there for the accommodation of the keeper. The amendment allows the Secretary of War that discretion in this matter, and I hope the Senate will adopt it.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] to the amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BECK. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, it so happens, it seems, that there were $5,000 or $6,000 not expended out of the $100,000 appropriated for the monument at Yorktown. That money has gone back into the Treasury and is as much the money of the people of the United States as any other money we have; but it seems whenever there is any money left from anything, it is so unusual to have any, that ways and means have to be devised to spend it.

All that is needed is a house for a watchman, white or colored, to see that the monument is not injured. I will guarantee that nine-tenths of the people living in that neighborhood, who occupy the same position as this watchman, do not live in houses that cost $500; and to pay $2,500 to build a house for the watchman to sit in and watch the monument does not seem to me the proper thing to do.

The Committee on Appropriations thought they were very liberal when they allowed a cottage to be built that would cost $1,000. I thought it was more than would be needed, but as the United States always does things in a little grander style than anybody else, I consented that $1,000 should be given; but when it comes to paying $2,500 for a house for a single man to sit in to shelter him while he is watching the monument, it seems to be absurd; and therefore I called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MAHONE. It is not proposed to spend $5,000 for the house. The Senator from Kentucky has not read the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. It is proposed to spend $2,500 for the house.

Mr. MAHONE. Here is what we find in the Book of Estimates for last year:

Erection of monumental column at Yorktown, Va.:

That so much of the unexpended balance ($5,176.74) of the appropriation of $100,000 in the act of June 7, 1880 (21 Stat., 163), for the erection of a monument at Yorktown, Va., as may be necessary therefor, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, may be applied to the building of a plain, substantial dwelling for the keeper of said monument, and for the care of the same after construction, and of the grounds around the monument: Provided, That the total cost of said building, tool and wood house, &c., shall not exceed the sum of $2,500; and of the balance thereafter remaining not more than $200 shall be expended in any one year in the care of the grounds, buildings, &c., pertaining to said monument.

That will be found in the Book of Estimates of last year, recommended by the Department. Then we find also in the sundry civil bill of last year a provision appropriating directly $5,000 of this amount. It seems to me that we might very properly appropriate this unexpended balance for the purpose indicated.

Mr. BECK. I ask the Senator from Virginia if the $5,000 which was unexpended on the monument is not as much public money as any other money, and why should that cut any figure in this case?

I ask the Senator again, if in comparison with the people living about there, in a mild climate, near Fortress Monroe, occupying the same relation in life that the watchman would, a thousand dollars is not far greater than the average value of the houses that the people generally occupy in that station of life? Beyond doubt it is, and I can see no reason why we should do more. I am willing that the monument shall be watched; I am willing that the man who watches it shall have a comfortable place to stay in, but beyond that it seems to me simple extravagance to go. The sum is not large, but it is just one of a lot of that sort of things.

Mr. MAHONE. It is scarcely necessary to answer the questions of the Senator from Kentucky. The proposition is self-evident. Of course the money is in the Treasury and is as much the money of the people as any other money in the Treasury, but the intention of Congress was to appropriate $100,000 on account of the monument. The monument has been built. The next thing to do is to take care of it. It is advised by the proper officers of the Government that the items referred to in the amendment are essential to its proper preservation.

In addition to the valuable reminiscence connected with the history of Yorktown which may be acquired under the authority granted the Secretary of War by the amendment to purchase, if within reasonable limits, the old historical house known by the name of Nelson, constructed by the grandfather of General Nelson, who, as I before stated, was conspicuous in Revolutionary times, not only in connection with the war, but in connection with the formation of our Government—there are at Yorktown, besides this, a customs office and a post-office, and I am advised that this house will accommodate all these purposes if it can be purchased. We are paying there $75 a year rent on account of the customs service. If we could purchase that house for $2,500 it would be equivalent to the capital at 3 per cent. of what we are paying now for an office at Yorktown.

I have never been at Yorktown, I am sorry to say. I know nothing about the house, except that I am advised it is situated within 150 feet, or thereabouts, of the monument, and that it will not only be a very suitable building for this purpose but very appropriate in connection with the monument.

Mr. BECK. This is the very first time I ever heard of some grand old historic mansion that could be obtained cheaply to put a watchman in, and then it will take from $500 to $1,000 a year to keep that grand historic mansion in repair from this time on. The committee never heard, and there is nothing in the amendment to indicate, that we were going to establish a post-office and custom-house and other public buildings at Yorktown in the watchman's house.

Mr. MAHONE. They are already established.

Mr. BECK. The idea we had was to build a comfortable cottage to take care of the watchman, and not go either into the customs service or the post-office service or into the purchase of historic houses, which must be maintained in order to protect some plain man, white or colored, while he sits there and sees that nobody chips blocks off the monument.

Mr. HAMPTON. It is not a grand house of which the Senator from Virginia speaks; it is a substantial, plain, old-fashioned brick house.

Mr. BECK. About how large?

Mr. HAMPTON. It has two stories. It is a historical house, and has many historical reminiscences connected with it. Besides being the mansion of one of Virginia's great men, it was used as a hospital for both Federal and confederate soldiers during the war. It is close by the monument, and I am satisfied that it could not only be used with great advantage as a keeper's lodge, but it could be used also to accommodate the officers necessary there to attend to the customs duties.

The provision was considered in the Military Committee, and the Secretary of War was authorized to build or purchase a house. It was left optional with him, and I am satisfied that no more appropriate or suitable house can be obtained than the one to which the Senator from Virginia has alluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] to the amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. I do not know how he would vote, and therefore I withhold my own vote.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], but being satisfied that he would vote for this amendment, I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], who is absent from the Chamber.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COCKRELL (after having voted in the negative). The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] was called out of the Chamber a short time ago to be absent for the evening, and I am paired with him. I understand that he would vote "yea" in this case, and therefore I withdraw my vote, as I would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Blair,	Gray,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Sherman,
Bowen,	Hampton,	Morrill,	Spooner,
Butler,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Teller,

Conger,	Harris,	Morgan,

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the bill can now be reported to the Senate.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I wish to ask whether this is the proper time, or after the bill is reported to the Senate, to reserve the amendment in lines 43, 44, and 45, relative to the public building at Danville, Va.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia desire a separate vote on a certain amendment?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Yes, sir; I wish to reserve that amendment for a separate vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will have that right after the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say that the Senator from Virginia explained to me this morning to my satisfaction that the provision put in by the House is a proper provision, and I am perfectly willing, for myself, to surrender the amendment of the committee, striking it out.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I have information that I did not have yesterday, and I gave it to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations this morning.

Mr. VANCE. The committee's amendment was not agreed to, I see by the RECORD. The committee proposed to strike out the House provision, but that was not adopted by the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Then there is no motion necessary.

Mr. CULLOM. We had better see what the RECORD shows in reference to it. I think there may be a mistake about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerks inform the Chair that the clause was stricken out by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. CULLOM. Is it in now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not, the Chair is informed.

Mr. ALLISON. It was in the original House text, and the amendment was to strike out the House text. If the committee amendment was not agreed to, then the House text stands.

Mr. VANCE. The amendment was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerks inform the Chair that the motion to strike out was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL (to Mr. ALLISON). Then move to reconsider.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider that vote and allow the amendment of the Senate committee to be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The amendment reported from the committee will be considered as disagreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the pleasure of the Senate concerning the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the vote may be taken on all the amendments together.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate and still open to amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee for an explanation of the proviso contained in lines 314, 315, and 316 of the bill. What is the purpose of the proviso?

Mr. ALLISON. That proviso we found in the bill. It is a House provision and it is the present law.

Mr. ALDRICH. It would not be the present law if the proviso were left out, however.

Mr. ALLISON. That is true. The proviso reads:

Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be expended for printing United States notes of large denomination in lieu of notes of small denomination canceled or retired.

That is, of course, a limitation upon the appropriation for the printing of these notes. The same limitation was in the bill last year. As I understand the proviso, it requires the Secretary of the Treasury in redeeming greenbacks of small denominations to reissue greenbacks of small denominations, the distinction between small and large denominations running, I believe, according to the custom of commercial people of the Treasury, to $20, so that if the proviso shall stand it would not be competent for the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem five-dollar notes and issue in lieu of them hundred-dollar notes or thousand-dollar notes, but it would be competent for him to redeem five-dollar bills and to issue in lieu of them ones and twos or tens and twenties. That, I understand, is the construction put upon the proviso at the Treasury, and I believe it is a reasonable and fair construction.

If the proviso is not inserted it is claimed in certain quarters, with how much force I shall not undertake to say, that the Secretary of the Treasury would be compelled by the law as it stands without the proviso to reissue a one-dollar note in place of a one-dollar note retired, and to reissue a five-dollar note in place of a five-dollar note retired, and that thereby the flexibility which this provision allows between $1 and $20 would be removed.

I know that the Treasurer of the United States claims that he can redeem one-dollar and two-dollar and five-dollar notes under the law and issue in lieu of them one-hundred-dollar notes or one-thousand-dollar notes. That is his construction of the provision. The Committee on Appropriations, finding this provision here, looked into the law with great care, and there was a difference of opinion in the committee, I confess, respecting the true construction of the statute. If I understand the object of the inquiry made by the Senator from Rhode Island, it is to strengthen and invigorate the construction given by the Treasurer and the Secretary of the Treasury to the existing law. My own opinion is that this provision is a relaxation of the existing law as it is construed generally by people who have examined it with care. I do not myself undertake at this time to give a construction to the law.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the Senator from Iowa will agree with me that, so far as the practice is concerned, from the foundation of the Government down to the present time, the construction put upon the law by Secretaries of the Treasury and by Treasurers of the United States has been that they had a right to reissue, and they have reissued, notes in any denominations they saw fit in place of those which were retired and canceled.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has not Congress the right to restrain that exercise of power whenever it chooses?

Mr. ALDRICH. I take it for granted they have, and this is a restraint. That is the reason I object to the proviso.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the reason I am in favor of it.

Mr. ALDRICH. This is a restraint on the discretion they have wisely had and have wisely exercised.

Mr. ALLISON. It was a discretion they had under the law up to the passage of the statute of May 31, 1878, restricting and limiting the retiring of greenbacks.

Mr. ALDRICH. The only restriction in the act the Senator now alludes to was on the gross amount. Congress has never undertaken to place any restriction on the denominations to be issued in the place of those which were retired, to my knowledge, and I have never found any Secretary of the Treasury or any Treasurer of the United States who has placed such a construction on the law.

I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa another question as to the practical effect of this proviso. To the extent to which the ones and twos and fives of the United States notes are retained in circulation by the proviso, will not the effect be to exclude to that amount from circulation the silver certificates of the same denominations?

Mr. ALLISON. I think, if this proviso is retained, that the Secretary of the Treasury can issue ones and twos of greenbacks, if he chooses to do so, but if he chooses in lieu of those ones and twos to issue fives, he can do so. They so construe the proviso at the Treasury, and I believe rightly.

Mr. ALDRICH. They consider those small denominations.

Mr. ALLISON. Small denominations as known in commerce and known among banks and known in the Treasury are notes of the denominations of $20 and under, and the larger denominations are those of $50 and upwards.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is that the construction put on it by the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know what he thinks about it.

Mr. BECK. I can answer very promptly. I am content to allow this proviso to remain as it is, because, in my opinion, we shall get something worse from the other House if we strike this out. In the present condition of our circulation the national-bank circulation is diminishing very rapidly, as the Senator knows, for reasons which, perhaps, the banks can not control. Over $100,000,000 in the last three years have been withdrawn from circulation. Hence it is indispensable to have small certificates, based upon coin, or silver certificates as they are known, and it is quite well to give the right of way to those small certificates as far as we can.

Under the construction given by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Treasurer of the United States they can change, and they are changing, small notes into fives, tens, and twenties, the ones and twos making way for the silver certificates. Under this provision they claim that they can do it. Therefore the evil that the Senator from Rhode Island apprehends is not working practically any mischief, as will be seen by the reports. I have them in my hands.

About the time the law of 1878 was passed, on the 30th of June following, there were $21,000,000 of one dollar legal-tender notes; there were $20,900,000 of twos; on May 31, 1886, there were eighteen and one-fourth millions of ones and $18,800,000 of the twos, making a reduction of say $7,000,000. The Secretary of the Treasury tells us that, on the 30th of November, 1886, just prior to his last report, he had reduced the ones, acting under this law. While he had $18,000,000 of ones and $18,000,000 of twos at the beginning of the fiscal year, under the operation of this law he had reduced them till, on the 30th of November, he had $14,300,000 of ones, and $14,900,000 of twos, a further reduction of these small notes for the purpose of giving the certificates the right of way. That process is going on still, and this provision does not prevent the Secretary of the Treasury from doing that under the construction he is giving that all notes are small which are twenties and under. That is the condition.

I think we have allowed that to go on in violation of the law, for I differ with the Treasurer and the Secretary about it. I was thoroughly convinced, after careful examination and consultation with all the officers, that it will do no harm; but for fear some more radical provision should be made and the construction now given by the Treasury Department be taken away from them, as I am afraid it would be if the law was strictly followed, I was content to allow the provision to stand. The law of May 31, 1878, reads thus:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act it shall not be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury or other officer under him to cancel or retire any more of the United States legal-tender notes. And when any of said notes may be redeemed or be received into the Treasury under any law from any source whatever and shall belong to the United States, they shall not be retired, canceled, or destroyed, but they shall be reissued and paid out again and kept in circulation.

The meaning of that was to restrict the liberty theretofore given to the Secretary of the Treasury to change the character of the notes when they were once received in the Treasury, and to maintain them not only in their volume but of the denominations that then existed. The proviso to the act I have just read is as follows:

Provided, That nothing herein shall prohibit the cancellation and destruction of mutilated notes and the issue of other notes of like denomination in their stead, as now provided by law.

So that even as to mutilated notes returned for substitution under the law the proviso was that other notes of like denominations should be issued in their stead.

Now, without arguing it elaborately, as I have done before, my construction is that it was the will of Congress, the determination of Congress, whatever might have been the law before, to retain the $346,000,000 of legal-tender notes in the same denominations that were then in existence. They have been changed since, but the condition is improved by the reduction of the small notes for purposes that I think, under the changed condition of our national-bank currency, the country requires, and it may go on under the provision now in the bill without doing any harm. Therefore I decline to make any question about the strict construction of the act, and I am content to allow the House provision to stand.

Mr. ALDRICH. My objection to the proviso is, in the first place, that legislation of this kind should have no place on a general appropriation bill, and, second, that it is unwise either to limit or restrict the discretion which the head of the Treasury Department has always exercised in regulating the denomination of the notes to be issued by the demands of trade at various seasons of the year.

I had another objection, which is obviated by the construction now placed upon the proviso by the Senators from Iowa and Kentucky, that under the terms of this proviso, strictly construed, the Treasurer of the United States could not fail to reissue ones, twos, and fives of legal-tender notes, and that the effect of this section would be to exclude those denominations of the silver certificates to the amount of twenty-eight or thirty million dollars, as referred to by the Senator from Kentucky.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in the communication sent to Congress yesterday, called the attention of the House of Representatives to the fact that the issues to be made of the one and two dollar legal-tender notes, which he understands to be required by the terms of the proviso now under discussion, would exclude an equal number of one and two dollar silver certificates from circulation.

I sympathize to a very great extent with the attempt which is now being made by the Treasury Department to have the one, two, and five dollar silver certificates added to the circulation, believing it is the only way in which the contraction of our currency can be offset, and I am unwilling that there should be any limitation placed upon him by a proviso of this nature, which, if enforced as the Secretary seems to construe it, would exclude silver circulation to the extent of $28,000,000 of ones and twos if one course is pursued, and to a much greater extent if the fives are included. If, however, it should be given the interpretation now suggested by the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Iowa of course no such result would be reached.

Mr. BECK. I think it will work well.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to renew the amendment proposed on page 56, after line 1358.

From what appears in the RECORD I fear the importance of that appropriation was overlooked by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the point of order which he raised, because it would seem that this is important in two aspects. First, the people of that country are deprived of the benefit of the law passed at the last session making these lands subject to taxation. The statute required that they should be surveyed lands, and from a letter presented here by the Delegate from Montana there are, it seems, fifteen or twenty million acres which can not be reached for taxation because the lands have not been surveyed.

Then it seems in regard to the claim made by the Government against the Montana Improvement Company, which is only a portion of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, an inside ring of that company, a suit has been brought to recover a million and more dollars' worth of timber cut, and, strange as it may appear, there seems to have been a decision rendered that the Government is powerless to obtain any recovery for timber cut upon lands acknowledged to belong to the United States because it is said these lands have not been surveyed, and therefore it is not known to whom they belong, whereas there are previous decisions, and numberless decisions, showing that these men were necessarily trespassers, as the Northern Pacific Railroad Company has never obtained a title by patent to the land.

If it be true that this railroad company, through the Montana Improvement Company, can continue to despoil the Government land of the timber upon it to the extent already accrued of a million and more dollars, and that this can go on until the land shall be surveyed, then it becomes a duty on our part to provide for the survey of the land in order that the timber belonging to the Government may be protected.

There is an additional reason. It is necessary to survey these lands in order to make them subject to taxation. For five years has Congress been engaged in the act of passing a law subjecting the lands to taxation, and now this community are to be deprived of the benefit of the taxation of these lands because they are not surveyed.

I appeal to the chairman of the committee and to the committee whether it does not become their duty to consent to this appropriation in view of the fact that there is no power anywhere to protect the Government land from spoliation by this inside ring of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and that it is necessary to give the people the benefit of the taxation of these lands, which we are denying when we withhold this appropriation for a survey. I appeal to the chairman of the committee if it is not the duty of Congress now, in order to protect these lands and give the people this benefit, that they should cheerfully make this appropriation, so that the survey may be made? It is in my judgment an absolute necessity.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I made the point of order I believe on the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] who proposed this amendment. I did it on two or three grounds. In the first place, we appropriated two years ago $300,000 for the survey of public lands, not one dollar of which practically was used, or perhaps twenty or twenty-five thousand dollars only. We appropriated last year $50,000 for the survey of public lands, and only a small portion of it, I am told, has been used. It is perfectly competent for the administration of the Land Office to apply every dollar of the appropriation for surveys in this bill for the survey of the particular lands which the Senator describes, but if we make a special appropriation for this particular survey we shall be called upon to gridiron this bill with special appropriations for surveys. That is my objection to it.

I think there is great force in what the Senator from Nebraska says, that the railway lands should be surveyed, not only along the line of the Northern Pacific Railroad but along the lines of the other land-grant railroads, where neither the lands of the railroad company nor the lands adjacent thereto can be utilized by the people; but here is a suggestion made by the Senator from Missouri to appropriate $25,000 for this specific purpose. For one I shall have no objection to the Senator from Nebraska providing for the appropriation in line 1439 to be increased, and that will accomplish the object.

Mr. BECK. Make that $50,000 $75,000, and that accomplishes the object.

Mr. ALLISON. That accomplishes the purpose, and it saves us from continually making specific appropriations for specific places.

Mr. BECK. I think that would be well.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall make no objection to that, and I think it would be a wise thing to do.

Mr. BECK. Since this subject has been agitated the Delegate from Montana has called on me and stated substantially what has been said by the Senator from Nebraska. Those lands, both for the protection of the Territory in the right to obtain taxes on them and for the protection of settlers, ought to surveyed, and I will vote to increase the appropriation of $50,000 for surveys to $75,000, with the distinct understanding on my part, at least, that the additional $25,000 shall be so applied; and if it is not I shall be very much disappointed in the face of the facts stated to me by the Delegate from Montana and by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That is entirely satisfactory. Why the Department should withhold the use of money appropriated for such purposes when I have every reason to believe the head of it is in sympathy with the protection of the timber on the public lands, and with making these lands subject to taxation, I certainly do not know. If it be so as the chairman says, that there has been money within reach which has not been used for that proper purpose, then there ought to be some plain, distinct declaration and instruction on the part of Congress that that thing shall be done. If it be true that the head of this Department neglects to discharge a plain duty, that is no excuse for us, and it then becomes our more imperative duty to make this land subject to taxation as Congress has declared, and to protect the public land when it is given up by this very strange decision, as I think, in the face of repeated decisions in the Supreme Court of the United States, to the entire control of this enormous corporation. When we are seeking on the one hand to preserve and protect the public domain and its timber, we sit here quietly by and see a decision of the Supreme Court sanctioning, sustaining, encouraging the cupidity and the aggressive trespasses of this huge corporation in this country.

I am satisfied and content with this explanation of the committee, but I would desire something a little stronger if need be. I think, however, this ought to be sufficient. The few remarks made by members of the committee, two of them at least, will let the Department understand that it is their duty to protect the people so that they may have the benefit of the taxation, and at the same time protect the public lands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the precise amendment proposed?

Mr. ALLISON. Strike out "fifty" and insert "seventy-five" in line 1349.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE OVER THE MISSOURI RIVER AT OMAHA.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report, with amendments, the bill (S. 2896) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the cities of Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senate, as that bill will take but a moment, that it may be now considered. There are reasons why it should be considered so as to go to the House early. It is an important matter that ought to be sent to the House.

Mr. MCMILLAN. It is a bridge bill, and contains all the usual provisions inserted in those bills by the Committee on Commerce, and will take no time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. 2896) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the cities of Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 22, after the word "location," to strike out the words "to the bottom chord of the bridge," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "to the lowest part of the structure."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 24 of section 1, after the word "river," to insert the words "and the bridge itself at right-angles thereto."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of section 1, to insert:

In the clear, and no span over the water way of said river shall be less than 300 feet in the clear, and the said company or corporation shall maintain at its own expense, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 7, to strike out the word "and," and to insert "the."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 2, to strike out the words "so as" and to insert "and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to section 6 the following words:

And if said bridge shall not be finished within two years from the passage of this act, the rights and privileges hereby granted shall be null and void.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD ATTORNEYS.

Mr. BECK. I call for the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the regular order, which is the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States.

Mr. WALTHALL and Mr. TELLER rose.

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The railroad-attorney bill is before the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the state of business, Mr. President? What are we considering?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The railroad-attorney bill, as it is called.

Mr. INGALLS. Let us go on with it, then.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from New York wants to take the floor.

Mr. EVARTS. If the railroad-attorney bill, as it is called, is now before the Senate, I rise for the purpose of taking part in that debate. At the same time, however, I say that I would rather not go on with that discussion this evening, and if the bill can retain its position tomorrow, as I suppose it can, I shall be glad to have it done. In the mean time I will yield to any gentleman.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I now offer an amendment to the pending order, the railroad-attorney bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received, printed, and laid on the table.

SHIP ISLAND QUARANTINE STATION.

Mr. WALTHALL. The Senator from New York having the floor, I ask him to yield to me. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of Order of Business No. 2045, being the bill (S. 3157) to authorize the removal of the quarantine station from Ship Island, Mississippi. I will state that this bill relates to a very urgent matter that involves the health and safety of the people of the gulf coast of Mississippi and Louisiana. It can be disposed of without discussion I am sure.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 3157) to authorize the removal of the quarantine station from Ship Island, Mississippi, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to cause the removal of the national quarantine station now located on Ship Island, in the Gulf of Mexico, to some other island in the Gulf, or in such pass in the Mississippi Delta as may be recommended by a board to be designated by him, and the necessary quarantine buildings and appliances are to be established thereon, for which $45,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is appropriated.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EFFICIENCY OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up Senate bill 2877, Calendar number 1831, which has the approval of the Committee on Public Lands, and I am sure will not take any time.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. 2877) to promote the efficiency of the General Land Office was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that there shall be in the General Land Office ten principal clerks, chiefs of divisions, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, who shall receive a salary of $2,000 each per annum.

Mr. TELLER. This does not create any new offices, but simply classifies the existing force.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL ACADEMY OF DENTAL SCIENCE.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 2055, being the bill (S. 2051) to incorporate the National Academy of Dental Science. The bill will not occupy time. It is simply a bill for the incorporation of scientists in the District of Columbia, reported from the Committee on Education and Labor.

The bill was read.

Mr. INGALLS. What committee reported that bill?

Mr. CALL. The Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. INGALLS. If it is open to objection I should like to interpose an objection at this time. I question the propriety and the necessity for the incorporation by Congress of any such institution, and I shall ask for further information, including the report of the committee, before the bill will pass with my concurrence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. INGALLS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made it can not be taken up now.

TRANSFER OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent to take up Calendar No. 1866, being the bill (H. R. 4083) to empower the Commissioner of Agriculture to transfer certain appropriation. It will take no time.

The bill was read. The Committee on Appropriations reported the bill with an amendment, to add:

and the accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to allow the suspended account of George B. Loring, late Commissioner of Agriculture, the several sums which were expended by him in the purchase of sorghum-seed and beet-seed, and for labor in the distribution of the same, from October 1, 1884, to September 30, 1885, inclusive, which expenditures were made from the laboratory fund, so called, and which the First Comptroller of the Treasury has decided not to be properly chargeable to said fund, said allowance not to exceed the sum of $20,807.80.

Mr. MORGAN. I object to the consideration of that bill now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama objects.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT GROUNDS.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed now to the consideration of Order of Business 2070, being House bill 5097.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5097) to regulate the use of the grounds of the Washington National Monument, known as Public Reservation No. 3, in the city of Washington, D. C.

The bill was reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That public travel in and occupancy of the grounds in and about the Washington National Monument, known as Public Reservation No. 3, shall be restricted to the roads, walks, and places prepared for the purpose by paving, flagging, or otherwise.

SEC. 2. That it is forbidden to occupy the roads in such manner as to obstruct or hinder their proper use; to drive violently upon them, or to use them for the conveyance of goods or merchandise, except on Government service.

SEC. 3. That it is forbidden to offer or expose any article for sale; or to display any sign, placard, or other form of advertisement; or to solicit fares, alms, subscriptions, or contributions upon said reservation.

SEC. 4. That it is forbidden to step or climb upon, remove, or in any way deface, disfigure, or injure any statue, seat, wall, or other structure, or any tree, shrub, plant, or turf, in or upon said reservation.

SEC. 5. That it is forbidden, unless upon permission granted by the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, to discharge any fire-arm, fire-work, or explosive, or to set fire to any combustible, or to make any harangue or oration, upon said reservation; and it is forbidden to utter loud, threatening, or abusive language in and upon the same.

SEC. 6. That it is forbidden, unless upon permission granted by the said Commissioner, to parade, stand, or move in procession or assemblages, or to display any flag, banner, or device designed or adapted to bring into public notice any party, organization, or movement upon said reservation.

SEC. 7. That it is forbidden to mark, scratch, stain, or in any way deface or disfigure any surface or part of the Monument, or to chip off fragments or pieces from any of the stone, iron, or other parts of the completed structure, or its surrounding and accompanying building.

SEC. 8. That the police court of the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction of offenses hereunder, except as hereinafter provided, and such offenses shall be punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, at the discretion of the judge of said court, the fine to be not less than $5 nor more than $100, the imprisonment not less than two days nor more than sixty days; but in the case of offenses by reason of which public property shall have suffered damage to an amount exceeding $100 in value, said judge of the police court may commit or hold to bail the offender for trial before the supreme court of the District of Columbia, where the offense shall be punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a period of not less than six months nor more than five years.

SEC. 9. That it shall be the duty of all persons employed in the service of the Government at the Washington National Monument, or upon its surrounding grounds, known as Public Reservation No. 3, including persons there employed under the United States Fish Commission, to prevent offenses against this act, and to aid the said police and watchmen, by information or otherwise, in securing the arrest and conviction of offenders.

Mr. INGALLS. How does this amendment differ from the bill as it came from the House of Representatives?

Mr. SPOONER. The amendment, as a rule, does not differ in many particulars from the bill as passed by the House of Representatives. It is verbally improved, I think, by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in many respects, and in one particular the amendment proposed by the committee is essential. In the bill as it passed the House of Representatives there was a minimum limit to the fine and the term of imprisonment that might be imposed by the court, but no maximum limit. This maximum limit the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has supplied by an amendment.

I may say that the committee is advised by the board charged with the care of the Washington Monument, of which the President, I believe, is ex officio a member, that there is now no legislation which is adequate for the protection of that structure, and it is being continually defaced and mutilated, and nuisances of various kinds are committed in the reservation, and that some legislation of this kind is needed.

Mr. INGALLS. I have no doubt that there must have been many grievous offenses committed in the national monument reservation to justify such legislation as is proposed in this bill; but if it becomes a law it will be necessary for every man to tread the paths of his feet with more circumspection in that area hereafter. I presume that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have given the bill careful attention, and I know of no limit within the territorial superficies of the United States of America where such extraordinary limitations are imposed upon human liberty.

Mr. MORGAN. The Yellowstone Park.

Mr. INGALLS. The Yellowstone Park, as the Senator from Alabama suggests, may possibly present a parallel. I should be willing to go as far as anybody in protecting that massive and majestic and imposing structure from mutilation or from defacement; but why it is necessary to impose such restrictions upon not only those acts which would result in what this legislation is proposed to prevent, but from the exercise of the ordinary avocations of life and society within so large a space of territory under a Government that is devoted to the preservation of popular liberty, I can not understand.

As I say, the committee have undoubtedly given it proper attention; but if there is no legislation that will prevent mischievous and malevolent mutilation of that monument I am very much mistaken. I believe there is such a law in this District.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question? Do not the general laws apply to that reservation as well as elsewhere in the District?

Mr. INGALLS. Unquestionably.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is not the same law in force for the protection of that monument and the property there that is in force elsewhere?

Mr. INGALLS. For the public buildings, or for this Capitol, or any other of the public property of the United States. At the same time, for some reason these extraordinary limitations upon human liberty are imposed upon the citizens of the United States who happen to set foot within the limits of Reservation No. 3.

I regret that the committee have seen fit to report such a stringent and rigid and unprecedented regulation. Of course I can interpose no objection, because I suppose they must have acted advisedly; but I am satisfied that the restraints which are imposed there are not justified by the condition of affairs in this District, and that they are inconsistent with the principles upon which this Government is founded, and to the perpetuation of the memory of which that structure was erected.

Mr. MORRILL. I think that there are no laws such as are applicable to the defacement or injury of the Capitol which apply to the Washington Monument. This bill has been prepared by those who have investigated the subject, in consequence of the damage already beginning to be inflicted upon the monument in chipping off stones to carry away. I do not believe that there are any restrictions in the bill which will be found to be an infringement of the liberties of any citizen of the United States. I take it that we should all regard horse-racing through the park and all the public grounds as incompatible with the proper use of the ground. I hope that the bill will receive the favorable consideration of the Senate. It has certainly been investigated by the parties concerned, who aver that there is no opportunity now to bring offenders before the police court for any of these petty injuries, or even for gross injuries.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from Vermont would explain how it will chip off fragments of that monument for any person to deliver a harangue in that reservation? Here in section 5—

It is forbidden, unless upon permission granted by the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, to discharge any fire-arm, fire-work, or explosive, or to set fire to any combustible—

Like a match that a person may light to inflame a cigar—or to make any harangue or oration upon said reservation.

Now, the Senator from Vermont states that the object of this bill is to prevent that monument from mutilation, from being in some way or other mutilated by mischievous persons who are disposed to chip off fragments from it, and in order to secure that result we are gravely informed that it is absolutely necessary to prevent the delivery of harangues within that reservation, and that no man shall go in there upon all that vast area to deliver an oration or to make a speech because they want to prevent mischievous persons from chipping off pieces from the corners and angles of that magnificent structure.

Mr. President, it goes without saying that these restrictions are inconsistent with human liberty. There ought not to be any area of territory in the United States of America under the Constitution and laws where for any reason whatever, except it may be one that interferes with public property or protects it from injurious assault, a citizen of this land shall be prevented from entering with purposes that are consistent with the proper use of that territory.

I say again that I do not believe the records of any state, ancient or modern, no matter what its political system may be, republican, democratic, aristocratic, or monarchic, ever passed a statute for the avowed purpose of preventing a monumental structure from defacement that contained such burdensome restrictions as these. Why, there is such sanctity about this place that persons are even prohibited from hauling goods or merchandise through that reservation. A citizen who may want groceries carried to his house is compelled to make the entire circuit of that reservation; he can not pass through it with anything necessary for the convenience or comfort of society or the conducting of personal affairs because it is necessary to prevent persons from defacing or chipping off pieces from this monument. That would be a pretty tolerably loud harangue that would knock chips off from the monument. [Laughter.]

It is forbidden to offer or expose any article for sale, or to display any sign, placard, or other form of advertisement, or to solicit fares, alms, subscriptions, or contributions upon said reservation.

It is forbidden to step or climb upon, remove, or in any way deface, disfigure, or injure any statue, seat, wall, or any structure or any tree, shrub, plant, or turf in or upon said reservation.

Mr. President, all that is necessary in this bill is what is contained in section 7, and that is the object and purpose of the proposed legislation:

It is forbidden to mark, scratch, stain, or in any way deface or disfigure any surface or part of the monument, or to chip off fragments or pieces from any of the stone, iron, or other parts of the completed structure, or its surrounding and accompanying buildings.

That, with the additional section, which provides a penalty for violation of this law, is all that is necessary to carry out the provisions and execute the design the committee say they have in view. I trust, therefore, that the committee will consent to removing these limitations, which apply to no other territory on the face of this earth that I know of, and allow us to pass a bill that will confine legislation to the punishment of the offense that the Senator from Vermont has described.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, it will be understood, of course, that this bill applies only to the particular portion of the grounds where the monument is erected. In relation to the power of harangue, I presume the framers of the bill had witnessed the power of the Senator from Kansas. He is able to make the chips fly upon almost any subject. [Laughter].

In relation to the carrying of goods across this ground, there are plenty of streets between Pennsylvania avenue and South Washington where goods can be transported, and this is the same provision that applies to the ground about the Capitol.

A word now in relation to the propriety of having some provision against assemblages. They would naturally congregate, if there were no provision against it, around the monument, and there would be large multitudes upon the many occasions that might be called who would assemble around the monument. When that is completed and the grounds finished there ought to be some restriction. I do not think we need be alarmed by the grotesque figures of my friend from Kansas in relation to this matter.

Mr. SPOONER. A few words only, Mr. President.

I think the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] has been somewhat hypercritical in his remarks upon this bill. It does not purport to be a measure simply to protect the Washington monument from defacement. That is one of its objects. In addition to that, it is intended to regulate the use of the grounds of the Washington National Monument, known as Public Reservation No. 3. I am informed by gentlemen who are advised on the subject, including Mr. Corcoran and others who have had long to do with this reservation, that there are now no regulations there enforceable as a matter of law governing the use of that reservation, and I venture to say that almost every rule which is formulated in this bill is now in force for the preservation of every public park in the country.

The indictment which the Senator from Kansas makes of the bill is too general to be answered without asking the Senate to notice the provisions of the measure somewhat in detail. The first section is:

That public travel in and occupancy of the grounds in and about the Washington National Monument, known as Public Reservation No. 3, shall be restricted to the roads, walks, and places prepared for the purpose by paving, flagging, or otherwise.

Why not? Why should not public travel—that is the language of the prohibition—be restricted in the use of this public park to the walks and roads prepared for the purpose?

SEC. 2. That it is forbidden to occupy the roads in such manner as to obstruct or hinder their proper use;

What just criticism can be made of that prohibition?

to drive violently upon them,

Is there a public park in the United States in which fast driving is not prohibited?

or to use them for the conveyance of goods or merchandise, except on Government service.

The park, and these paved roadways through the park, ought not to be used for heavy-loaded vehicles. There are other streets and highways provided for such use.

SEC. 3. That it is forbidden to offer or expose any article for sale; or to display any sign, placard, or other form of advertisement; or to solicit fares, alms, subscriptions, or contributions upon said reservation.

These things all ought to be prohibited in a public park where people are promenading. It is a nuisance to be constantly accosted by beggars or by persons having something to sell. As I recollect it, in the great New York Central Park all such things are prohibited.

Section 5, which is construed as prohibiting orations, has received much animadversion from the Senator from Kansas. I desire to ask the attention of the Senate to the language of that section. I think it will be apparent that it is not liable to the criticism made upon it:

SEC. 5. That it is forbidden, unless upon permission granted by the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, to discharge any fire-arm, fire-work, or explosive, or to set fire to any combustible, or to make any harangue or oration, upon said reservation.

If it were advisable in the public interest that an oration should be delivered on that public reservation, this bill provides that it may be done upon permission granted by the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds. Ought it to be left so that every one who chooses may make a harangue upon any subject he chooses to select, and gather about him at any point of this reservation a crowd? I have thought that provision was, as a rule, a fair one, and that there was sufficient elasticity in it to cover a case where properly an oration might be delivered.

And it is forbidden to utter loud, threatening, or abusive language in and upon the same.

Is that pressing too strongly on the liberty of the American citizen?

SEC. 6. That it is forbidden, unless upon permission granted by the said Commissioner, to parade, &c.

There may be cases where a parade would be perfectly proper and where it might be in a measure necessary, and under this bill as it is drawn, but it was not so as it came from the House of Representatives, that is left open to the action of the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds. Where the circumstances are such that the permission should be granted it is only fair to presume that it would be granted; but, as a rule, assemblages and parades and processions upon the reservation ought to be prohibited.

Section 7 relates only to the protection of the monument itself, which, as I have observed, is only a part of the object of the bill.

There is certainly nothing startling or unusual or improper in this bill, and I hope it will pass.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Wisconsin whether the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have any information which they can communicate to the Senate in reference to the rumor which has found expression in the newspapers here that some authority has given over Armory Square to the use of railroad companies entering the city, whether they have considered the propriety of extending the mantle of this or some other reservation there, so that it shall not be subject to spoliation by railroads.

Mr. SPOONER. For myself, I can say to the Senator that that subject has not been considered by the committee at any time when I have been present.

Mr. INGALLS. In reply to the interrogatory of the Senator from Massachusetts, as it relates to a matter of great public interest, I would respond that in considering the question of the removal of the steam railroads from several of the streets which they now occupy, and providing for a union depot, the commissioners of the District, largely under the direction of the engineer commissioner, Major Ludlow, formulated a bill providing for the removal of the present Baltimore and Ohio depot and tracks and the depot of the Baltimore and Potomac and its tracks from the mall or reservation, and their concentration upon what is known as Armory Square. That is merely a tentative proposition and has no foundation in law, and has not proceeded to any extent whatever to the adoption of the scheme that has been proposed. There is no servitude imposed upon Armory Square whatever, and the whole subject is before the committees of the two Houses for consideration.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not care to take up further the time of the Senate on this bill. I think in examination it will be found that it contains no regulations other than such as are usual for the preservation of such reservations.

Mr. INGALLS. What are the boundaries of the Reservation No. 3 as expressed in the bill?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not understand that the boundaries of the reservation are defined in this bill.

Mr. MORRILL. From the Potomac to Fourteenth street, I think.

Mr. SPOONER. The first section of the amendment says:

That public travel in and occupancy of the grounds in and around the Washington National Monument, known as Public Reservation No. 3—

I suppose that will be found on the maps.

Mr. INGALLS. My object was to inquire whether or not this legislation was intended to cover the whole public mall from the Capitol up to Observatory Hill.

Mr. MORRILL. Oh, no.

Mr. INGALLS. There is no reason why it should not.

Mr. MORRILL. It is only this reservation which comprises the lot where the monument is.

Mr. INGALLS. That shows the futility of the argument that has been made. The public reservation or mall extends without interruption from the Capitol through the Botanic Garden square and the one beyond, and thence toward the Agricultural grounds and the Smithsonian; then through the Monument grounds, and so on to the foot of the old Naval Observatory Hill or Easby's Point; and this bill proposes to select from that portion of the public reservation this particular area of territory around the monument, and leave the rest of this great park, which the Senator says ought to be restricted by these same limitations, without any law and without any power to enforce these restrictions. Now, either the argument that the Senator from Wisconsin has made ought to fail with regard to this particular reservation, or those same provisions ought to be applied to the whole extent of this park from the Capitol up to the Naval Observatory Hill, and I will move that, instead of being applied to Reservation No. 3, the bill be so amended as to apply these restrictions to all public reservations in the city, so that we may see whether or not they should all be under one system or whether this particular locality shall be so far selected out as to impose what I conceive to be unusual and unprecedented limitations upon the liberty of the citizen, and leave all the rest of this reservation entirely open to all these infractions of public law and order.

If, as the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Wisconsin seem to intimate, there is no law now that prevents this malicious mischief on public reservations, all these statues of McPherson and Scott and Greene and the Emancipation group at Lincoln Square are all open to this same difficulty, and yet the Senator proposes to select this particular space of territory for the purpose of imposing these limitations and leaves the rest entirely open. Either we ought to have a law general in its terms that shall apply to all the public parks and public reservations or this might not pass.

Mr. MORRILL. This is a bill that comes to us from the House. It proposes merely to make the legislation that is called for by the small tract of land where the monument now stands, and I think we had much better wait until the Committee on the District of Columbia brings in a bill for the removal of the track on Sixth street, so that we shall have something worthy of being called a park. When that is done I shall be ready to vote for any restrictions that may be necessary; but at the present time the House of Representatives have sent to us a bill that I think accomplishes all that is at present required.

So far as trees and shrubs are concerned throughout the District, I think on all public grounds they are already protected by existing law; but I am not prepared to say that the laws do protect the existing monument.

I hope that no amendment will be offered to this bill, but that it will be allowed to pass, for there is an exigency why it ought to be passed at the present session.

Mr. INGALLS. The bill as it comes from the committee is nothing but an amendment. The Senator is leaving the impression that this is a proposition from the House of Representatives, and yet the bill we are called upon to act on provides for striking out every line in the bill that came from the House of Representatives and inserting an entirely new proposition I believe in terms. And yet the Senator says he hopes there will be no amendment offered because the bill came from the House of Representatives an amendment may delay final action, when as a matter of fact we are acting upon nothing but an amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. But it proposes only to deal with the same subject that the House dealt with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] to the amendment of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CALIFORNIA LAND SALES.

Mr. DOLPH. I move to take up for present consideration Senate bill 994, Order of Business 196.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 994) granting to the State of California 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of lands in said State. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments in line 5, after the word "been," to insert "made by the United States since the admission of said State;" and in line 8, after the words "money necessary to," to strike out the words "carry into effect the provisions of this act" and insert "pay said 5 per cent. to said State;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That there be, and is hereby, granted to the State of California 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands which have been made by the United States since the admission of said State, or may hereafter be made in said State, to aid in the support of the public or common schools of said State; and the sum of money necessary to pay said 5 per cent. to said State is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Is that bill subject to objection now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is subject to an objection.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then I object. It is an important bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware objects.

Mr. DOLPH. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection for a moment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. We have dealt with this question of the 5 per cent. and had protracted discussion on it in reference to other States. It is too important a measure to pass now.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator does not understand the bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the Chair can not entertain debate.

Mr. DOLPH. It is quite customary to allow an explanation.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I insist on my objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. McMILLAN. Pending that, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to, there being on a division—ayes 15, noes 24.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Pennsylvania promised to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. CAMERON. Certainly. I withdraw the motion for a moment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I beg that of him, because I wish to give formal notice that on next Monday, immediately after the morning business, I shall move to call up the bill (S. 662) to encourage the manufacture of steel for modern army ordnance, armor, and other army purposes, and to provide heavy ordnance adapted to modern army warfare, and the bill (S. 663) to encourage the manufacture of steel for modern naval ordnance, armor, shafting, and other naval purposes, and to provide heavy ordnance adapted to modern naval warfare—bills that have been reported unanimously by the Committee on Coast Defenses, and that we have been waiting an unreasonable time to ask the Senate to consider. I shall make the motion and press it, and I know that the motion is sustained by the unanimous sentiment of the Senate.

Mr. CAMERON. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The question being put, the motion was declared to be agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that pending the execution of the order for an executive session——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I demand a division on the question of going into executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks for a division on the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And, pending that, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has a right to do that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us divide on that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the question of adjournment the Senator from Vermont calls for a division.

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 8, noes 26.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the question of proceeding to the consideration of executive business a division has been called for.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 30, noes 7.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no quorum voting.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Pending that motion, then, I move that the Senate adjourn. It is evident we can not do anything to-night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I rise to a point of order that no business and no motion has intervened since the motion to adjourn was voted down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that business has intervened.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask the Chair to note the business and state it to the Senate. A motion to adjourn was made and voted down. A motion was made previous to that by the Senator from Pennsylvania to go into executive session. That motion the Chair declared was carried. After the motion to adjourn was voted down a call for the yeas and nays was made on a motion that had previously been declared by the Chair to have prevailed. Now, I say no business has intervened since the motion made by the Senator from Vermont to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the division on the motion to go into executive session not having been completed or the count made it is in the nature of business.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. But the Chair had previously declared before the motion to adjourn that the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania had prevailed, and it was improper to divide on that question after the intervening motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The decision of the Chair on that question was suspended by the call for a division, and as a matter of course the division following that superseded the previous declaration.

Mr. HARRIS. As there was no quorum developed by the division, I ask for the yeas and nays on the pending motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Pending that I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee calls for the yeas and nays on the question of adjournment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 15, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—15.

Allison,	Farwell,	Mahone,	Sewell,
Dolph,	Frye,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Williams,
Edmunds,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Wilson of Iowa.
Evarts,	McMillan,	Sawyer,

NAYS—29.

Beck,	Fair,	Payne,	Vance,
Berry,	George,	Plumb,	Vest,
Butler,	Gorman,	Pugh,	Walthall,

Brown,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Spooner,
Camden,	Hale,	Manderson,	Stanford,
Chace,	Hampton,	Maxey,	Van Wyck,
Cheney,	Harrison,	Miller,	Voorhees.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. ALLISON (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]. I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Beck,	Conger,	Mahone,	Vance,
Berry,	Fair,	Morgan,	Vest,
Butler,	George,	Payne,	Walthall,

Cheney,	Hawley,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Voorhees,
Colquitt,	Hoar,	Palmer,	Williams,
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is not a quorum voting.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. BECK. I call for the yeas and nays on that. I have been on this floor time and again and sat here and did not vote, and been upbraided for it. I should like to have a call of the Senate, and see how many gentlemen are here who did not vote.

Mr. HOAR. Debate is out of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is not debatable. The Senator from Kentucky calls for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM].

Mr. VANCE (when Mr. RANSOM'S name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. RANSOM] is absent from the city in consequence of serious illness in his family. He is paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], who has been called away. If he were present he would vote "yea," and I would vote "nay."

Mr. DAWES (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the absent Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY], and withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Bowen,	Frye,	Miller,	Sawyer,
Cameron,	Hawley,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Sherman,
Conger,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Spooner,
Dolph,	McMillan,	Palmer,	Teller,

Chace,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Voorhees.
Cheney,	Hale,	Maxey,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Mitchell of Pa.,

So the motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 3, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 2, 1887.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings were read and approved.

HAWAIIAN TREATY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President:

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

In response to the resolution of the House of Representatives, adopted on the 22d ultimo, calling upon me for "a copy of the treaty or convention proposed to the Senate and ratified by that body, between the United States and the Government of the Hawaiian Islands," I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers.

It is proper to remark in this relation that no convention whatever has been "agreed to and ratified" by "the President and Senate," as is recited in the preamble to the said resolution of the House of Representatives, but that the documents referred to, exhibiting the action of the Executive to the Senate, respectively, are communicated in compliance with the request of the resolution.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 1, 1887.

The SPEAKER. Inasmuch as the resolution relating to this subject has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary this will take the same course.

Mr. MILLS. And let it be printed.

The message was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF WILLIAM H. SCHUETZE, UNITED STATES NAVY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of State, together with a copy of the report, which it incloses, of Lieut. William H. Schuetze, United States Navy, who was designated by the Secretary of the Navy in pursuance of the act of Congress of March 3, 1885, making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1886, to distribute the testimonials of the Government to subjects of Russia who extended aid to the survivors of the Jeannette exploring expedition and the parties dispatched by this Government to aid said survivors.

The report is interesting alike to the people of the United States and to the subjects of Russia, and will be gratifying to all who appreciated the generous and humane action of Congress providing for the testimonials.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 1, 1887.

The message and accompanying papers were referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

REISSUE OF TREASURY NOTES, ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a reply of the Secretary of the Treasury to the Speaker of the House of Representatives on the resolution of the House of Representatives of December 20, 1886, respecting a reissue of Treasury notes, destruction of United States notes, and denomination of the latter; which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

It was also, by unanimous consent, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 1, 1887.

SIR: I have had the honor to receive the following direction from the House of Representatives, and thereon submit the report subjoined:

(Forty-ninth Congress, second session.)

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
In the House of Representatives, December 20, 1886.

Mr. WILKINS, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted the following; which was agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to report to this House as soon as possible:

First. Whether any portion of the money appropriated by the act approved August 4, 1886, known as the sundry civil appropriation act, has been expended in issuing Treasury notes of large denomination in lieu of notes of small denominations canceled or retired; and whether any other money belonging to the Government of the United States has been expended for such purpose since August 4, 1886.

Second. How many, if any, one and two-dollar notes have been canceled and destroyed since the passage of said act, by what authority said notes were destroyed, and what sum has been expended in their destruction.

Third. How many, if any, of said notes canceled and destroyed were mutilated notes, and whether notes of like denominations were issued in their stead.

Attest: JNO. B. CLARK, JR., Clerk.

The Treasury notes heretofore issued under the authority of Congress and outstanding August 4, 1886, were as follows:

Of the Treasury notes outstanding August 4, 1886, there had been, up to January 15, 1887, received into the Treasury, paid and canceled, in due course to be destroyed, the following:

Title.	Denominations.				Amount.
	$10.	$20.	$50.	$100.
One-year notes of 1863	9	11		1	$410
Two-year notes of 1863				1	100
Compound-interest notes	28	19	5	3	1,210
Seven-thirties of 1864-'65			3	1	250
Total	37	30	8	6	1,970

It is true that Congress, while in each of the foregoing enactments prescribing the maximum sum and the lowest denomination of Treasury notes issuable thereunder, imposed upon the Secretary of the Treasury the duty of fixing, according to his discretion and current view of the exigencies and conveniences of the public interest and service, sometimes the sums, often the reissue, always the denominations, as well as regulations for custody, redemption, payment, and destruction of the same. It is also true that in any case of reissued Treasury notes Congress thus imposed upon the Secretary of the Treasury the continued exercise of his discretion in the choice and possible change of denominations outstanding.

Nevertheless, I am not aware that the Secretary of the Treasury has had the authority of Congress, under any of the foregoing enactments or otherwise, since August 4, 1886, either to issue Treasury notes of any denomination, large or small, or to reissue any, whether in denominations changed or unchanged.

The first of these resolutions, presented with the authority of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and adopted by the House of Representatives itself, seems, indeed, to convey a different expectation, and I shall defer at once to better instruction; but, as at present informed, I would beg leave to intimate to the Committee and to the House that in all acts of Congress directing or authorizing an issue of Treasury notes, certainly in all acts which ever provided for a reissue of Treasury notes, the time fixed therein for the exercise of any such duty or discretion imposed upon the Secretary has long since elapsed.

But were a more patient scrutiny of the Statutes at Large to disclose some overlooked authority to reissue Treasury notes, I should not, except under fresh instructions from Congress, conceive it a duty to expend "any portion of the money appropriated by the act approved August 4, 1886," for such a purpose; nor has that or "any other money belonging to the Government of the United States" been expended for such purpose. In the administration of solvent governments, by capable officers, Treasury notes have been reissued only when expenditures were in excess of income, or were thought about to be in excess of income.

But I beg leave respectfully to recall the attention of the House of Representatives to the facts which I had the honor to lay before them in my last annual report, showing that such is not the case of this Government, but, contrary, that, for the last seven years, besides expending $24,000,000 per annum in the purchase of a metal at present lacking international currency and superfluous for local currency, the annual excess of ordinary revenue over ordinary expenditure has been about $100,000,000, which excess is gradually enlarging. So that the measure of our present annual surplus taxation, being thus nigh to $125,000,000, is the measure also of the clear distance which separates this Department and this Government from a present need or excuse to reissue Treasury notes.

That another species of our outstanding indebtedness, namely, the legal-tenders or greenbacks, known in law as United States notes, are, equally with what the law designates as Treasury notes, beyond any need or excuse for reissue; that temporary notes which are a debt of principal only, like notes which are a debt of principal and interest, should at once be cashed and canceled from abundant and superfluous coin in hand not now capable of being applied to any other use—this is so obvious a principle of sound finance, such as a prudent citizen would apply to his private affairs, that any Secretary of the Treasury would be subject to just reproach for departure therefrom by reissues, were it not that the act of May 31, 1878, seems to require of him that fiscal misstep.

And I beg leave to submit to the House the question whether, among many other reasons for its repeal, the contraction of the currency sought to be averted by that act can now in any other and better way be prevented than by its repeal. The fact that the $346,681,016 of greenback debt is a greenback currency, is so far from being a reason against its payment that it is the reason which makes its payment and destruction necessary—not without a better currency to take its place; but such a currency is at hand.

Of course the greenback debt should be paid. "To the payment in coin or its equivalent of all the obligations of the United States not bearing interest, known as United States notes," "the faith of the United States is solemnly pledged" by the act of Congress, March 18, 1869. But, also, a contraction of the currency should be avoided. The substitution of a better currency for the greenbacks runs no hazard of contraction. But the consequences of not using our coin surplus thus are serious. For in currency of some sort will the year's taxes be paid, and the excess of receipts over the authorized disbursements of the Treasury would be the measure of the contraction of the currency.

This contraction can be avoided by appropriations for an extravagant and reckless outpour and expense like that of war. It can also be avoided by the payment of debt. The first remedy need not be discussed; it is, of course, a remedy the most unworthy of the people's representatives. The second remedy is all that remains. What debt, then, shall we pay? Beyond the 3 percents, which are already provided for and will soon all be paid, not another dollar of the principal of our funded debt is due for four years to come, and except by a reduction of the interest on the 4½ percents, and of the fours, such as I suggested to the House of Representatives nearly a year ago in my letter of March 2, 1886, no part of the same can now be canceled or diminished by anticipatory purchase without paying to the bondholder a premium on pretty much his own terms.

The premium on the 4½ percents of 1891 is now 11 per cent.; the premium on the 4 percents of 1907 is now 28 per cent. Payment of the funded debt at these premiums to the bondholder is thriftless extravagance. But it is an inexcusable extravagance, for the reason shown in my last annual report, namely, that the operation of the present sinking-fund law, and the annual appropriation of 1 per cent. of the debt to that fund which it requires, and which gives us no trouble, will cancel every dollar of the public indebtedness, greenbacks and all, within one twelvemonth of the day that our last great funded loan becomes due and payable, in 1907. We may almost say that our funded debt will thus pay itself, so little excuse have we for hastening its payment.

But anticipatory payment of funded debt at a high premium, while successfully getting out of the Treasury its currency tax surplus, and so preventing contraction in that form, is that method, nevertheless, which would contract the currency in another form by too suddenly diminishing national-bank circulation based on the funded debt.

It is therefore necessary now, not only to reduce taxation in order to prevent surplus-tax-collecting from being currency-contracting again and again, but it is necessary also to employ our present and unavoidable tax surplus in the payment, not of funded, but of the unfunded debt. Great extravagance of needless expense or serious monetary trouble can both so be avoided. The people's representatives, by action before adjournment, can relieve the Secretary of the Treasury from the bad choice between these now present alternatives.

The surplus coin and bullion which will remain in the Treasury after all the bonds subject to call have been paid and before the Fiftieth Congress will assemble, together with the proceeds of surplus taxation which will flow into the Treasury before any possible reduction of taxes by the present Congress can take effect, constitute a sum which can well be got out of the Treasury into the hands of the people, where it belongs, by the payment of the greenback debt. Coin certificates are a ready and superior paper money to the greenbacks. The substitution can be effected as a mere matter of Treasury administration whenever two indispensable conditions are first fulfilled by Congress.

Of these, the first is that the silver purchases should be stopped. Our approaching difficulties were discernible two years ago, and I commended both those conditions of safety respectfully to the consideration of Congress in my first annual report, in my reply to the resolutions of the House of Representatives last spring, and again in my second annual report. Congress has but to remove the débris of two past errors of our predecessors in order effectually to avert monetary difficulties which are now imminent, and to renew a commercial prosperity which will dispel the mephitic atmosphere of our so-called labor troubles. The repeal of the compulsory silver purchases (act of February 28, 1878) is the first and indispensable condition. The repeal of the compulsory post-redemption reissues of United States notes (act of May 31, 1878) is the next and only other condition.

These two repeals are together necessary to prevent either on the one hand an extravagant expense or on the other hand a considerable contraction of the currency. I can see no other alternatives. As the evil is at our door, I can not conceive that the case admits of further delay.

Renewing the expression of my hope that the Forty-ninth Congress before its near adjournment will enter upon the residue of work which demands attention from the people's representatives—and that it will at once begin to untax the clothing of 60,000,000 people by a repeal of the duty on raw wool—I beg leave to submit herewith an interesting table covering the whole field of Federal taxation, which I was not strong enough to perfect in time to go with my annual report. (See Appendix J.)

In answer to the second and third inquiries of the House of Representatives, above cited, I respectfully refer to the table in Appendix A, which exhibits minutely every change in the distribution of United States notes among their various denominations, by a daily statement of the amount of them destroyed or credited into the Treasury, or received from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing from August 4, 1886, to December 31, 1886. It appears that between those dates $3,861,857 in one-dollar notes were destroyed, and $3,937,082 in two-dollar notes were destroyed—total, $7,798,939. What sum has been expended in their destruction it would be impossible to fix because of the mixed character of the denominations of mutilated money handled by the Redemption Bureau of the Treasury. It is usual in the case of the small denominations sent in for redemption to find the paper badly mutilated and difficult to count.

But I know of no satisfactory method of computing such an inseparable part of a total and continuous though inconsiderable expense. The table in Appendix A exhibits every detail of that continuous process by which from day to day are fulfilled the requirements of the act of May 31, 1878, making compulsory that post-redemption issue and reissue of the total amount of the debt in circulation as United States notes which was but permitted by section 3579 of the Revised Statutes, and by which from day to day has been exercised the discretion imposed upon the Secretary (sections 3571, 3575, 3580, 3581, &c., of the Revised Statutes, see Appendix H) in respect to the denominations of such notes reissued in like character and amount to replace their mutilated or less desired predecessors.

It is obvious from the table, and from similar tables in the Treasurer's report of 1885 and 1886, communicated to the House along with my annual reports of those years, that no ones or twos have been issued "in the stead" of the $7,798,939 mutilated ones and twos redeemed, canceled, and destroyed, since August 4, nor instead of any other ones or twos or $10,000, or $5,000, or $1,000 notes likewise canceled and destroyed. For no ones and twos have been issued since July, 1885.

From an examination of the Treasurer's last annual report, pages 65 to 78, inclusive, and Appendix B, it will be seen that the practice of the Redemption Bureau of the Treasury, from 1862 up to the present time, has been to deliver in exchange for mutilated notes such other notes or denominations as might be required by the person, bank, or banker presenting the former for redemption. The expenses of presentation and return are borne by the party presenting mutilated notes for redemption.

It has also been the practice of the Treasury during the same twenty-five years to cause to be printed notes of all denominations in advance of the destruction of the notes returned as mutilated, or as locally inconvenient, and to issue from such previously-printed notes such amounts and denominations as were needed for its own convenience or that of the persons presenting the same for redemption. There is now in the "reserve vault" of the Treasury the sum of $16,498,000 of such notes. The practice of issuing completed notes and certificates from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing has been very properly stopped by the Treasurer.*

The printed notes and certificates are now held in an incomplete form; the seal of the Treasury is not attached to them until they are required, which is affixed in the Treasury building.

The United States or legal-tender notes destroyed since August 4, 1886, up to December 31, 1886, as appears by Appendix A, have been of the following denominations:

Denomination.	Destroyed.	Issued.	Increase.	Decrease.
1's	$3,861,857	None		$3,861,857
2's	3,937,082	None		3,937,082
5's	6,217,681	$18,300,000
10's	3,204,446	12,480,000	$12,082,319
20's	3,054,864	3,600,000	9,275,554
50's	1,063,380	200,000	545,136	863,380
100's	1,797,190	800,000		997,190
500's	4,028,500	None		4,028,500
1,000's	8,205,000	None		8,205,000
5,000's	10,000	None		10,000
	35,380,000	35,380,000	21,903,009	21,903,009

* United States notes	$16,498,000
Gold certificates	103,680,000
Silver certificates	22,040,000
	142,218,000

These figures show a decrease during the period named of $7,798,939 of one and two dollar notes; an increase of $12,082,319 in five-dollar notes; of $9,275,554 in ten-dollar notes; and $545,136 of twenty-dollar notes, or a total increase in notes of small denominations of $14,104,070, and a decrease in large notes of the following denominations and amounts:

50's, of	$863,380
100's, of	997,190
500's, of	4,028,500
1,000's, of	8,205,000
5,000's, of	10,000
	14,104,070

In addition to these denominational changes in legal-tender notes, the following changes have occurred in the silver certificates:

Denomination.	Destroyed.	Issued.	Increase.	Decrease.
1's	$2,061	$6,736,000	$6,733,939
2's	None.	1,984,000	1,984,000
10's	2,114,465	10,440,000	8,325,535
20's	1,148,024			$1,148,024
50's	2,214,750			2,214,750
100's	3,914,400			3,941,400
500's	132,000			132,000
1,000's	142,000			142,000
	9,694,700	19,160,000	17,043,474	7,578,174
		9,694,700	7,578,174
		9,465,300	9,465,300

These figures show an increase in one and two dollar certificates of $8,717,939, in ten-dollar certificates of $8,325,535, a decrease of $1,448,024 in twenty-dollar certificates, and a total decrease of large denominations, as stated above, of $6,430,150, making a net increase in small denominations of $15,895,450.

It will thus be seen that the one and two dollar legal-tender notes destroyed ($7,798,939) have been more than replaced by the one and two dollar silver certificates issued, which amount to $8,717,939; and that the total increase of small denominations has been since the 4th of August, 1886, to the 31st day of December, 1886, as follows:

One-dollar silver certificates	$6,733,939
Two-dollar silver certificates	1,984,000
Ten-dollar silver certificates	8,325,535
Five-dollar legal-tender notes	12,082,319
Ten-dollar legal-tender notes	9,275,554
Twenty-dollar legal-tender notes	545,136
		$38,946,483
Less one-dollar legal-tender notes destroyed	3,861,857
Less two-dollar legal-tender notes destroyed	3,937,082
Lest twenty-dollar silver certificates destroyed	1,148,024
		8,946,963
Increase since August 4, 1886		29,999,520
To which can be added—
Standard silver dollars increased in circulation		5,914,329
Subsidiary silver coin increased in circulation		2,744,871
Minor coin increased in circulation		204,927
Total		38,863,647

In Appendix B will be found the outstanding currency in denominations, as of Decemcer 31, 1886; and in Appendix C the total shipments of United States notes, &c., since August 4 to December 31, 1886.

With the desire that the House may be fully informed as to the working of the Treasury in the most ample detail, there have been added the daily statements for December 31, marked "E," and those of January 3, 1887, marked "F" and "G," made to the Treasurer, with detail of the accounts upon which payments and receipts are made, and the kind of money received and paid out of each of the several sub-treasuries and the Treasury at Washington.

It will be seen by the recapitulation on page 11 of Appendix E that the receipts were—

	Receipts and payments.	Excess of payments.	Excess of receipts.
In national-bank notes	$181,241		$181,241
[Payments none; the $25,000 received at the sub-treasuries being forwarded to Washington for redemption.]
The legal-tenders—Receipts	807,767
Payments	1,297,629	$489,862
The gold coin—Receipts	221,428
Payments	154,850		56,570
The gold certificates—Receipts	768,730
Payments	777,450	8,720
The silver certificates—
Receipts	293,280
Payments	428,165	134,885
The standard silver dollars—
Receipts	178,820
Payments	51,077		127,743
Subsidiary silver coin—
Receipts	51,100
Payments	46,134		4,966
		633,467	380,520
Less receipts December 31		380,520
Excess of payments		252,947

The amount of standard silver dollars and subsidiary silver coin ($97,211) put out, with the exception of small amounts used in making change, were put in circulation at an average expense of $1.96 per $1,000.

The withdrawal, begun in the summer of 1885, of the one and two-dollar United States notes and their conversion into five-dollar notes, both being known to the Treasury and the public under the denomination of small notes—which title extends to the ten and twenty dollar notes—was due to the fact that the Government had in the Treasury vaults large masses of silver dollars, for which no fitting use could be found.

To this statement it may be objected that these coins could be paid out in the ordinary transactions of the Government. This is not true, for one among many reasons, because of the physical impossibility of the movement of the mass of money required to make the payments of the Government; and, secondly, to the fact that all payments of this character might be said to await the opening of the doors of the Treasury in order to be again paid into the Treasury vaults, as the cost of handling and the bulk of the metal make it an impossible vehicle for the transactions of the Treasury or private business. The Treasury would require 33 tons per day to make its daily payments. Its receipts would be strictly confined to the same metal, which would involve the handling of 33 more tons. A thousand dollars bagged weighs 60 pounds. The physical force does not exist in the Treasury to handle the mass required to effect its daily settlements under such conditions.

Objection will be made that the silver certificates could have been used—which is true if the object had been to confine the receipts and payments of the Treasury to this kind of money and to depreciate its value. Such a mode of payment is not practicable so long as the legal-tender United States notes are suffered to exist, and everything called in law a "dollar" is to be upheld in a firm equivalence with our monetary unit of value established by law. Owing to the non-legal-tender character of coin certificates, they would return—as they do now return when issued in large denominations—on the day of issue, or by the succeeding day. This must of necessity happen, because of the fact that, being acceptd by the banks as deposits, these notes are transformed into a legal-tender liability of the banks, so that room must instantly be made for further deposits of the same kind by making immediate payment back into the Treasury.

The uses of each denomination of currency, whether note, certificate, or coin, are defined by the daily needs of the people with the greatest distinctness. Were issue now to be made of the one and two dollar legal-tender notes, it would exclude just so many one and two dollar silver certificates from circulation. This is true of each denomination of silver certificates or United States legal-tender notes, but is most strikingly shown in the larger denominations of silver certificates, which, except for their use as a means of redemption of the standard silver dollar, would be absolutely worthless as circulation; in fact, it may be said that they are not used by the community, but that these certificates are only used between the banks and the Government. Paid out by the Government in exchange for silver dollars, the next day, often the same day, they are back in the Treasury vaults, paid in by the banks, as the best use to be made of them by these institutions, in so far as the revenues of the Government arrive to the Treasury by that channel.

There is no doubt that when the silver five-dollar certificates take their full place in the circulation, they will transform the present legal-tender notes into ten and twenty dollar denominations, because it is only in the smallest denominations that any considerable addition can be made to the currency of the country in this form of money while Congress continues to require also the compulsory reissue of legal-tender notes, and so long as that competition is insisted upon.

As to the successful use of the present amount of silver coinage and its representative certificates, more depends, so long as the legal-tender notes exist, upon the denomination of the certificates than upon any other determining cause. Under the issue of the silver certificates in larger forms, a maximum of 45 per cent. was attained in the Treasury's receipts through the customs with a total circulation of $101,000,000, while at present, owing to the issue of smaller denominations, in a circulation of $117,000,000, the receipts in customs of these certificates are only 15 per cent., though during the first months of the current year the receipts of this kind of money may reach 20 per cent.

In examining the changes made in the denominations of legal-tenders during the first half of the year, it will be found that these notes generally take the form of large notes, while during the last half the notes issued are of small denominations. This will be found to be true of every year in which record has been kept of these changes, except that during the period of depression through which we have just passed, the changes were generally in the direction of the large notes. This will be found to be true of each period of depression since the issue of the legal-tender notes, and marks the diminished use of the smaller currency brought about by that slackened prosperity among the people.

There are those who profess to desire the Secretary of the Treasury to revive the smaller issues of the legal-tenders, upon the assumption that profits will accrue by the people losing more of them while in circulation. This scheme is quite as unsound as dishonest; for the loss on currency of this character, either national-bank notes or legal-tenders (Annual Report of the Treasurer for 1886, pages 33, 34, pages 65-67), does not amount to one-twentieth of 1 per cent. upon the closed issues therein stated, and as to those in which there is an element of worth in excess of the face value, the percentage of loss is not one two-hundredth of 1 per cent. per annum. It is, therefore, a fair deduction, as the ones and twos of these old issues are still coming in, though slowly, that one-twenty-fifth of 1 per cent. per annum is the limit of such profit on the loss of a small currency while in use as a circulating medium.

The controling principle in making the redemptions of the legal-tender notes is to issue these notes in the form demanded by those who present them for redemption when mutilated, and (except the one and two dollar notes, which are replaced by the one and two dollar silver certificates) this has been, and will continue to be, the rule of the Department until Congress directs a change. Any other course would result in serious embarrassment to the people, and, while it would not otherwise affect the Treasury, would throw upon it the burden of additional and unnecessary labor.

In my letter to the House of March 2, 1886, I had explained that if it were desired to promote the circulation of a silver certificate of a given denomination without reference to the primary fact of public convenience, it could be accomplished only by shouldering out from concurrent circulation the same denomination of United States notes. (Appendix K.)

In the act approved August 4, 1886, Congress enlarged the limits of the discretion required of the Secretary in respect to the distribution of the silver certificates among various denominations, by authorizing, besides the issue of certificates upward from "$10 each, corresponding with the denominations of the United States notes," the issue of certificates downward from $10 and corresponding with the smallest denominations of such notes. But besides enlarging the variety of denominations within which the Secretary was required to exercise his discretion in supplying the wants of the business community, Congress in the same act required the Secretary to issue silver certificates of the three smallest denominations, and left him at liberty to effect their issue in lieu of or in exchange for silver certificates of larger denominations.

Congress had left unmodified the discretion in respect to denominations of United States notes originally imposed upon the Secretary. It had even confirmed the same. In the act of May 31, 1878, which forbade the retiring, canceling, and destroying of any of those notes, and enjoined the reissue and constant circulation of the whole of them, Congress expressly negatived the possible though strained inference that it was thereby prohibiting that daily renewal of mutilated notes with fresh ones of like denomination, which was then provided by law, as also was the daily renewal of mutilated notes with fresh ones of unlike denomination. The discretion thus confirmed was of course no larger in the reissue than in the original issue, nor a different discretion. It has been exercised in subordination to the laws, and in response to the daily requirements of the people of the United States. (Appendix H.)

The act of August 4, 1886, which made the issue of the silver certificate ones and twos compulsory, and the act of May 31, 1878, which made the reissue of the greenback total compulsory, have been jointly executed by the abridgment of the smallest and the largest denominations of the greenbacks, and the enlargement of the smallest silver certificates.

In pointing out a year ago the only way in which such a substitution could be made and the use of silver enlarged while greenbacks are suffered, the Secretary is happy to have anticipated the wish and the enactment of Congress. These coin certificates can now be made to take the place of the whole greenback circulation, by the prior repeal of the compulsory silver-purchase law and the repeal of the greenback, compulsory, post-redemption-issue law—some of the many reasons for which are so fully set forth in my last annual report that they need no repetition here.

Respectfully yours,

DANIEL MANNING,
Secretary of the Treasury.

The Hon. SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, if this is what I think it is, and as I understand from the public prints, I will at the proper time rise to a question of the highest privilege in order to see what further steps are necessary to be taken to secure observance of the law.

COURT OF CLAIMS JUDGMENTS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a list of judgments against the United States in the Court of Claims presented for payment February 1, 1887; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

STAKE-LIGHTS, LAKE CHAMPLAIN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a letter from the Light-House Board, asking an appropriation for the re-establishment of two stake-lights in the channel between North and South Hero Islands, Lake Champlain; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ALTERATIONS OF LOUISVILLE AND PORTLAND CANAL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War transmitting, in compliance with a provision of the river and harbor act of August 5, 1886, a report upon proposed alterations of the Louisville and Portland Canal; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

RECONSTRUCTION OF AQUEDUCT BRIDGE IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the report of the Board of Engineers on the proposed reconstruction of the Aqueduct Bridge in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN LOAGUE, ADMINISTRATOR, AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact by that court in the case of John Loague, administrator, &c., against the United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

FLOWAGE DAMAGE, FOX AND WISCONSIN RIVERS.

The SPEAKER. The letter from the Attorney-General in further response to the House resolution calling for a report of the amounts due the several commissioners to ascertain the flowage damages caused by the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, was wrongly referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; and if there be no objection that committee will be discharged from its further consideration, and it will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. BENNETT, for three days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. JOHNSON, of New York, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. O'DONNELL, for one week, on account of important business.

BUSINESS OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE.

Mr. MORRISON. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the order heretofore made setting apart February 3 for the consideration of the business of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, be postponed to Tuesday, February 8. I need hardly say that the chairman of that committee is necessarily absent.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present at this time the certificate of election of Mr. Hugh H. Price, elected from the eighth Congressional district of the State of Wisconsin, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of the late Hon. William T. Price. I ask the reading of the certificate, and that he be now sworn in.

The certificate was read, as follows:

STATE OF WISCONSIN,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

To all whom these presents shall come:

I, Ernst G. Timme, secretary of state of the State of Wisconsin, do hereby certify that Hugh H. Price was, on the 18th day of January, A. D. 1887, duly elected a Representative in the Forty-ninth Congress of the United States for the eighth Congressional district of the State of Wisconsin for the unexpired term of two years, commencing on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1885, as appears from the official canvass of votes given at a special election held in the State of Wisconsin on the day and year above written, and that he was so elected in accordance with the laws of the State of Wisconsin.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and have affixed my official seal at the capital, in the city of Madison, this 28th day of January, A. D. 1887.

[SEAL.] ERNST G. TIMME.

Mr. PRICE, having appeared at the Bar of the House, was duly qualified, taking the oath of office prescribed by law.

RICHARD H. & JAMES PORTER.

Mr. VAN EATON. Mr. Speaker, the objection having been withdrawn, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1368) for the relief of Richard H. & James Porter, and put the bill upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury pay to Richard H. & James Porter the said sum of $10,100, less the said sum of $750 paid them under the second award, in full for all claims for damages or compensation for property impressed by order of Colonel Johnston, in command of the United States troops en route for Utah in 1857.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the report in that case had better be read.

Mr. VAN EATON. The report is quite a lengthy one, and I think perhaps I can state the substance of it in a few words.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should be glad to hear a statement covering the facts.

Mr. VAN EATON. Mr. Speaker, this claim arose under the following circumstances: When General Sidney Johnston was engaged in the Utah expedition in the year 1857, while passing through the State of Missouri, he found it necessary to take possession of certain cattle, horses, and mules belonging to the petitioner in this case, for which payment is now sought. They were used in the army, as appears in the documents filed with the case, and were lost to Mr. Porter. Application was duly made to the Treasury under the act of 1849 for payment, and the claim was considered and reported upon favorably by the Auditor. The Secretary of the Treasury subsequently referred the claim to the Attorney-General, Hon. Edward Bates, a doubt having arisen in the mind of the Secretary whether the report of the Auditor justified the payment of the claim. The Secretary of the Treasury was in doubt as to whether the claim came within the purview of the act of March 3, 1849, and referred the matter to the Solicitor of the Treasury. The award of the Third Auditor was held by the Solicitor to be final in the sense of being without appeal, and could neither be changed nor diminished.

The Attorney-General reported that the claim came within the provisions of the act in question; but some other difficulty arose, and it finally came to Congress. It has been examined and reported by the Department several times, and, finally, as I have said, came to Congress, where it was unanimously reported favorably in the Forty-seventh Congress, and reported favorably and passed at the present session of the Senate. At this Congress it was examined by the Committee on Claims of the House, and has been unanimously presented to this House by the committee. The Senate bill was again reported favorably, and is now upon the Calendar. I hold in my hand the report of the committee, from which I read the concluding words:

The award appears to the committee to have been made in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1849, volume 9, Statutes at Large, section 2, page 415; and as the proof was conclusive as to the taking of the property by the officers of the Government under circumstances that appear to have justified such taking, and the Government having received the benefit thereof in 1857, it does not seem to be proper to compel the claimants to go into court to establish the validity of their claim, and therefore the committee recommend the amendment of the bill so as to pay the claimants the award, less the amount received under the second award.

That is exactly the bill which we have now pending, and I hope there will be no objection to its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN EATON. I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the words "Richard H. Porter," in the first line of the engrossed bill, the words "surviving partner and assignee of the late firm of R. H.;" so that it will read:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury pay to Richard H. Porter, surviving partner and assignee of the late firm of R. H. & James Porter," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

The title was amended to conform to the body of the bill.

Mr. VAN EATON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COLLECTION DISTRICTS MIAMI AND SANDUSKY, OHIO.

Mr. ROMEIS. Mr. Speaker, the objection having been withdrawn, I again ask the House to take up and consider the bill (H. R. 6538) to define the boundaries of the collection districts of Miami and Sandusky, in the State of Ohio.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 2603 of the Revised Statutes is hereby so amended that the district of Miami, in the State of Ohio, shall comprise all the waters and shores of Lake Erie within the jurisdiction of the United States from the western bank of the Portage River to the western bank of the Miami River in which Toledo shall be the port of entry; and so that the district of Sandusky shall comprise all the waters and shores of Lake Erie within the jurisdiction of the United States from the eastern bank of the Vermilion River to and including the western bank of the Portage River, and all the islands at the head of Lake Erie, lying east of a line drawn north from the west bank of the Portage River at its mouth, in which Sandusky shall be the port of entry. Vessels shall be allowed to ply between the port of Toledo, in the Miami district, and any of the said islands, in the same manner and subject to the same conditions only as if said islands were in the district of Miami.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire whether this bill is recommended by the Secretary?

Mr. ROMEIS. It was recommended by him some years ago, and passed the Senate twice, but there being two Congressmen from this district there has always been more or less friction between them.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does this establish a new port of delivery?

Mr. ROMEIS. No, sir; the principal effect of the bill is to abolish a tax now levied upon vessels going to the islands in one of these districts from a port of entry in the other.

Mr. TARSNEY. And is unanimously reported from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FORAN. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. REAGAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6538) to define the boundaries of the collection districts of Miami and Sandusky, Ohio, report the bill back to the House without amendment, and recommend its passage.

This bill, it is understood, was drawn in the Treasury Department, and has its approval; it has, once or twice, in the form in which it is now presented, passed the Senate. The object of the bill is to define more clearly the boundaries between these two collection districts, and to abolish a small tax now levied upon vessels going to the islands in one of these collection districts from a port of entry in the other collection district.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROMEIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT OWENSBOROUGH, KY.

Mr. LAFFOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1536) for the purchase of suitable grounds in the city of Owensborough, in the State of Kentucky, and the erection thereon of a public building for the post-office, United States collector's office, United States commissioner's office, and for the use of other United States officers in said city, and appropriating money for said purposes, and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRADY. I object.

BRIDGE OVER THE MISSISSIPPI AT DUBUQUE.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10412) to authorize the construction of a high wagon and foot-passenger bridge over the Mississippi River, between the city of East Dubuque, in the State of Illinois, and the city of Dubuque, in the State of Iowa, and that the same be considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That in lieu of the pontoon bridge authorized by the act of Congress to be constructed over the Mississippi River between the city of East Dubuque, in the State of Illinois, and the city of Dubuque, in the State of Iowa, by the East Dubuque Bridge Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois for that purpose, the Dubuque Pontoon Bridge Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Iowa for a like purpose, and now holding the franchise of said East Dubuque Bridge Company in relation to such bridge, may construct and maintain over said river, at the most suitable point between those cities, a high wagon bridge, for the passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals, and for foot passengers, for such reasonable rates of toll as said cities may prescribe: Provided, That the Secretary of War, to whom the plans and specifications for said contemplated high wagon bridge have been submitted for inspection, shall be of opinion that such high wagon bridge will be no substantial obstruction to the navigation of said river.

The Committee on Commerce recommended the following amendment:

In line 8, after the word "purpose," insert the words "and amendatory of said act."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa, did this bill receive the sanction of the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. It received the unanimous sanction of that committee.

The bill was passed.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MATHEW H. FULTON.

Mr. SENEY. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1753), and that the same be now considered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $337.02 to Mathew H. Fulton, postmaster at Bucyrus, Ohio, the said sum being the amount of money stolen from the safe and from registered letters in the post-office at Bucyrus, Ohio, on the night of May 9, 1883, and which sum the said Fulton made good to the claimants from his own means.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SENEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LAFFOON rose.

Mr. BRADY. I desire to withdraw my objection to the consideration of the bill called up a short time ago by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LAFFOON].

Mr. STORM and Mr. SPRINGER called for the regular order.

MRS. HENRIETTA M. DRUM HUNT.

Mr. SCOTT. I make a privileged report from a committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House 8869, granting a pension to Mrs. Henrietta M. Drum Hunt, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same.

WILLIAM L. SCOTT,
N. B. ELDREDGE,
Managers on the part of the House.
JOHN I. MITCHELL,
H. W. BLAIR,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I should like to be heard on the question of concurring in that report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SCOTT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I move non-concurrence in the report presented by the committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary motion. The question is on agreeing to the report, and a refusal to agree is a rejection.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I oppose the adoption of this report because this bill proposes to give to the widow of a lieutenant of the Navy $40 a month. Under the law widows of officers of that grade are entitled to $20. No application in this case has ever been made to the Pension Bureau for the allowance of this claim.

Mr. McCOMAS. For any amount?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. For any amount. The application was made in the first instance to this House; and to agree to this sets a vicious precedent. Congress has inaugurated a Pension Bureau for the purpose of granting pensions to those who are entitled to them, and the first duty of applicants is to apply to that department for the relief claimed. As I have said, no application has been made to the Pension Bureau.

And even if that practice should be disregarded, instead of coming here and asking for that amount which this widow would be entitled to under the law they ask for an increase from $20 to $40 per month.

This question was up for consideration by the House on January 8, at the Friday evening session. The House bill was passed giving the applicant $5 more than she was entitled to under the law, and I must say without any valid evidence that it ought to be granted at all. There is nothing pending before this House except the petition of the claimant herself and a recommendation by Commodore Schley that the pension should be granted, and upon that the House gave her a pension of $25 a month; $5 more than the widows of other officers who have lost their lives in the defense of the country are entitled to.

For that reason I am opposed to the adoption of this report. There is no evidence here to show that this claimant is entitled to anything at all, and anything the House gave her is a mere gratuity. This bill is based on a matter of mere sentiment. These people are not specially in need of this pension.

I want to know whether this House intends to set the precedent of granting to the widows of officers of the Navy $40 a month. If so, now is the time to set that precedent. Whether they intend to dole out gratuities as is proposed by this bill is a question for this House to decide.

I move that the conference report be not adopted, and that these amendments be not concurred in. I hope the House will vote down this report and reappoint a committee of conference for the consideration of these amendments.

Mr. SCOTT. I admit this bill is an exceptional one, but this is an exceptional case. Lieutenant Hunt sacrificed his life in the attempt to save the lives of others. He volunteered on what is known as the Greely Relief Expedition. After having exposed himself in the search of Lieutenant Long's party, and of the commander of that expedition, he was one of the party that brought those remains home. He then volunteered on another expedition, and the result was, as is well certified, that he had contracted in that expedition diseases which terminated his life. It was his great bravery and his desire to save the lives of others that caused him to lose his life.

The case being an exceptional one, the Committees on Pensions of the two Houses, with the exception of my friend from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR] have recommended the $40 per month. I do hope, sir, that as an incentive to the younger officers of the Navy, when it is necessary for them to go forth to save the lives of others, or in the defense of their country, we will let them know that we will take care of their families if they lay down their lives for their country.

I call the previous question on the bill.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question; and there were—ayes 52, noes 61.

Mr. SCOTT. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers——

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is it in order for the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR] at this point to withdraw his opposition to ordering the previous question on this bill?

The SPEAKER. It is always in order for a gentleman to withdraw his own opposition to any measure. [Laughter.]

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. So far as I am concerned I withdraw my opposition.

The SPEAKER. The House has voted upon the question, and the majority is in the negative; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] makes the point that no quorum has voted. The Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR].

Mr. PERKINS (before the completion of the count by tellers). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the previous question be ordered on this bill.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, not wishing to detain the House on a measure of this kind, I am willing that the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the report of the conference committee.

The question was taken,

And the SPEAKER declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SCOTT. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes 76.

So the report of the conference committee was not agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask now for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] desire a further conference upon this bill?

Mr. SCOTT. I do.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the House will further insist upon its amendments, and ask a further conference.

During the day the Chair will appoint the conferees on the part of the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, was delivered to the House transmitting, in compliance with the request of the House, a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and restoring the same to settlement, and for other purposee.

VETO MESSAGE—CARTER W. TILLER.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up a privileged matter, the veto message of the President on the bill (H. R. 4002) granting a pension to Carter W. Tiller.

The message was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without my approval House bill No. 4002, entitled "An act granting a pension to Carter W. Tiller."

The records of the War Department show that George W. Tiller, the son of the claimant, enlisted in a Kentucky regiment on the 8th day of October, 1861, and that he deserted on the 20th day of September, 1863; that he was captured by the confederates afterwards, but the time and circumstances are not given. On the 21st day of July, 1864, he was admitted to the Andersonville hospital, and died the same day of scorbutis.

The father filed his claim for a pension in 1877, alleging his dependence upon the deceased soldier. It it probably true that the son while in the army sent money to the claimant, though he appears to have been employed as a policeman in the city of Louisville ever since his son's death, at a fair salary.

The claim thus made was rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that the claimant was not dependent upon his son

I am entirely satisfied of the correctness of this determination, and if the records presented to me are reliable, I think the fact which appears therefrom, that the death of the soldier occurred ten months after desertion, and had no apparent relation to any service in the Union army, is conclusive against the claim now made.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 19, 1886.

Mr. SPRINGER. I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE], as a matter of privilege, calls up the veto message of the President, which has just been read, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] raises the question of consideration.

Mr. SPRINGER. This being a private bill, I think it ought to go over until Friday.

Mr. TAULBEE. I believe I have the floor, Mr. Speaker. Is the gentleman's question in order while I have the floor?

The SPEAKER. It is always in order to raise the question of consideration before the House enters upon the consideration of a matter.

Mr. TAULBEE. But is it in order to raise that question after I have taken the floor?

The SPEAKER. Certainly. It can not be raised any other time, because after the House has actually entered upon the consideration of a matter the question can not be raised. The question, then, is, Will the House now proceed to the consideration of the bill and the message of the President?

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 89, noes 81.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and there were—yeas 135, nays 107, not voting 76; as follows:

So the House decided to consider the veto message.

The following-named members were announced as paired until further notice:

Mr. COX, of New York, with Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana.
Mr. BARBOUR with Mr. NEGLEY.
Mr. ROGERS with Mr. O'DONNELL.
Mr. BLAND with Mr. DAVENPORT.
Mr. BACON with Mr. PARKER.
Mr. GREEN with Mr. SWINBURNE.
Mr. GLOVER with Mr. WADE.
Mr. CANDLER with Mr. BUNNELL.
Mr. REAGAN with Mr. HISCOCK.

The following-named members were announced as paired for this day:

Mr. MAHONEY with Mr. DAVIS.
Mr. BENNETT with Mr. DINGLEY.
Mr. BELMONT with Mr. LINDSLEY.
Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, with Mr. HANBACK.
Mr. DAWSON with Mr. ROCKWELL.

The following-named members were announced as paired on this vote:

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, with Mr. BURLEIGH.
Mr. BALLENTINE with Mr. LOUTTIT.
Mr. COMSTOCK with Mr. BINGHAM.
Mr. WARD, of Illinois, with Mr. CANNON.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. TAULBEE. I yield five minutes to my colleague [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I am taken somewhat by surprise in consequence of the calling up of this case this morning, although it was done with my consent; and I have not at hand certain memoranda which I had hoped to present to the House in the consideration of this veto message. I regret very much, indeed, that the time of the House has been unnecessarily occupied with a roll-call, because I believe that the facts in this case are so few and so simple that the question could have been disposed of in less time than has been taken by this dilatory movement.

This old gentleman resides in my district. I have known him from my boyhood; and I am somewhat familiar with the facts upon which his application for this pension is founded. Upon those facts I presented to this House a bill which was considered by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and that committee, by a unanimous vote, declared that he was entitled to a pension, being the dependent father of a soldier who had died in the service of his country. That bill passed both Houses of Congress, but was vetoed by the President.

The main consideration which actuated the President was, as it seems to me from the reading of the veto message, the belief on his part that this young man was a deserter; and he so states in the veto message. It is due to the facts in the case to state that the record upon this point had not been very clearly presented; but my colleague [Mr. TAULBEE], who is a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, made a critical examination of the records after this veto message was sent to the House, and thereby strengthened the case materially. The facts which my colleague developed upon his examination being brought to the attention of the President, he very promptly directed the Commissioner of Pensions to reinvestigate this case, the object being to give this old man arrearages of pension if the facts sustained his application. In pursuance of the direct letter of the President, the Commissioner of Pensions caused an investigation of this case to be made by a special agent. In this latter investigation it is not claimed for one moment that this young man was a deserter. The evidence clearly shows that he was taken prisoner within a few miles of the point where his company was stationed, and was carried to Andersonville prison, where he died. All the evidence now conclusively shows that fact.

Mr. MORRISON. Where is that evidence? Let us have it.

Mr. WILLIS. It will be given to the House by my colleague. It is in the record. There is no dispute about it.

Mr. LONG. The President, in his veto message, makes no point of desertion, does he?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, he does. He mentions that.

Mr. LONG. I thought the point mentioned by the President was that the father was not dependent.

Mr. WILLIS. The message also raises the point as to the son having been a deserter. That was the main point.

Now, as to the question of dependence of the father. This old gentleman, who has now passed the age of three score years and ten, was engaged in the service of the city of Louisville as a detective, and many years prior to the death of his son received a wound in a contest with a burglar. Because of this fact he was retained on the police force, although not capable of discharging the active duties of the position. He is now unquestionably dependent, as he was then. Having a family of five or six children and without a dollar in the world, he has been supported during the last few years by the Masonic and Odd Fellows fraternities of the city of Louisville. These facts are shown in the evidence and are known to me personally; so that there can be no question in the world as to the dependence of this father, both at the time when his son died and at the present time.

But I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that in all these pension cases, where the question of dependence has been one of the prominent questions, our Committee on Invalid Pensions has considered the condition of the parent at the time of the application. In their judgment it has not been a matter of importance as to what the condition of the parent was at the death of the son if it could be shown that he was dependent at the time of making the application.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TAULBEE. I yield my colleague five minutes more.

Mr. WILLIS. I want only a minute or two.

Upon the question which finally caused a decision adverse to this applicant in the Pension Department—that is, whether the son was in the line of duty at the time of his capture—I desire to submit simply one statement.

It is admitted on all hands he was within a few miles of the post where his company was stationed. This company was there on guard duty, being scattered in different directions protecting the property of the Government, and this young man at the time was taken prisoner.

Those are the facts which will be more fully presented by my colleague [Mr. TAULBEE]. Therefore I say, on review of the whole question, there is no question as to the dependence of this father both at the time when the son died and at the present time, and no question the young man was in the discharge of his duty, having been captured by the enemy and dying at Andersonville prison. Upon all the facts of the case this applicant should be pensioned.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Let me ask the gentleman, in the line of his last statement, whether it does not appear in the evidence that a comrade of the same regiment was captured at the same time?

Mr. WILLIS. At the same time, and put in the same prison.

Mr. MORRILL. Under the late bill we passed present dependence only is required.

Mr. WILLIS. As the gentleman from Kansas has stated, this House expressed itself recently on the general question of dependence, by making present dependence the only guide. But the Committee on Invalid Pensions, prior to the passage of that law, as my friend from Kansas very well knows, has never given very much attention to the dependence at the time of the death of the son. In this case, however, the evidence shows this father was dependent when the son died, being retained in the police service, having received a severe wound in an attack made upon him by a burglar, and not because he was able to discharge the active duties of this position.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I will send to the Clerk's desk to be read a part of the report of the special examiner in this case, to which I I invite the attention of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the same time it would not appear that he was flagrantly outside the line of duty at the moment of capture, as he is shown to have been guarding Government property, notwithstanding the statement of Mr. Frissman (the baker) that he was responsible for the flour received from the several commissaries, and that he had to make good the loss. We can, I think, consider him in no other light than as a contractor, and that the flour was simply in his hands for the purpose of converting it into bread for the sustenance of United States troops.

Mr. TAULBEE. My object, Mr. Speaker, in having that read from the report of the special examiner is that full and fair investigation may be had of this case. My colleague [Mr. WILLIS] correctly stated this case as far as he went, and this report of the special examiner shows the fact that the Pension Office had investigated this case and had rejected this pension claim solely on the question of dependence, but the President in his veto message calls attention to the fact that the name of this claimant's son was marked as a deserter on the roll of his company. When this case was up before, I then stated that the President was fully justifiable in vetoing as he did, from the facts before him. When he came to consider this bill, to enter on the investigation upon which he based his veto message, the records of the War Department were submitted to him, and they showed this soldier deserted on the 20th of September, 1862. That question, however, had been investigated by the Pension Office prior to this, and the question had been passed upon in the Pension Office. But inasmuch as the veto message again raised the question, I took it upon myself to call upon the Adjutant-General of the Army and the Secretary of War to give a full military history or record of this soldier, which they did in a letter addressed to me and submitted to the House and printed in the RECORD on the 1st day of May last. Investigation showed that on the company roll of this soldier he was marked as deserter for the months of September and October, 1862, but subsequent report from the captain of the company led to the ascertainment of the fact as shown by the records of the War Department that instead of this soldier having deserted at the time that he was supposed to have deserted he was captured by the cavalry of General Wheeler and taken to Andersonville prison, where he died.

Mr. STEELE. Right there let me ask the gentleman a question, as he undertakes to apologize for the President. Does the gentleman not think that the officers who failed to give him full information upon the subject are censurable for their neglect?

Mr. TAULBEE. It is not my purpose to criticise the conduct of any officer. I presume the subordinate officers of the Adjutant-General's Office, be they who they may, were perfectly honest in giving to the case such attention as they thought it demanded; and when they submitted their report to the Commissioner of Pensions they believed it covered the entire military record of the soldier. But if they did make a mistake, which I believe they did make, and are censurable therefor, I hope that the gentleman will not attempt to attach any blame to the present administration either of the Pension Office or the Departments of this Government; because he knows as well as I do, and the country knows, that the subordinate officers of that Department are not in harmony, politically, with this administration at all.

Mr. STEELE. Well, they are getting to be, as fast as you can make them so.

Mr. TAULBEE. Not quite as fast as I would like to see them made.

Mr. SPRINGER. They are in harmony now with this administration, I presume; but they were appointed by a previous administration. They are all "Democrats" now.

Mr. REED. I do not think the gentleman from Kentucky ought to introduce a topic that will stir up, as much as this does, that side of the House. Let us go on with the public business.

Mr. TAULBEE. But the question was raised by a gentleman on the opposite side of the Chamber.

I desire, Mr. Speaker, to state the further facts. After the subsequent investigation had been made at the office of the Secretary of War, and these official documents came to the knowledge of the President, on his motion and at his instance action upon the case was deferred by the House in order that a further investigation of the facts by a special examination of an examiner of the Pension Office might be had. I, as one of the members of the committee who had the bill in charge, consented to that, although I confess it was with some reluctance I did it. But I do not consider that the claimant has been injured, except by the mere fact that the relief to which, in my opinion, he is entitled has been deferred by that action for so much longer time. I repeat that when the facts were brought to his attention the President asked the Commissioner of Pensions to investigate the case. That investigation was had, and I hold the report in my hand.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Did the President make the request for further delay after the facts brought out by this examination or special investigation had been submitted to him?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir; after the facts had been laid before the President, or after he read them in the records of this House, perhaps; and he at his own instance asked that action be deferred.

Mr. STORM. How?

Mr. TAULBEE. By addressing a letter to the Commissioner of Pensions and requesting my colleague [Mr. WILLIS] and the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. MATSON], as I have understood from both of them——

Mr. MATSON. Will the gentleman permit me a moment? He is probably a little incorrect in that statement. There was no official communication or other communication by the President asking that action be deferred by the House; nothing of that kind; but there was simply action on his part in the way of a letter addressed to the Commissioner of Pensions, in which he asked him to further investigate the case, and then, upon motion of Mr. WILLIS and myself, we persuaded the House to defer action.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is there any reason why the Commissioner of Pensions could not have proceeded to grant the pension notwithstanding the action of the House in the premises?

Mr. TAULBEE. I was approaching that point. I may have misunderstood the maneuverings touching the case which resulted in this postponement. It was my understanding then, and is now, that the President was attempting to make further investigation of the case, and the chairman of the committee and Mr. WILLIS both requested me to desist until the further investigation of the case could be had. That investigation was ordered. That special examiner proceeded to Louisville, and after having, as he states in his report, given the claimant ample opportunity to introduce all the witnesses he desired to introduce, in a subsequent part of the report gives the name of a witness living, I believe, in Saint Louis that claimant desired to have interrogated, but who was never interrogated. However material the witness may have been, I consider that the testimony submitted by the special examiner is amply sufficient to authorize the House to pass the bill, and it develops facts sufficient in my judgment to induce the President to have signed the bill cheerfully had those facts been before him when he sent the veto message upon which the present motion is based.

Mr. BUCHANAN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TAULBEE. With pleasure.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Why did not the Commissioner of Pensions grant the pension at the office?

Mr. SPRINGER. That is what I would like to know.

Mr. TAULBEE. I was proceeding to that point.

Now on this report of the special examiner, recommending the rejection of this claim, the Commissioner of Pensions rejected it on the ground of dependence; and in the action of the office there is a suggestion made to the effect that the soldier was not strictly in the line of duty when captured by the Confederate soldiers.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Is this the report of the examiner appointed at the request of the President?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMMOND. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Do you wish us to understand that though the special examiner reported adversely upon the claim, and the Commissioner of Pensions acted adversely upon it, yet that the reasoning ought to have made them act otherwise?

Mr. TAULBEE. No; I did not state that. What I stated was this: That I believe if these facts had been before the President at the time he signed the veto message he would have signed the bill instead.

The decision of the Pension Office is not to the effect that this bill is not in the line of legislation, or that this bill is void of merit; but it is to the effect that in the judgment of the Commissioner of Pensions existing laws do not authorize the allowance of this claim. And in that particular this bill stands upon precisely the same footing that every other private relief bill passed by this House stands upon.

Mr. HAMMOND. May I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMMOND. Has the President's attention been called to those facts?

Mr. TAULBEE. I am not posted as to that.

Mr. MILLS. Did the special examiner report against this pension?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLS. And the Commissioner of Pensions sustains his report?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TAULBEE. Certainly.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Were these facts before the Commissioner of Pensions at the time he rejected the application?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. On what ground did he reject it?

Mr. TAULBEE. He adhered to the former decision on the ground of dependence, with an intimation that the soldier was not strictly in the line of duty at the time of his capture. That is the substance of the recent action at the Pension Office. It is fair to the Commissioner of Pensions and to the case that I should state that all these facts were before him when this last action was had; and yet I maintain that action is no indication to the effect that he would not have recommended, if he had exercised such a prerogative, the passage of a special bill to pension this man.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. TAULBEE. Certainly.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. The question I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky is this: Is the action of the Commissioner of Pensions final; and is it required to pass this bill in order that this man may have his pension?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Allow me this suggestion. If the bill which has recently passed both Houses becomes a law would it be necessary to pass this bill to secure this man a pension?

Mr. TAULBEE. It would.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Then he is not dependent.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let me say this in response to the gentleman from Ohio. He asks me whether, if there is no question about present dependence, this claimant could not get a pension under the recent law. He could because he is absolutely destitute but for the fact as intimated in the recent decision of the Commissioner of Pensions touching the question as to whether the soldier was in the line of duty at the time of the capture. The Commissioner of Pensions still adheres to his former decision, and on the point raised by the veto message of the President he intimates concurrence.

I wish to make a brief statement in reference to the question of dependence, and then will proceed to the vital point of the case.

Mr. SOWDEN. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOWDEN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether the Commissioner, upon a review of the case, rejected it for the second time.

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOWDEN. I ask the gentleman also whether the last decision has been appealed to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. TAULBEE. It has not.

Mr. SOWDEN. And has not been reversed?

Mr. TAULBEE. That decision has never been reversed by the Secretary of the Interior, and there are points upon which an appeal could not be pushed and successfully prosecuted on the question of dependence. At the time the soldier enlisted his father was on the police force of Louisville, receiving a salary of $50 or $60 a month. It was proven by the officers of the company that he contributed liberally of his pay as a soldier to the support of his crippled and invalid father.

On that question the recent decisions of the Pension Office are to this effect. I hold one of them before me now. This is a case decided in application No. 178134, where the claimant had property to the amount of $4,500 in money or other securities at 7 per cent. interest, and in addition to that owned a tract of land in the State of Texas, the exact value of which is not given, but from which it is stated in the decision $1,000 had been realized. In that case the dependence was considered sufficient to authorize the granting of a pension.

Mr. HAMMOND. Who decided that?

Mr. TAULBEE. Secretary Teller, I believe.

A more recent decision is to this effect: That in considering the question of dependence $300 should be allowed for the support of a father and mother and $100 for each child under sixteen years of age. Had that decision been adhered to in this case I think it would have authorized the granting of a pension on the question of dependence.

But be the dependence of the father at the time of enlistment as it may, the report of the special examiner, as shown by the voluminous testimony in this case, is that the father is now absolutely destitute; that he is old, decrepit, and crippled. He is in bad health and is supported by the charitable institutions of the city in which he lives, and where, I am happy to say, he maintains a good reputation and standing. His present dependence then is sufficient, in view of the recent law passed by this House and the Senate.

Now, the question as to the line of duty at the time of the capture is the only question which, in my opinion, could be made to justify the conscience of any gentleman in voting against this bill. The facts of the case are simply these: The captain of Company A, to which this soldier belonged, was ordered out on a scout or other duty, and, for some reason satisfactory to himself, as stated by him in his affidavit, he left this soldier behind. The soldier was sent out by some one (it is not stated by whom, but it is proven by his comrades who accompanied him) with the baker of the regiment to guard a wagon-train carrying flour to the headquarters of the army. While he was thus occupied in what he doubtless conceived to be his line of duty, the troops were ordered to return to camp, as the result of the knowledge obtained that the confederate soldiers were approaching the neighborhood toward which they were going.

When this soldier turned and started in the direction of the headquarters he was captured and taken to Andersonville, where he died. These are the facts with reference to the question of line of duty, and upon that point I wish to call attention again to the extract from the report which the Clerk has read from the desk, in which it is said substantially that while the soldier may not have been technically in the line of duty, yet it was not apparent that he was not in the line of duty, and the presumption to that effect was taken to the prejudice of this claimant. That is a theory which, so far as my experience and observation go, has never been carried out in the administration of the Pension Office, and it is certainly a theory which this House has never been in the habit of carrying out in the consideration of these private cases.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him another question?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMMOND. Assuming that this man was in the line of duty, and that his father was dependent, will he not get a pension under the general law?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir. If the bill now before the President becomes a law.

Mr. RYAN. If those things concurred he would.

Mr. HAMMOND. And if they do not concur, he ought not to have it at all.

Mr. TAULBEE. On that question the special examiner has adhered to the intimation made by the President in his veto message, written when all the facts were not before him; and, doubtless, it is apparent to members of this House what motives or incentives might prompt the special examiner, in his report, to strain a point in order to sustain the opinion of the President, when, so far as he could have known, that opinion of the President was deliberate and based upon a full knowledge of all the facts.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. TAULBEE. With pleasure.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. As I understand the gentleman, the presumption is that the special examiner strained a point to meet the views of the Executive. Did the Commissioner of Pensions, in again rejecting this claim, follow the same line and strain a point?

Mr. TAULBEE. I think the gentleman did not understand me. I do not think I said that the special examiner did strain a point. If I did I spoke unadvisedly; but I insist that I did not say that. Neither do I say that the Commissioner of Pensions has strained any point or any construction of law or facts in order to justify his action in this matter. I have no ambition to accomplish in this case beyond the mere desire to do what I conceive to be my official duty in behalf of a worthy claimant—a man who gave his son to the service of his country.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. If the gentleman will permit me I will ask him another question. If I understand his argument now, it is that the special examiner did not strain a point, that the Commissioner of Pensions did not strain a point, that the Executive did not strain a point, and that all three were right. [Laughter.] If so, what is the case here for?

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I am not on this floor to strain points, nor to discuss the propriety of straining points. I am here to discharge a plain duty, and I respectfully decline to enter into such a colloquy as might follow from the remarks of the gentleman who has just spoken. I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON].

Mr. BUCHANAN. Before the gentleman takes his seat I wish to ask him a question, simply for information. Has the claim been rejected by the Pension Office again since the veto?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUCHANAN. What grounds are alleged in the rejection for such action?

Mr. TAULBEE. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker, to restating that the case was rejected on the question of dependence. The last rejection is simply a reaffirmation of the former decision, and amounts to this: that the facts as set out in the proof do not justify the allowance of the pension under the law, which requires the dependence to have existed at the time of soldier's death.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And upon the testimony as you have examined it, you believe that rejection by the Pension Office to be improper?

Mr. TAULBEE. I say that under the bill recently passed by the House it would be improper, and that under the custom of this House it would be improper; for the gentleman doubtless knows that it is our custom here and the custom of our committee to consider the question of present dependence, rather than to confine ourselves to the question of dependence at the time of enlistment or death.

Mr. MATSON. I did not intend, Mr. Speaker, to say anything in relation to this question.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the attention of this House ought to be invited to this case more strongly perhaps than to any other of the cases vetoed by the President, because of the fact that there has been probably more public discussion on account of this veto than on account of the veto of any other of the private pension bills.

To sum up the whole case, I think its character might be expressed by saying that it was a very close one, even under the general law. At the same time my deliberate judgment is that the case has been properly rejected in the Pension Office whenever it was adjudicated. I believe that as the law now stands, and until the bill recently passed by both Houses of Congress and now perhaps in the hands of the President shall become a law, this case does not come within the general law; that there was not shown that dependence of the parent at the time of the death of the soldier which the law requires should be shown. But, on the other hand, Congress and the President have repeatedly acted upon cases of this kind where the question was one of present dependence rather than dependence at the time of the death of the soldier. The President has signed bills granting relief to dependent parents where the case had been brought to Congress because there was an inability to show dependence at the time of the death of the soldier, and where it was insisted that there was a present dependence.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. MATSON. Not now. I decline to yield, because I do not wish to be interrupted at this time. When I get through with what I have to say about the history of this matter I will yield to the gentleman.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that in many cases in which bills have been passed by Congress and signed by the President, relief was based upon the ground that the claimant, though unable to show dependence at the time of the death of the soldier, showed clearly a present dependence. Congress and the President have therefore recognized that as a just and righteous rule; and recently a bill has been passed, which is now in the hands of the President, to establish that as a general provision of law.

Upon the other question, as to whether or not this soldier was in the line of duty, I am satisfied, after a very careful and thorough investigation of the facts, that the action of the Pension Office was correct—not because I believe that the soldier was not in the line of duty, for I do not so believe, I think he was; but the trouble is the evidence necessary to prove it can not be produced. There is the difficulty. Here is an affirmative fact which the claimant must establish. This is a claim by a dependent father who had no knowledge of the circumstances under which his son was taken prisoner, and is unable to show affirmatively that the son was in the line of duty. So I think upon that ground also the claim has been properly rejected in the Pension Office.

Upon that question, however, the claimant has shown that his son was in the presence of the enemy when taken prisoner; that his face was probably turned in the direction of the enemy; that he was engaged in guarding Government property; and there are sufficient corroborating circumstances shown by this claimant to justify me in arriving at the conclusion that the claim ought not to be rejected by Congress on that ground, but that where a claim is so nearly established, though perhaps not established as the law requires, and where the equities are shown to be so strong, there ought to be no hesitation on the part of Congress in granting relief.

Mr. HAMMOND. Is that the question pending before the House; or is not the pending question whether we ought to vote against sustaining this veto in a case that is only a little doubtful?

Mr. MATSON. That is the question exactly—whether or not we ought to pass this bill over the objections of the President. For one, with all due respect to the President of the United States, I feel obliged to cast my vote in favor of passing this bill over his veto. I want to say for the President, because I know the history of this case, as does my friend from Kentucky, that the President, during the whole progress of the transaction—and this case has received, perhaps, more attention than any other that has been vetoed—has shown a disposition to exhaust every possible remedy for the purpose of enabling this old man to secure his rights under the general law.

Mr. HAMMOND. Would it not be possible and altogether proper for the President to send to the House a special message, if he desired to retract?

Mr. MATSON. I do not know of any such practice; nor do I know that the President wishes to retract. I do not want to put him in that position. I understand that the President stands by his veto because he believes that upon this question, whether the soldier was in the line of duty, the party who attempts to establish a claim of that kind ought to be held to the rigid proof, and that it should be shown affirmatively in this case that the soldier was in the line of duty when he was taken prisoner. I suppose the President desires to adhere to that position, and I am not going to quarrel with him about it. He takes one view and I another; there is no need of any quarrel. In this case the question is so nearly established, and certainly so equitable a case has been made out by this old man, showing that his son was in the presence of the enemy and was nearly, if not entirely, in the line of duty, that I shall not hesitate to vote to grant a pension from the date of the passage of the act.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe I have covered the two principal points in the case, and I will yield to the gentleman from Maine for a question.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I understand the gentleman to say that if the general law had corresponded with the measure which we passed in the House the other day, so far as the question of dependence is concerned, the Pension Office would have found no trouble.

Mr. MATSON. I presume there would have been no difficulty in that regard.

Mr. MILLIKEN. And the only trouble now is that the Pension Office requires this man to establish rigidly the fact in regard to his son having been in the line of duty; and while such technical proof as the Pension Office requires on that point can not be presented, still the gentleman from Indiana is satisfied from the evidence that this matter is sufficiently established to satisfy Congress beyond any reasonable doubt?

Mr. MATSON. I do not put it quite so strongly as that. I do not say it is shown "beyond any reasonable doubt;" that would be a very strong proposition. But I do say this claimant has shown that his son was there with his company just before he started off to guard the wagon train; that he continued in the presence of the enemy; that he was doing some kind of military duty at the time he was taken prisoner; and although the father can not now show that his son had a regular detail, or that the captain or colonel of the regiment or some other officer directed that he should go with that particular wagon train, I think enough evidence has been presented to show that the young man was there for the purpose of performing his duty, that he had not deserted, that he was intending to do his duty as a soldier. Therefore I am willing to give the old man the benefit of any doubt on this point, and vote to grant him a pension.

Mr. SOWDEN. Does not the report of the special examiner show he was absent without leave?

Mr. MATSON. I think not. I do not think the report of the special examiner shows he was absent without leave.

Mr. SOWDEN. I call for the reading of the report.

A MEMBER. There is no report.

Mr. SPRINGER. Here it is in the report.

Mr. SOWDEN. Let me have the report read.

Mr. TAULBEE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON].

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me there is less excuse for passing this bill over the veto or objections of the President than there was when it was last before the House for consideration. The President vetoed this bill, among other reasons, because it appeared upon the records of the War Office where it now appears, and has appeared officially for many years, this soldier was marked as a deserter; and because the proof in the case did not meet the requirements of the law in relation to the dependence of the father on the son for support.

The facts are, as shown by the proofs and report of the special agent, this soldier was out on guard duty taking care of sutlers' or Government stores, and was found going alone in the direction of the opposing army.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman is mistaken in that. He was with several comrades, who were captured at the same time he was.

Mr. TAULBEE. He was with a wagon train loaded with flour.

Mr. MORRISON. There are conflicting statements as to the exact facts; but whatever the facts may be, or whatever these gentlemen claim them to be, the Pension Office sent an agent, I presume with the approval of the claimant, and with all the assistance the friends of this old man in Louisville could give him, after careful examination of the whole matter, the agent was compelled to return to the Pension Office and say this claim ought to be rejected, because it did not appear that this man was in the line of duty when captured, if he was captured.

Now as to the other fact, the dependence of the father on the son for support; and because of this the consideration of this subject ought, I think, to have been postponed at least until it was determined whether the measure lately passed here in relation to such dependence was to become a law. For I insist, Mr. Speaker, the Pension Office, with its agents, with its friendly and almost partial purpose to find in favor of every soldier, can better ascertain the truth and can better know whether or not a man was in the line of duty at any time than we can. And if we had only been patient a day or two until we could have seen whether the bill we passed became the law, the other fact would have been disposed of. And I have little doubt the President will be found as desirous of following public opinion as this House. Then all legal objection to this claim will be removed, and this man can get his pension, if he is entitled to it. If, after further investigation, with all the aid these gentlemen can give the Pension Bureau, they can ascertain with reasonable certainty, or even if there is any reasonable probability of this man having been in the line of duty, he will get his pension without the necessity of straining or guessing at facts or running counter to established rules or safe precedents.

Mr. TAULBEE. I yield two minutes to my colleague [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I regret the time of this House has been so long occupied with a case which will not bankrupt the Treasury of the United States. We are not considering a case, as we were last Monday, involving from ten to twenty-five millions of dollars. We are not considering a case where the soldier may have served thirty or ninety days and proposing to give him $12 a month. There was such a measure before this House, and some of these gentlemen who array themselves against this octogenarian voted for that bill.

Now, what are the plain facts, the undisputed facts, before this House? There was a soldier, the only boy of this old man; there he lies dead in the Andersonville prison. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] deny that? His son gave up his life as a sacrifice on the altar of his country, dying the terrible death of death in prison.

Does any one deny that his father is now dependent? He can not truthfully deny it on this record. The old man is nearly eighty years of age, without any occupation, unable to do any character of work, and is supported by the charity of the Odd Fellows of my city—there is another fact, Mr. Speaker, that all the argument on this floor can not do away with.

What further? Why it is stated that the special agent did not find enough proof to show absolutely, without cavil, that this soldier was in the line of duty. That special agent was considering the question of arrears of pension, and we know how careful they are when three, four, or five thousand dollars are involved. But we are not here considering arrears. We are upon an appeal from the Pension Office, governed, not by the technical evidence, but by the inevitable presumptions brought out by the surroundings, and those presumptions are all in favor of establishing the fact that this man's son was in the line of duty, with his face toward the foe, guarding Government property when he was arrested by confederate soldiers and carried with his comrades to a confederate prison. These are the facts.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Is it not also true that he was acting under orders of a superior officer?

Mr. WILLIS. He was there acting under orders——

The SPEAKER. The time yielded to the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask a minute longer.

Mr. TAULBEE. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. WILLIS. What further facts are developed? If you grant this pension, not involving ten millions or twenty-five millions of dollars, but if you grant this pension you will have taken out of the Treasury, upon the ordinary expectation of life, about $250 in all.

Mr. MILLS. I want to ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether the property this soldier is alleged to have been guarding was captured at the same time he was captured?

Mr. WILLIS. My understanding is that it was—the bakery and everything connected with it, as well as himself and his comrades. The only point now is that this old man, far removed from the battlefield, is unable, forsooth, to bring the exact line and plummet to demonstrate to these gentlemen by affirmative evidence that this boy was in the line of duty, when all the facts show it, and this House, unless it hides itself from the truth, will admit that he was.

Sir, I will not occupy further the time of the House with the discussion of a question, which, as I have said, according to the ordinary tables of human life will require an appropriation of but $250, in view of the fact that we passed an appropriation bill covering an expenditure of from ten to twenty-five millions of dollars after thirty minutes' discussion the other day.

Mr. BRAGG addressed the Chair.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to have a vote on this case unless some gentleman wants to take the floor in opposition.

Mr. BRAGG. As I understand it the hour expired before the other gentleman from Kentucky had finished speaking, and I addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky took the floor at thirty-five minutes past 1 o'clock. He has six minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. TAULBEE. I have no desire to prevent the gentleman from Wisconsin from discussing the case, if he wishes, either in my own time or his own.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to take the floor in my own right.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has six minutes.

Mr. BRAGG. I understood the occupant of the chair a few moments ago to drop the hammer on the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS], who requested to be permitted to proceed for one minute longer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] was speaking in the time of his colleague [Mr. TAULBEE], who had yielded to him five minutes.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Speaker, I differ entirely from the conclusions of any gentleman who has addressed the House upon this bill. I say that the record shows, upon a fair comparison of the evidence, that this man was not in the line of his duty. In reviewing this question, I desire those gentlemen here who are accustomed to consider evidence, and its weight, to listen to what I have to say and the records which I will cite in support of the position I take.

The evidence which went to show that this man was in the line of his duty was evidence upon ex parte affidavits, and the circumstances connected with the positions of the men who made the ex parte affidavits show that they were upon hearsay only; while the record evidence shows that the man was not in the line of his duty. The first affidavit filed to show that he was in the line of his duty was the affidavit of his captain. The affidavit of his captain, the captain of Company A, to which this soldier belonged, after stating that the soldier was captured, as he learned by hearsay, goes on to say that he himself, the captain, was absent with a detail of his Company A in charge of a wagon train going to Huntsville, Ala., and that this man was left behind in camp and therefore was not with his company, but was left hanging about the camp in the rear, while the company went on duty guarding this train on the road to Huntsville; thus showing that the man was not with his company at that time. So much for the affidavit that he was on duty.

Next comes the affidavit of a lieutenant of the company that this man was captured while on duty guarding a wagon train. When or where he does not state, and the circumstances show that he could not have known, but made it, as ex parte affidavits are made, upon the representations of others.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BRAGG. Not now, sir. After I finish this I will yield to the gentleman.

If this company with its officers was off on detached service, and the captain in his affidavit says this man was not with it, these two affidavits, that of the captain and the lieutenant, must be construed together. The captain states that he was captured while on duty, as he learned by information. The lieutenant who was with him on the detail, could have no other information except that possessed by the captain, for he was with his company, and it is conceded that the man was left in the camp.

There is all the evidence there is upon ex parte affidavits that he was captured in the line of his duty. Now we have evidence since, that the Pension Office have sent a special examiner for the purpose of examining these witnesses to ascertain what the truth of the fact was; and he reports after a special examination that the evidence shows that this man was not captured in the line of his duty. How was he captured? And how is it proven?

A young man, the son of a baker, by the name of Bottger, testifies—and here is all you get as to this man who was on guard. I want to call the attention of the House, and particularly the attention of my eloquent friend from Kentucky, to what we are told of this man, who it is alleged was on guard, properly detailed, resisting the enemies of his country. Let us see what this man Bottger, who was present when the soldier was captured, as he states, says he was doing. He declares "that he was with the post baker at Stevenson, Ala., with wagon train and sutler's wagon; he was in company with George W. Tiller."

He was there with the sutler's wagon accompanied by George W. Tiller. He was not in the service of the United States. He was a son of a baker; and this straggler left in the camp when his company went forward on duty went with the baker's son to the sutler's headquarters. And what happened while there? There was a raid made on the sutlers, which was very common. [Laughter.] I remember our gallant friend Mosby used to say that if we would give him a chance at a sutler he would exchange an officer for a sutler's wagon at any time. And I have no doubt my friend General WHEELER's men were hungry. For we know the activity of that gentleman here, how he wishes to keep every man lively, and unless his soldiers had full haversacks they were likely to be hungry.

Well, General WHEELER's cavalry made a raid, struck that point, and they captured—whom? The baker and this famous soldier from Louisville, who was there in company with the baker's son.

Now, then, let us follow him further. That affidavit of the capture was made by this boy fifteen or sixteen years afterward. Let us trace it and see whether or not he might even be mistaken on that subject. He was captured and taken with this man Tiller to prison in Richmond. He was assigned to Castle Thunder, and Tiller, he says, was assigned to Libby. Now let us go and examine the confederate records of the prison and see what we find. We find a record of Bottger's capture, as a baker held as a prisoner, but there is no record of Tiller.

We go to Libby. There is no record of Tiller there. We find a record, however, of the prisoners who were captured within two or three days of that time by my distinguished and active friend from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] all properly recorded. But Tiller non est.

When do we hear of Tiller next? I think, if my memory serves me, on the 21st day of July of the next year, almost a year after he was taken into Andersonville prison, and died the next day. Where was he during that year?

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question at that point?

Mr. BRAGG. If the gentleman will wait till I get through, he can then question me to his heart's content.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I do not care to ask the gentleman the question unless I can do so at this time.

Mr. BRAGG. I decline to yield. I have seen enough catechising this morning.

Now, as I have said, there is no record of this man being in prison until nearly a year after the time he is reported as a deserter. That brings me back to another proposition. If the second lieutenant's affidavit is correct, if there was a detail of this man to go upon duty, then Mr. Second lieutenant and Mr. Captain, who certified that he was a deserter—what did they do? They disgraced a member of their own company who was on detail doing legitimate duty. Which is the more credible evidence, the official action of the officers at the time or an affidavit made fifteen years afterwards that they had heard he had gone away and been captured?

Now, on the question of dependence, I know nothing about that and care nothing about it. But I maintain that the record and the evidence show that this man if he was captured at the post at Whiteside station was there as a straggler, waiting on the sutler's quarters, and that he was not upon duty. And I say there is no man upon the floor of this House who can furnish any evidence that that man was ever detailed on duty, but on the contrary the evidence is furnished that, instead of being on detailed duty with his company, the company went away with the captain and performed duty, and were not captured.

In that view I say, Mr. Speaker, that the President in reviewing this evidence reviewed it as a lawyer ought to review it. He reviewed it as the chief magistrate, whose duty it is to see that the laws are protected. He did it without sentiment; he had no gush for a townsman; he did it as the chief executive ought to do always, acting coolly and examining the law and evidence to see if the man was in a position to be brought within the benefits of the law.

It was his duty as chief magistrate, when he came to the conclusion that the case was not within the provisions of the law, to say so to this House by his veto message. I hope that the message will be sustained. I yield now five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] takes his seat I wish to ask him if he has read the recent report of the investigation by the special examiner.

Mr. BRAGG. I have it here. I did not know, Mr. Speaker, that the evidence taken by the special examiner would show just exactly what I have been arguing as the conclusion properly to be drawn from the ex parte affidavits. Here is the affidavit of the baker. He was asked, "Was not the soldier detailed to go with you on guard?" His answer was "No, sir; he went on his own hook, I think, and I know of no business he had except a pleasure trip so far as he was concerned, I think." I did not know, I say, that this examination would show that fact, but what this man states is the conclusion I had arrived at from the ex parte evidence. It appears that he was examined by the pension examiner and testified to the facts exactly as I inferred them from the ex parte statements. It shows that the man was left behind in camp, as many gentlemen here have known men to be left who wanted to go away on a little excursion to the sutler's or somewhere else.

Mr. TAULBEE. Have you read the report of the special examiner?

Mr. BRAGG. I have not.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish to state then——

Mr. BRAGG. One moment. Not in my time. You will not make any statement in my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. How much time does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]?

Mr. BRAGG. Five minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask to have read in my time the report of the special examiner, which I send to the desk.

Before the Clerk begins to read, I wish to state that this is the report of a special agent sent out by the Pension Office, at the request of the President, to examine all the facts in relation to this case, not only those on file, but also those that could be ascertained by the examination of additional witnesses. The officer assigned to that duty was Col. Charles C. Horton, who was colonel of an Iowa regiment during the war.

A MEMBER. What is the date of that report?

Mr. SPRINGER. September last. Colonel Horton has been in the Pension Office for many years; he is well known to the members of the Iowa delegation upon this floor, and they will all certify to his high character and trustworthiness as a gentleman. I now ask that his report upon this case be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

LOUISVILLE, KY., September 14, 1886.

HON. JOHN C. BLACK,
Commissioner of Pensions, Washington, D. C.:

SIR: I have the honor to return the papers and to submit this my report in the claim, No. 234478, of Carter W. Tiller.

Claimant's post-office address is No. 563 East Green street, Louisville, Ky., and he claims a pension as dependent father of George W. Tiller, late private Company A, Twenty-eighth Kentucky Volunteers, who died at Andersonville prison in 1864.

This is a rejected claim. The matter was subsequently brought before Congress by the introduction of a bill granting a pension to claimant, which was passed, but was vetoed by the President. Upon representations made to him, President Cleveland, under date of July 8, 1886, addressed a communication to the honorable Commissioner of Pensions with the request that he review the case, not only upon the papers on file in the office, but also in the light of any additional evidence or information within his reach.

The claim was referred to me for a thorough and exhaustive examination at Louisville, Ky., to determine the questions of line of duty of soldier at date of capture, and dependence of claimant upon soldier at date of soldier's death.

The evidence herewith submitted represents but a small share of the time and labor expended in the investigation of this claim. I called upon and interviewed a large number of officers and comrades, not only of soldier's company, but of other companies of the regiment, as well as many of claimant's old neighbors and associates, without securing any material or additional evidence or information upon the points at issue.

In the prosecution of my investigation, I have accorded to the claimant and his attorney (one or the other has been present during the examination of all witnesses) the utmost latitude, in the way of introducing evidence and in giving them time in which to find and introduce witnesses.

I will say in this connection that, with the exception of Mr. Bliss (Dep. N), the witnesses who have testified before me were all introduced by claimant or his attorney. While several were perhaps somewhat biased in favor of claimant, they are all good, reliable citizens.

The claimant in this case is very much respected as an honorable and truthful man, as one who is poor and needy in his old age by reason of his generosity rather than from his prodigality.

After a thorough and careful effort, I am satisfied that I have secured all, and the very best, available evidence touching the merits or demerits of this claim.

In view of my instructions to complete the investigation, and let my report settle the claim, if possible, I deemed it best to proceed to Indianapolis in order to secure the testimony of Charles Owen, a comrade and personal friend of soldier, and whose statement claimant desired me to take. I found Owen had left Indianapolis and that he was supposed to be in Saint Louis, Mo. He is a printer and he is thought to be employed upon the Globe-Democrat.

From the evidence it does not appear that soldier accompanied the army baker on the trip to Whiteside station, either under orders or by permission, and the presumption is that he was in fact absent without proper authority, consequently was not in the line of duty. At the same time it would not appear that he was flagrantly outside the line of duty at the moment of capture, as he is shown to have been guarding Government property. Notwithstanding the statement of Mr. Frissman, the baker, that he was responsible for the flour received from the several commissaries and that he had to make good the loss, we can, I think, consider him in no other light than as a contractor, and that the flour was simply in his hands for the purpose of converting it into bread for the subsistence of the United States troops.

To my mind the evidence does not sustain the allegation of dependence at date of soldier's death or at any time during the period that he continued in the service of the municipal government of this city.

While claimant had doubtless been disabled to a great extent for the performance of manual labor since the receipt of his wound in 1858 and has probably been unable to discharge the more active duties of a regular police officer, the fact is patent that he did render valuable and efficient service as a detective, and the presumption is, from the absence of evidence to the contrary, that he was in fact retained upon the said detective force——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has expired.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I had desired to move the previous question on this case as early as possible, as I certainly do not wish to occupy the time of the House unnecessarily, and I will move the previous question, unless my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] desires to occupy his time.

Mr. BRAGG. I will yield the floor to allow you to make that motion.

Mr. TAULBEE. Before doing that, however, I desire to make a statement with reference to the argument of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG]. He has labored to establish the conclusion that when this soldier was captured he was not in the line of duty; and, in support of that proposition, the gentleman has resorted to the construction and collation of testimony. I would call his attention to the document (which he has doubtless read) on page 6450 of the RECORD of the last session of this Congress, in which it is shown by the letter of the Adjutant-General, addressed to me, of date July 1, 1886, that one John W. B. Shirley, a witness in this case, who was charged, as this soldier was, with desertion, was in fact "captured at Stevenson, Ala., October 10, 1863."

I call his attention also to another witness who gives a history of his prison life, which is corroborated in detail by the records of the confederate prisons. While the records of those prisons are not complete in our War Department, yet so far as we have them they do sustain and corroborate every statement of these witnesses with reference to the facts concerning which they testify; yet when the witnesses testify as to the capture of this soldier, there is an effort made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] to discredit their statements, notwithstanding the fact that the records preserved from the wreck of the rebellion sustain in an almost miraculous manner every detail to which they testify save the mere fact of the capture of the soldier on account of whose death a pension is claimed. I maintain that a more complete chain of corroborating evidence could not, in all human probability, be expected in a case like this; and, so far as the ex parte affidavit of the captain with reference to line of duty is concerned, he has testified in his affidavit before the Pension Office and in the examination made by the special agent of the Pension Office recently, that this soldier was left behind with his consent, although he has no definite recollection of the facts which led to his being thus left behind. Those who were captured with him testify as to his having been at the time engaged in the discharge of a public duty—not as the gentleman would have us believe, following up the sutler, but guarding Government property, having been detailed for that purpose as shown by the evidence of those who were with him, as well as those who had left him at the point where he was captured.

I maintain that to brand this soldier now, to place a stain upon his good name after he has sacrificed his life in this way, is unfair to him, unfair to every unfortunate soldier who happened to be captured when there was none left to tell the tale. There is a deeper question involved in this proposition than the mere granting of a pension. That is a small matter when compared with the injustice of casting a slur, by the action of Congress, on the good name of this soldier, wounding the pride of his family in his record, and sending rankling to the heart of his fond father who gave his son to the country a bitter realization that the Congress of that country for which the son gave his life has cast the stigma of desertion upon the fair fame of that son.

I move the previous question.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I would like to know if there is any form in which this question can be put to the House so that gentlemen will be enabled to vote for this pension and at the same time sustain the Administration?

Mr. TAULBEE. To whom was the gentleman's question addressed?

Mr. BOUTELLE. To the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. HATCH]. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] has demanded the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now, Shall this bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? On this question the Constitution requires that the yeas and nays shall be entered on the Journal. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 136, nays 115, not voting 67; as follows:

Mr. BALLENTINE with Mr. CANNON, for the rest of the day.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, with Mr. LE FEVRE, on this vote.

Mr. HEARD with Mr. ATKINSON, for the rest of the day.

Mr. COMSTOCK with Mr. BINGHAM, for the rest of the day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this question the yeas are 136, the nays 115. Two-thirds not having voted in the affirmative, the bill is lost.

ELLA A. WARD.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts. That committee has directed me to report back with a favorable recommendation the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House be, and is hereby, directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Ella A. Ward, the daughter of Anna E. Ward, late an employé of this House, a sum equal to her salary for six months, and also the expenses attending her last sickness and funeral, not to exceed the sum of $250.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, Anna E. Ward was the widow of a soldier of the United States in the war with Mexico. Ward was desperately wounded in storming the heights of Chapultepec. After his death (a little more than twenty years ago) the House of Representatives placed his widow upon the roll of employés, and gave to her charge of the "National Statuary Hall." About one month since she died, and this bill gives to her only child the usual six months' salary and a sum of money not exceeding $250 to defray the funeral expenses. I ask for a vote upon the proposition.

The question being taken on agreeing to the resolution, there were—ayes 58, noes 26.

Mr. COWLES. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH in the chair) appointed as tellers Mr. DOCKERY and Mr. COWLES.

Mr. COWLES. After explanation by the gentleman from Missouri, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. DOCKERY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order of business is the call of committees for reports for reference, commencing with the Committee on Elections.

BOUNDARIES OF FOURTH COLLECTION DISTRICT, VIRGINIA.

Mr. O'FERRALL, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back the bill (H. R. 10347) to change the boundaries of the fourth collection district of Virginia, and for other purposes, and the same was laid on the table.

Mr. O'FERRALL, from the Committee on Commerce, also reported a substitute for the foregoing, a bill (H. R. 11025) to amend an act approved June 15, 1882, changing boundaries of the fourth collection district of Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT-STATIONS.

Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on Agriculture, reported back the bill (S. 372) to establish agricultural experiment-stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CONSTRUCTION OF CRUISER NO. 1.

Mr. NORWOOD, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a joint resolution (H. Res. 251) relating to the construction of cruiser No. 1, known as the Newark; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It seems no report accompanies this joint resolution, and under the rules a written report is required.

Mr. NORWOOD. I ask, by unanimous consent, to be permitted to supply the report during the day.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES FOR NEW MEXICO.

Mr. JOSEPH, from the Committee on the Territories, reported back favorably joint resolution (H. Res. 237) for the furnishing of a complete set of weights and measures to the Territory of New Mexico; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CHARLOTTE O'NEAL.

Mr. MATSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 859) granting a pension to Charlotte O'Neal; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PIROMIS H. BELL.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, from the Committee on Claims, reported back the bill (S. 1876) for the relief of Piromis H. Bell, administrator of Marcus A. Bell and others; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. GEDDES, the Committee on War Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5536) for the relief of Ferdinand Hercher; and the same was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

JAMES M. WILLBUR.

Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee on Claims, reported back the bill (S. 821) for the relief of James M. Willbur; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

BASE OF WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

Mr. COMPTON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back the bill (S. 2982) to authorize the Committee on the District of Columbia to permit the temporary occupancy of streets by a railway for the purpose of transporting material to fill about the base of the Washington Monument; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MANUFACTURE OF MODERN GUNS.

Mr. McADOO, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 11026) to provide for the manufacture of first-class modern guns for the Navy, seacoast, and other defenses; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour for the consideration of bills begins at 3 o'clock and 20 minutes. The call rests with the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

DRAPING OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS, ETC.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws to call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 10659) to prohibit the appointment of Congressional committees to attend funerals at public expense outside of the District of Columbia, and also to prohibit the draping of public buildings in mourning except upon the order of the President of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the approval of this act no money shall be drawn from the Treasury of the United States or be paid out of the contingent fund of either House of Congress to defray the expenses hereafter incurred of any Senator or Representative, or any committee of such, in attending the funeral or accompanying the remains of any deceased person outside the District of Columbia; nor shall any public building of the United States be draped in mourning unless the same be ordered by the President of the United States.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, the object of the committee in reporting this bill was to correct what was believed to be an abuse, which began no doubt under a disposition on the part of the two Houses of Congress to manifest what was deemed to be a proper measure of respect to the memory of its deceased members. It is well known, without going into the particulars of the statement, that that practice has, in some cases, been very much abused.

I have not been able to ascertain with accuracy the amount of expenses attending these joint committees of the two Houses appointed for such purposes. They vary from one thousand to as high as ten or twelve thousand dollars, and some perhaps exceed even that amount. It is quite impossible, without a vast amount of labor and trouble, to ascertain with any degree of accuracy the amount, because the items are distributed throughout the books of accounts, and would take a very considerable time to collect.

In the opinion of the committee this practice of sending committees of Congress to attend the funerals of deceased persons at great distances, or in fact at any distance whatever outside and beyond the District of Columbia, is wholly unnecessary as a mark of respect, and therefore they were in favor of passing this bill.

It will be observed that the bill does not undertake to prohibit the two Houses from appointing such committees. It is intended only to prevent the payment of any money out of the contingent fund of either House or out of the Treasury to defray such expense. If such committee is appointed and see proper to go it would be at their own expense.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think that Congress has any right to tax the Treasury or expend the money of the people in sending a committee to California or Texas or to any other point to attend a funeral of one of its deceased members.

It is a wholly unnecessary work in the way of attesting respect to the memory of a deceased member, and is certainly, at least in recent years, a very expensive one.

Now, as to the other proposition contained in the bill, that no public building shall be draped in mourning except by the order of the President. I have ascertained since the action of the committee upon this bill that the only authority now existing for that action is supposed to emanate from the President. It is a practice that has grown up gradually, and is one I think that exhibits very questionable taste. I have seen with regret the public buildings in the city of Washington draped in a manner that was altogether out of taste and which seemed to me wholly unnecessary as a mark of respect. Besides it is no inconsiderable item of cost, for I have been informed by some one who knows the expense that the cost of draping the Capitol varies from one thousand to twelve hundred dollars each time when it is done; and I think it manifest that it could be done much more inexpensively and in decidedly better taste.

When the President has heretofore directed the draping of the public buildings of the city, that of course was not applicable to the Capitol; but it has been recognized as a custom on the part of the officers in charge of the Capitol, and they have followed the precedent and draped the building. Now, if it be a fact that the President has heretofore ordered these things it is clear that there is no law authorizing it. It is a mere assumption or custom that the Executive has fallen into. If this is enacted into law the responsibility is upon him, and then perhaps it would be done in better taste, if done at all, than at present.

It may be that it would be well to amend that part of the bill, and if it meets the favor of the House I will offer an amendment or addition to the bill in the following words:

And shall specify the manner and extent of the same.

Now, if any gentleman desires to be heard I will be glad to yield to him.

Mr. HAMMOND. I wish to be heard for a few moments.

Mr. OATES. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND].

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, I did not care to occupy the floor in my own right to oppose the bill. There are some things in it that ought to be passed and some things that ought not to be passed by this House. I had told the gentleman from Alabama this morning that so far as draping the public buildings was concerned he was not changing the law at all by this bill, for they are only draped now by order of the President.

I am in favor of passing the bill, if passed at all, to read in this way and this way only:

That from and after the approval of this act no public building of the United States shall be draped in mourning.

I think the draping of public buildings is useless and very extravagant. But I would not be willing to have the balance of the bill passed without expressing my opposition to it. I think it altogether probable that it would be better to prohibit the sending out of committees to bury Congressmen at home. But it would be certainly a very strange thing for Congress to prohibit a committee of this body carrying to his home or to the home of his family a dead Congressman in order to save the railroad expenses of that committee.

Many men in Congress are poor. Their families are dependent upon them. If in this inclement climate disease overtakes them and they die what could we do but send a committee home with the remains and deliver the dead body at the burial place to the wife and children? And shall we with a corpse lying before us go around begging volunteers to put their hands in their pockets and carry dead men home, paying them the decent regard that ought to be paid? It seems to me that would be highly improper.

If we are going to pass anything upon the subject of attending the funerals of dead members the bill should be amended by striking out the word "or," at the end of line 7, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "except for;" so that it would read, there should be no such expense—

In attending the funeral except for accompanying the remains of any deceased person outside the District of Columbia.

It ought certainly to go no further than that. My own opinion is it is best to leave it just where it is. I know there is a good deal of newspaper talk about improper conduct on funeral occasions and by funeral committees. I have never been with one, and therefore can not speak with knowledge, but I know the men who do go with them; I know they are gentlemen of high tone. I know they are gentlemen who would not misbehave themselves on any occasion, and I think most of the stuff which is published on such subjects consists simply of lies. I do not believe we should yield to any such comment and place ourselves in the awkward position of declaring when any member of Congress dies we can get his body home only by taking it on the express train, and not even then until his family can make the arrangements for paying the expenses of transportation in advance.

That is all I desire to say about it. I propose, if opportunity is allowed, to offer that amendment, to strike out "or," at the end of the seventh line, and insert the words "except for," which will reduce it to the expense of having a committee simply to attend the remains home. I should prefer the whole stricken out except the matter of prohibiting the draping of public buildings.

Mr. OATES. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I took occasion at the first session of the present Congress to submit some very pertinent and sensible remarks on the subject of Congressional funerals. [Laughter]. These remarks seem to have made a deep impression on the country [renewed laughter], so much so that I was warmly indorsed and returned to the Fiftieth Congress without opposition, just to illustrate how profoundly my constituents were impressed with my speech on that occasion, and how fully they appreciate their Representative. I will repeat what one of my old friends said to me on my return home last summer. He met me, and after congratulating me on the very brilliant record I had made in Congress, [laughter] he said: "And John, old fellow, we read your speech about the Congressional funerals, and the people all indorse what you said. You are exactly right; and you tell them fellows up there in Congress that if you die while you are there, you do not ask them to bury you. You have plenty of friends down here who will take pleasure in doing that for you." [Great laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I must differ with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND]. He says a great many of the Congressmen are poor men, and that he does not want to see the spectacle of people going around begging some one to take the remains of a poor Congressman home. But, Mr. Speaker, I will remind the gentleman and this House of the fact that poverty in this country is not confined to members of Congress [laughter], and of the further fact that the money that is spent on these Congressional funeral expeditions is much of it wrung by taxation from the poor indeed, and when we are legislating we should remember them as well as ourselves.

I would like for the gentleman to explain to me upon what principle he would justify our taxing the people of the country to bury a Congressman at the public expense, even though he is poor, when other poor people have to take their chances for a decent burial. I have no fear, Mr. Speaker, that any Congressman who comes here and conducts himself properly will be neglected or fail of a decent burial, or lack for friends who will be willing to see him properly put away. We give the families of dead Congressmen their salaries for the balance of their terms, and out of this there is no danger but that they will get a decent burial. I will guarantee if this bill passes that all the dead Congressmen will still be decently buried.

Mr. OATES. The argument of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] seems to proceed on the idea that there may be cases of the death of some Senator or Representative so poor that there will be nothing with which to pay the expenses of a transportation of his remains to his home if his family sees proper to take him there. It assumes, too, that he will have no friends here who are willing to accompany his remains.

Why, Mr. Speaker, the friends who are willing to accompany the remains of the deceased member, even at their own expense, are such friends as do really feel deeply their loss and sincerely mourn. But the mere formal Congressional committee that is appointed, many times consisting in part at least of members who were scarcely acquainted with the deceased—not to say friends, but scarcely acquainted—it reminds me of the Chinese system of employing mourners, where they have regular professionals with their uniforms prepared, always ready to go, whenever the money is forthcoming for them, to make a manifestation of their grief.

It is not a mark of respect at all. It is not an evidence of sincere sorrow or mourning. But for my respect for the Congress of the United States I could mention cases which would certainly shock the country, of misconduct upon the part of grave Senators as well as members of this House who have accompanied the remains of deceased members, either going or returning; but I will not mention them.

Again, sir, the custom of appointing these committees is not only unnecessary as a mark of respect and quite expensive, but it is also productive of great inconvenience. During this present session, if I am correctly informed, a committee was appointed to attend the funeral of one of our members (a gentleman for whom I had great respect and whose memory I revere), and the members of that committee, on account of the great distance, the inclemency of the weather, and the inconvenience of leaving their business here, actually declined to go. As we all know it is often a great inconvenience to members to be drawn away from the duties which their constituents have sent them here to perform, to take part in the idle ceremony of attending the burial of some deceased colleague.

Mr. HAMMOND. I thought the gentleman said they would go anyhow, whether their expenses were paid or not.

Mr. OATES. If any member of this House has not friends who have enough respect for him to attend his funeral, I am not in favor of paying men to go at the public expense as a mere formality.

Mr. HAMMOND. I thought the gentleman was making an argument to show that members ought to stay here and attend to their business, instead of attending the funerals of their deceased colleagues.

Mr. OATES. I am opposed to sending out such committees as a mere formality. If any deceased member has friends who desire to attend his funeral they can doubtless be excused from the House while doing so.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield to me for one minute?

Mr. OATES. I will yield to the gentleman a minute.

Mr. SPRINGER. Lest there should be some misunderstanding with regard to this bill, I desire to state that it does not interfere in the least with the custom which now prevails of paying funeral expenses, but only prohibits the payment of the expenses of any Senator or Representative who may accompany the remains.

Mr. OATES. Or of a committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. Or of a committee; but of course the committee will be composed of members. The effect of this bill will simply be that hereafter the remains of deceased members will be taken to their destination by the Sergeant-at-Arms or one of his deputies, and delivered to the family.

Mr. HAMMOND. How does the gentleman find that out?

Mr. SPRINGER. It is provided in the bill "that from and after the approval of this act no money shall be drawn from the Treasury of the United States or be paid out of the contingent fund of either House of Congress to defray the expenses hereafter incurred of any Senator or Representative, or any committee of such, in attending to the funeral," &c.

Mr. HAMMOND. But how do you find that the Sergeant-at-Arms will take the remains home?

Mr. SPRINGER. The custom has heretofore prevailed of sending the remains of deceased members home by the Sergeant-at-Arms, or his deputy, and there is nothing here to prohibit the payment of the expenses of doing that.

Mr. LORE. Under what authority has it been done?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not know whether there is a law for it or not, but the custom has prevailed, and this bill does not interfere with that. All the expenses of the funeral will be paid under this bill the same as now.

Mr. HAMMOND. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] believe that is true?

Mr. OATES. I do not. [Laughter.] I move the previous question on the bill and pending amendment.

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. Is it necessary before any other amendment can be proposed to this bill to vote that down?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is, unless the gentleman from Alabama consents to accept the amendment.

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. OATES. I understood that the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] was pending.

Mr. HAMMOND. I offered two. If those amendments are considered as pending, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the amendments will be read and considered as pending.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "or," where it last occurs in line 7, and insert "except for."

Amend by striking out all after the word "no," in line 3, down to and including the word "any," in line 9, and insert "shall," before the word "be," in line 10; so that the bill will read: "That from and after the approval of this act no public building of the United States shall be draped in mourning," &c.

Mr. OATES. I now insist on my motion for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is first on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "States," in line 11, insert "who shall specify the manner and extent of the same," so as to read: "nor shall any public building of the United States be draped in mourning unless the same be ordered by the President of the United States, who shall specify the manner and extent of the same."

The amendment was agreed to; there being—ayes 76, noes 45.

The question was next taken on the following amendment, offered by Mr. HAMMOND:

Strike out the word "or," at the end of line 7, and insert "except for;" so as to read: "or any committee of such in attending the funeral except for accompanying the remains of any deceased person outside of the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to; there being—ayes 100, noes 31.

The next question was upon the following amendment, offered by Mr. HAMMOND:

Strike out all after the word "no," in line 3, down to and including the word "any," in line 9, and insert before "be," in line 10, the word "shall;" so as to read: "that from and after the approval of this act no public building of the United States shall be draped in mourning," &c.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 109, noes 19.

Mr. OATES. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. OATES and Mr. HAMMOND were appointed.

Before the count by tellers was concluded,

Mr. OATES said: I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HAMMOND. I move to lay the bill and amendments on the table; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia moves to lay the bill and amendments on the table.

Mr. HAMMOND. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. OATES. I renew it.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, there being ayes 26, noes 122—less than one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HAMMOND, there were—ayes 102, noes 46.

Mr. COWLES. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HAMMOND and Mr. COWLES were appointed.

Mr. OATES (during the count by tellers). Mr. Speaker, there is on the part of the House such a decided manifestation of opposition to this bill that I am satisfied the House does not wish any legislation on this subject. I therefore appeal to my friend from North Carolina to withdraw his point.

Mr. COWLES. I decline to do so.

The count having been concluded, the tellers reported—ayes 119, noes 46.

So the motion of Mr. HAMMOND to lay the bill and amendments on the table was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 10203) to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to make a special distribution of seed in the drought-stricken counties of Texas.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. 1368) for the relief of Richard H. & James Porter; and

A bill (S. 2477) making an appropriation for the establishment and erection of a military post in the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado.

CLERKS TO SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. OATES. I am directed by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 10078) to authorize the appointment and prescribe the compensation of clerks to Senators and Representatives who are not chairmen of committees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. OATES. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be now considered in the House.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the approval of this act each Senator and Representative in Congress, who is not the chairman of a committee which is allowed a clerk, shall, during the sessions of Congress only, be entitled to a clerk, to be appointed and paid as follows, to wit: Such Senator may, at the beginning of each session, as soon as the committees are announced, nominate to the Secretary of the Senate such person as he desires to be his clerk, and thereupon said Secretary shall enroll the name of such nominee in a record-book to be kept for that purpose, showing the full name of such person and the State or place from which appointed, with the date of the same. Such Representative may, at the beginning of each session of Congress, as soon as the committees are announced, nominate to the Clerk of the House of Representatives such person as he desires to be his clerk, and thereupon the Clerk of the said House shall enroll the name of such nominee in a record-book to be kept for that purpose, showing the full name of such person and State or place from whence appointed, with date of same.

SEC. 2. That the aforesaid clerks shall be paid as other employés of the Senate and House of Representatives, but only for the time they are actually present and in the service of the Senator or Representative by whom they are respectively nominated, each at the rate of $100 per month; and such clerks shall be removable at the pleasure of the Senator or Representative at whose instance the appointment is made.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the hour for the consideration of bills under the special order has expired.

Mr. OATES. In order that every gentleman may have an opportunity of informing himself on this subject, I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The report is as follows:

Mr. OATES, from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, submitted the following report, to accompany bill H. R. 10078:

The Committee on the Revision of the Laws, to whom was referred House bill 10078, having had the same under consideration, report the same back to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill gives a clerk to each Senator and Representative who is not the chairman of a committee, entitled to a clerk. At the beginning of each Congress and as soon as the committees are announced, each such Senator and Representative is required to name his clerk. Those named by the Senators are to be enrolled by the Secretary of the Senate, and those named by the Representatives are to be enrolled by the Clerk of the House. They are to be paid as other employés of the two Houses are paid, and at the rate of $100 per month during the time they are actually present and serving. It is believed by your committee that the passage of the bill is necessary to relieve members of Congress from a drudgery which prevents them from devoting a good portion of their time to the study and preparation of such measures as they have to act and vote upon. How often are members of this House called to vote upon the most vitally important measures without ever having had time to read the bill or the report of the committee thereon, much less an opportunity to study and compare such measure with former legislation touching the same subject.

One of the reasons which influenced the committee was the adoption of a resolution by the Senate some years ago, allowing each Senator (not chairman of a committee) a clerk. At each session of Congress since then the Senate has put an amendment on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill providing for paying those clerks, and the House, after a fruitless resistance, has each time been forced to assent thereto. Senators' clerks now receive the same per diem compensation as clerks to committees. The bill herewith reported proposes to establish uniformity and equality as between Senators and Representatives as to clerks and their compensation.

It is believed that honest and capable young men can be found in every Congressional district throughout the Union who would gladly accept the position of clerk to his Senator or Representative for $100 per month during the sessions of Congress, which is the compensation proposed by this bill.

With six great Departments, comprising more than a score of bureaus, and the large amount of business which requires of members a daily visit to some of them, the large number of Government publications, the seed of various kinds which it is the right of the people to have distributed among them, pensions and patents to be looked after, which, with the answering of the letters received by any member of Congress, will require the whole time of any one man, and he who does it properly will find all of his time fully occupied in its performance. A Senator or Representative who devotes his time to these duties will have none to spare for legislation. One of these must be neglected, or the Senator or Member must employ a clerk at his own expense, and this is a hardship in many cases.

Many of the Representatives and some of the Senators, especially from the Southern States, are poor men, and cannot maintain a family in Washington on a less salary than that now allowed by law. It is not to the interest of the public at large that poor men of a high order of talent should be driven out or kept out of Congress through the meagerness of the salary, and thus the business of legislation be entrusted to the millionaires and men of wealth. Such a course would be as fallacious as very high salaries would be inconsistent with the genius of our Government. The bill under consideration does not in any sense increase the salaries of members, for under its provisions they have nothing to do with the payment of the clerks, nor can the latter receive any pay except for time employed and service actually rendered.

Your committee are of opinion that the services of a clerk to a member of Congress would be more valuable to that member's constituents than to the member himself. Would not the people of any Congressional district prefer to present methods that there should be paid out of the United States Treasury $100 per month while Congress is in session, to some bright, active young man, to aid their Representative by giving prompt attention to their business with the several Departments, and promptly answering their letters, &c., thereby securing to the member time enough to read and study closely the various important matters of legislation before Congress? Twenty-five years ago there was no necessity for such assistance, but the growth of the country in population and business has been very great, and with it the Departments and bureaus of the Government have, not always wisely perhaps, correspondingly multiplied. Then three thousand bills was a large aggregate of the number introduced during a Congress, while now more than four times that number are printed and referred to appropriate committees during each Congress.

Under this bill clerks to Senators would receive but $100 per month, whereas at present they receive $180, being the same as received by committee clerks, and with much less labor to perform. This reduction in the amount paid Senators' clerks would, upon an average per session, reduce the expenditure about $15,000. The total expenditure under this bill would amount in the aggregate to about $240,000 per Congress of two sessions, or an average of $120,000 per annum, which at the most would not exceed the present outlay in that direction more than $100,000 per annum. It is also believed that the passage of this bill would greatly diminish the competition for chairmanships of committees. A large number of the standing committees of the House (at least twelve) could well be dispensed with, and the present necessity for additional committee rooms in the Capitol would thereby be averted. A majority of your committee are, therefore, of opinion that the bill ought to pass. It is deemed just to state that this report is not the unanimous voice of the committee.

B. S. JAMES.

Mr. CRISP. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1042) to pay B. S. James for transporting the United States mails, and that the bill be now considered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay B. S. James, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum, not exceeding $408.03, as shall, upon reference to the proper accounting officers, be found justly due and payable to him for transportation of the mails over route numbered 5610 in the years 1869 and 1870.

Mr. CRISP. This bill, which has been passed by the Senate, has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Claims of this House. In the report of that committee the facts of the case are thus stated:

In 1866 B. S. James became the lessee of the Laurens Railroad Company, in the State of South Carolina. In 1867 the Laurens Railroad Company (James being lessee) contracted, by Joseph Crews, its superintendent, to carry the United States mails on route 5610 for $1,200 per annum. In 1869, Crews having been discharged from the superintendency, a controversy arose in regard to the rolling-stock of the road, which resulted in litigation, and the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, by a letter dated August 19, 1869, informed the claimant that Joseph Crews having written to the Department "that H. R. Scott was the owner of the rolling-stock of the Laurens Railroad, and that he, Crews, was his agent, the account of the railroad company can not be settled until this difference is adjusted between you."

The decision of the court was in favor of claimant, but in the mean time the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the postal year in which the service was rendered was covered into the Treasury. The statement of the account furnished by the Post-Office Department shows a balance due for mail service on that route to September 30, 1870, to the amount of $408.03.

There is no question that the amount claimed is justly due and ought to be paid. I hope there will be no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and the House proceeded to consider the same.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PLEURO-PNEUMONIA.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the special order, being what is known as the pleuro-pneumonia bill. Pending that motion, I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the pending section and all amendments thereto, be limited to one minute.

Mr. HAMMOND. I move to amend that by making it six minutes.

Mr. HATCH. I accept the amendment.

The motion, as amended, was agreed to.

The question recurred on the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 4.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. BLOUNT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7208) to amend an act entitled "An act for the establishment of a bureau of animal industry, and for other purposes," approved May 29, 1884, and, by order of the House, all general debate is limited to six minutes.

Mr. HAMMOND. I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert "not exceeding forty persons" after the word "force," in line 22.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding this bill purports to strike out a whole section and insert half a page in lieu of it, the only words stricken out in the old section are "not exceeding twenty." In other words, in two years, that is, since the act of 1884, it has been found the limit of twenty persons was too small. I think, unless some strong reason is given to the contrary, it would be well for us not to increase that limit more than double.

I have heard it said this cannot be done without giving this officer unlimited power to employ just as many people as he pleases. It seems to me that is an inexpedient thing to do, if not a dangerous thing to do. It is an unusual thing to do. If two years ago Congress thought twenty persons could do this duty, certainly forty can do it now, unless some strong reason can be given to the contrary.

I have nothing further to say, and will yield the floor to the chairman of the committee, who can state what reason exists for saying that forty persons are not enough.

Mr. HATCH. I can add but little to what I have stated heretofore in this connection. The gentleman from Georgia and the committee will bear in mind when this subject was passed, in the Forty-eighth Congress, it was to some extent an experiment. It was new to many members of Congress in both branches, and the disposition was to place this limit at twenty persons to be employed at any one time in execution of the law by the Commissioner. Experience has demonstrated beyond question an addition from twenty to forty would for a short time be inadequate to carry out the provisions of the bill.

I am aware this unlimited power of appointment is an objection to a large number of gentlemen on the floor. I have stated frankly it is an extraordinary power, but I do not believe any law can be effective in carrying out the purpose of the large class of people who demand this legislation without that power. It is absolutely as necessary to rely on the discretion, wisdom, and integrity of the officer having the execution of this law as to what number is sufficient to accomplish the end in view, which is to prevent the transportation of diseased or infected animals from one State to another, as it is to protect the export trade in meat.

The question recurred on Mr. HAMMOND'S amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 45.

Mr. HAMMOND. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. HAMMOND and Mr. HATCH.

Mr. HAMMOND. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. MCMILLIN and Mr. STORM renewed it.

Mr. HAMMOND. I withdraw the point of no quorum in deference to members who wish another number voted on. I hope no one will further insist on the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum is withdrawn. The tellers report—ayes 50, noes 90, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I move to make the number "sixty" instead of "forty."

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 26.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

To add as a further proviso:

"And provided further, That the said experts and agents to be appointed by the Commissioner of Agriculture for the purpose of collecting information under the provisions of this section shall be selected by and appointed upon competitive examination in the same manner provided for the selection of candidates for the classified civil service under the act of January 16, 1883; and the Civil Service Commissioners shall provide a special and technical examination for such candidates for appointment under this section, and shall keep a special register of candidates who pass such examination; and no person shall be appointed as such experts or agents under the provisions of this section except upon such competitive examination."

Mr. CUTCHEON. Is there any time allowed for debate?

Mr. HATCH. Debate has been limited on the bill and amendments, and that time has expired.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 63.

Mr. CUTCHEON. No quorum has voted.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration a bill (H. R. 7208) to amend an act entitled "An act for the establishment of a bureau of animal industry, and for other purposes," approved May 29, 1884, and had come to no resolution thereon.

PAULINE HOLMAN.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 11029) granting a pension to Pauline Holman; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

And then, on motion of Mr. HATCH (at 4 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. T. M. BROWNE: Petition of B. H. Davis and 50 others, citizens of Henry County, Indiana, for legislation to prevent the spread of disease among cattle—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BURNES: Petition of certain citizens of Marysville, Mo., in favor of Senate bill 1626—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. CLARDY: Petition of John Frankman, of Saint Louis, Mo., for a pension on account of disabilities incurred in the Mexican war—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DORSEY: Resolution of the Nebraska State Board of Agriculture, in favor of the Miller bill—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolutions of the same favoring the experiment-station bill—to the same committee.

By Mr. EDEN: Petition of Yates Post, Grand Army of the Republic, and others, at Effingham, Ill., in favor of paying pensions to pensioners on account of wounds or disease contracted in the service, from the date of disability—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ERMENTROUT: Memorial of J. W. Gadsen and others, of Pennsylvania, asking action on the part of the Government to stamp out pleuro-pneumonia—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. FULLER: Resolution of the Iowa State Horticultural Society favoring the Hatch experiment-station bill—to the same committee.

By Mr. HAYNES: Papers to accompany bill to increase the pension of Albert G. Fifield—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HEARD: Thirty-three petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Missouri, favoring the bill to pay the expense of rent, light, and fuel, and grant other relief to all postmasters of the third and fourth class—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of John Barron and other citizens of Howard County, Maryland, in favor of the pleuro-pneumonia bill—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HERMANN: Petition of citizens of Clackamas County, Oregon, for the passage of the pension bill in favor of all disabled soldiers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. J. T. JOHNSTON: Petition of W. H. Armstrong and others; of John G. Johnson and others; and of W. N. Welch and other citizens of Indiana, asking for the passage of the Miller pleuro-pneumonia bill—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. MARKHAM: Petition of Captain John and other Indians, concerning the condition of the Mission Indians, and the protection of lands held by them—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. MILLARD: Resolution of Henry Williams Post, No. 150, Grand Army of the Republic, of New York, in favor of the Edmunds-Tucker bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CHARLES O'NEILL: Resolutions of the Philadelphia Drug

Exchange, favoring the repeal of all internal taxes, and if the entire abolition of the tax on alcohol can not be accomplished, then recommending the discontinuance of the dealers' licenses for those in the drug business—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial of Dr. J. W. Gadsen, of Philadelphia, and others, favoring the passage of the bill to extirpate pleuro-pneumonia and other contagious diseases among cattle—to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 3, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the credentials of W. C. WHITTHORNE, chosen by the Legislature of Tennessee a Senator from that State to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Howell E. Jackson, ending March 4, 1887; which were read, as follows:

THE STATE OF TENNESSEE.—ROBERT L. TAYLOR, Governor.

To all who shall see these presents, greeting:

Know ye, that whereas the election of W. C. WHITTHORNE, a Senator in the Congress of the United States, has been properly and legally certified by the speakers of the senate and house of representatives of the Forty-fifth General Assembly of Tennessee, and whereas it is made the duty of the governor under the laws to commission such Senator:

Now, therefore, I, Robert L. Taylor, governor of the State of Tennessee, by virtue of the power and authority in me vested, do commission W. C. WHITTHORNE (of the county of Maury) to fill said office of United States Senator from Tennessee, for the unexpired term ending March 4, 1887, agreeably to the constitution and laws, during the term, with all the powers, privileges, and emoluments thereunto appertaining by law.

In testimony whereof I, Robert L. Taylor, governor as aforesaid, have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the State to be affixed, at the department in Nashville, on the 26th day of January, A. D. 1887.

[SEAL.] ROBT. L. TAYLOR.

By the governor:

JOHN ALLISON, Secretary of state.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, Nashville, Tenn., January, 26, 1887.

To the honorable President of the Senate of the United States:

In obedience to the laws, I, Robert L. Taylor, governor of the State of Tennessee, do hereby certify, that the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, chosen on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November, 1886, as prescribed in the constitution and laws of that State, assembled on the first Monday of January, 1887, at the capitol in the city of Nashville, in pursuance of the requirements of the constitution and laws aforesaid, and that on Tuesday, the 18th day of January, 1887, that being the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization thereof, the senate and house of representatives composing the said General Assembly, which is the Forty-fifth General Assembly of Tennessee, each in its respective chamber, openly, by viva voce vote, there being present and voting a constitutional quorum in each house, named one person for Senator in the Congress of the United States from said State of Tennessee, for the unexpired term commencing the 4th day of March, 1881, and ending the 4th day of March, 1887, to which Howell E. Jackson, resigned, was elected. Each of said houses gave a majority of votes to W. C. WHITTHORNE on said day, and the fact was entered on the respective journals of said houses; at 12 o'clock meridian of the day following the members of the two houses convened in the hall of the house of representatives in joint assembly, and the journals of each house were then read, and it appeared that W. C. WHITTHORNE, an inhabitant and citizen of the State of Tennessee, having received a majority of all the votes of the two houses of the said General Assembly, a majority of all the members elected to both houses being present and voting, was declared duly elected a Senator to represent the State of Tennesses in the Congress of the United States for said unexpired term.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the great seal of the State of Tennessee, to be affixed at the department in Nashville, this 26th day of January, A. D. 1887.

[SEAL.] ROBERT L. TAYLOR, Governor.
JOHN ALLISON, Secretary of state.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY, STATE OF TENNESSEE,
January 26, 1887.

The undersigned, speakers of the senate and house of representatives of the Forty-fifth General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, do hereby certify that at a joint convention of the two houses of the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, held in the hall of the house of representatives, in pursuance of law, on the 19th day of January, 1887, W. C. WHITTHORNE (more than thirty years of age), of the county of Maury, a citizen and inhabitant of the State of Tennessee, and more than nine years an inhabitant of the United States, was duly and constitutionally elected to a seat in the Senate of the United States for the State of Tennessee for the unexpired term ending March 4, 1887.

B. W. EWING,
Speaker of the senate.
W. L. CLAPP,
Speaker of the house of representatives.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the oath be administered to the Senator-elect, and in making that motion I desire to say that these credentials seem to me to be in all respects perfect and regular; but I trust the paper purporting to be the commission from the governor of the State will be withdrawn by the Senator, because clearly it would transcend the power of the executive of the State to claim that the commission comes from him. The appointment is clearly the act of the State Legislature under the constitution, and I trust the Senator will withdraw the commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials will be placed on file. The Senator from Tennessee will please come forward and take the oath of office precribed by law.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, escorted by Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, advanced to the desk of the President pro tempore, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to him.

CREDENTIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the credentials of PHILETUS SAWYER, chosen by the Legislature of Wisconsin a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1887; which were read, and ordered to be placed on file.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in reply to a resblution of January 13, 1887, a report from the Light-House Board as to the re-establishment of lights to mark the channel between the North and South Hero Islands, Lake Champlain; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, stating, in reply to a resolution of January 31, 1887, that the Department has no information as to the national banks loaning money, &c., and requiring payment in gold coin only; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, in regard to protecting, in the bill transferring the Signal Corps to the Department of Agriculture and Labor, the rights of enlisted men as to retirement on account of old age and long service; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of December 13, 1886, a report of the Chief of Engineers in regard to the threatened cut-off in the Willamette River, at Corvallis, Oreg.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, relative to additional legislation for the improvement of the Des Moines Rapids Canal; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of January 27, 1887, a report of the Adjutant-General as to claims filed under the act of June 3, 1884, to provide for the muster and pay of certain officers and enlisted men; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting papers relative to contracts for the education of the Apaches at Saint Augustine, Fla.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HALE presented the petition of G. E. King and others, enlisted men of the Signal Corps, praying that that branch of the service be taken from the Army and transferred to a civilian department; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FARWELL presented the petition of Morrison, Plummer & Co. and other citizens of Illinois, praying for a repeal of the internal-revenue laws; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BLAIR. I present a large number of petitions from the States of Illinois, Ohio, Tennessee, Virginia, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Kansas, Iowa, Wisconsin, Missouri, Minnesota, New York, and the District of Columbia, which have been prepared under the supervision of the National Women's Christian Temperance Union in the department of Sabbath observance, Mrs. Josephine C. I move the reference of these petitions where similar petitions have gone—to the Committee on Education and Labor; and I wish to add that they have been examined, and the total number of memorialists is 14,948, of whom one-third are designated to indicate that they are the names of legal voters and comprise all classes and conditions of society.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a petition of 535 residents of Washington, D. C., living on M, N, Fifteenth, and Eighteenth streets northwest, and a petition of 161 residents of Washington, D. C., living on T street northwest, praying for the passage of the bill for the incorporation of the Washington Cable Railway Company; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of citizens of Pottsville, Pa., and a petition of citizens of Lancaster, Pa., praying for the repeal of the internal-revenue taxes; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of George Gross, M. D., of Washington, D. C., praying for the creation and temporary support of a botanic hospital at Washington; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. INGALLS presented a petition of ex-soldiers, citizens of Indiana, praying for the removal of the limitation in the act granting arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB presented a petition of 1,113 residents of Tenth street northwest, Eleventh street northwest, Twelfth street northwest, and Thirteenth street northwest, Washington, D. C., in favor of the passage of the Washington cable railway bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of 282 citizens of Washington, D. C., praying for the passage of the cable railway bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3102) for the relief of H. C. Rogers, late deputy commissioner of internal-revenue, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

COMPILATION OF VETO MESSAGES.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution providing for the printing of the compilation of the veto messages of the Presidents of the United States, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the compilation of the veto messages of the Presidents of the United States, made in obedience to a resolution passed by the Senate on the 24th of July, 1886, be printed, and that 3,000 additional copies be printed, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had receded from the disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8869) granting a pension to Mrs. Henrietta M. Drum Hunt.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (S. 1042) to pay B. S. James for transporting the United States mails.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 3263) granting a pension to William Bradford; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a bill (S. 3264) for the purchase of John Ericsson's Destroyer, and ten enlarged steel vessels of the same type, for defending the harbors of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 100) appropriating money to pay the hire of a hall for the use of the meeting of the Department of Superintendence of the National Educational Association; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. INGALLS (by request) introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 101) to protect the interests of the United States in the extension of Massachusetts avenue through the grounds of the new Naval Observatory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. PLATT submitted four amendments intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BERRY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the case of Electa W. Jacobs, and that the claimant have leave to withdraw her papers from the files of the Senate.

SANDUSKY HARBOR IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to communicate to the Senate any report of an officer of the Engineer Corps or other information in the Department in respect to the excavation of a straight channel in the harbor of Sandusky, Ohio, on Lake Erie.

CORRECTION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. HAMPTON. I call attention to a mistake in the Calendar with a view of having it corrected. It is Order of Business 1984, being the bill (S. 97) for the relief of Basil Moreland. I had the honor of making that report. It is put down on the Calendar as coming from the Committee on Military Affairs, while the report was made from the Committee on Indian Affairs. I wish the correction made before the bill is reached on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made.

REJECTION OF PENSION CLAIMS.

Mr. INGALLS. If there be no further morning business, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1902.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish my colleague would withhold that for a moment until I can bring up the resolution I offered a few days ago—a resolution of inquiry addressed to the Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] yield to his colleague [Mr. PLUMB]?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] has a right to make the motion. The resolution heretofore submitted by him will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. PLUMB January 28, 1887, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate whether there is any rule of his Department applied in the Pension Bureau, or any rule of said bureau existing and applied with his knowledge or consent, whereby any applicant for pension is denied a hearing in said bureau concerning his claim by reason of said applicant having petitioned Congress for relief.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment pending, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. COCKRELL, as follows:

At the end of the resolution add:

"And if there be no such rule, then to inform the Senate who wrote the letter of January 27, 1887, touching the pension claim of David C. Canfield, and when such employé was appointed in the Pension Office."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. It is evidently a suggestion which comes from the Department, and it would be perhaps unjust to an individual to have him berated before the public in response to the resolution. All I want is simply to ascertain whether such an order exists, and I think on the whole the Senate can not doubt the propriety or the importance of ascertaining whether an order such as would seem to be indicated by the letter is in existence.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator who offered the amendment is not in his seat.

Mr. PLUMB. I thought the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] offered it. He is here.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] offered it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] offered the amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. Excuse me, I thought it was offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. Then, in view of the absence of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] from the Chamber I ask that the resolution lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

ARREARS OF PENSION.

Mr. INGALLS. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1902, being a resolution introduced by him to discharge the Committee on Pensions from the further consideration of the bill (S. 35) to remove the limitation in the payment of arrears of pension. The resolution will be read.

The resolution submitted by Mr. INGALLS December 21, 1886, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 35, to remove the limitation in the payment of arrears of pension.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. INGALLS. On the adoption of the resolution I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. If the resolution is not long I should like to have it read again. I was not paying attention.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution.

Mr. INGALLS. I will state briefly that the bill (S. 35) to remove the limitation in the act of 1879 granting arrears of pension, was introduced in December, 1885, and referred to the Committee on Pensions, where it has since rested without action. My purpose is, as the committee have failed to act, to discharge them, in order that the bill may be brought before the Senate for its action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the resolution.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STANFORD (when his name was called). I am paired.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS (after having voted in the negative). I rise to inquire if the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] has recorded his vote on this question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] has not voted.

Mr. HARRIS. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], and I am satisfied that if he were present he would vote "yea." I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. COKE. My colleague [Mr. MAXEY] is absent, and is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], who voted, I think, just now by mistake. My colleague would vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. DAWES (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote; I voted inadvertently.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired generally with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. I transfer the pair with the Senator from Kentucky to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], and will vote on this proposition. I vote "yea."

Mr. HAMPTON. I was requested by the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT] to announce his pair during his absence with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. TELLER. If my colleague [Mr. BOWEN] were here he would vote "yea." He is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY].

Mr. SEWELL (after having voted in the affirmative). I ask if my colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON] is recorded as voting?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The colleague of the Senator from New Jersey has not voted.

Mr. SEWELL. I then withdraw my vote.

Mr. VANCE. My colleague [Mr. RANSOM] is absent from the city on account of sickness in his family and is paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. ALLISON. I voted for the resolution under the impression that I was paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] only on political questions. If the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] thinks this is such a question as I should be paired upon with his colleague I withdraw my vote.

Mr. VANCE. I can not state distinctly, but I think the vote will show a division according to parties.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I withdraw my vote, so that there shall be no mistake about it. I should, of course, vote for the resolution.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Blair,	Farwell,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Cameron,	Frye,	Miller,	Spooner,
Cheney,	Hale,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Teller,
Conger,	Hoar,	Palmer,	Van Wyck,
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Plumb,	Williams,
Dolph,	McMillan,	Sabin,	Wilson of Iowa.
Evarts,	Mahone,	Sewell,

NAYS—26.

Beck,	George,	McPherson,	Vance,
Berry,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Vest,
Butler,	Gray,	Payne,	Walthall,
Call,	Hampton,	Platt,	Whitthorne,
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Pugh,	Wilson of Md.
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Saulsbury,
Eustis,	Kenna,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—23.

Aldrich,	Chace,	Harris,	Morrill,
Allison,	Colquitt,	Harrison,	Ransom,
Blackburn,	Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Stanford,
Brown,	Fair,	Maxey,	Voorhees.
Camden,	Gibson,	Mitchell of Pa.,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So the resolution is agreed to, and the bill is before the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. The vote just taken does not bring the bill before the Senate for present consideration, I suppose.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly not.

Mr. HARRIS. It simply discharged the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It brings the bill before the Senate, but it is subject to objection, like any other measure.

Mr. HARRIS. I rose for the purpose of asking the Senate to consider the resolution which I submitted two or three days ago in respect to the business of the morning hour of the Senate, taking for granted that the vote just taken simply discharged the committee from further consideration; and the bill now properly belongs in the Senate for the disposition of the Senate, as every other bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that it would require a motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. The bill is one of very great consequence, and I do not desire to ask the Senate to vote upon it instanter. I suppose as a parliamentary proposition, the committee having been discharged, the bill will go to the Calendar, having been read the second time, and can be called up on motion. I give notice that at an early day next week, as soon as I can obtain the floor for that purpose, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT GROUNDS.

Mr. SPOONER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 5097) to regulate the use of the grounds of the Washington National Monument, known as Public Reservation No. 3, in the city of Washington, D. C., and request a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. SPOONER, Mr. MORRILL, and Mr. VEST were appointed.

CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE BILLS.

Mr. HARRIS. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution that I referred to a few moments since.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution heretofore submitted by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] will be read.

The resolution submitted by Mr. HARRIS February 1, 1887, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That on and after Monday, the 7th instant, at the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall at any time otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of House bills and joint resolutions favorably reported on the Calendar, and continue such consideration until 2 o'clock, under the provisions of Rule VIII as herein modified, until the Calendar of such bills and resolutions has been completed.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. INGALLS. Under the provisions of Rule VIII, would those bills be subject to individual objection?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that they would be.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that the object and purpose, and, as I think, the unmistakable effect of the resolution will be to change Rule VIII only in this respect: Upon the regular call, House bills and joint resolutions favorably reported upon our Calendar will be called instead of taking the Calendar in its regular order, Senate and House bills, as they appear there.

Mr. INGALLS. And a single objection will put any bill over to the Calendar under Rule IX?

Mr. HARRIS. A single objection, unless when the objection was made a Senator should move to proceed to consider the bill notwithstanding the objection. Every provision of Rule VIII will be in force except the single modification that the Calendar of House bills is in order to the exclusion of others.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask my honorable friend from Tennessee whether, as he understands it, the adoption of this order will prevent any Senator from moving to proceed to the consideration of any particular measure as now?

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Massachusetts will look at the language of the resolution he will see that the right to move to consider any bill, Senate or House, on the Calendar remains just as it is to-day without my resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I so understand it; but I wanted to be sure that we understood it correctly.

Mr. HARRIS. I draughted the resolution with the distinct view of preserving that right to every Senator on the floor, and I do not think the resolution can be susceptible of any other construction than that the right is reserved to every Senator to move to consider anything he wants to have considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

REJECTION OF PENSION CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar is now in order, under the eighth rule.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to take up the resolution which was laid aside a few minutes ago on account of the absence of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution indicated by him. It will be read.

The resolution submitted by Mr. PLUMB, January 28, 1887, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate whether there is any rule of his Department applied in the Pension Bureau, or any rule of said bureau existing and applied with his knowledge or consent, whereby any applicant for pension is denied a hearing in said bureau concerning his claim by reason of said applicant having petitioned Congress for relief.

The question was stated to be on the amendment proposed by Mr. COCKRELL, to add to the resolution:

And if there be no such rule, then to inform the Senate who wrote the letter of January 27, 1887, touching the pension claim of David C. Canfield, and when such employé was appointed in the Pension Office.

Mr. PLUMB. I think the Senator from Missouri will not insist on that amendment. We shall get all that it is material to know in that direction from the Secretary of the Interior, and we might injure some one by dragging his name before the public. The main fact is that the letter appears here signed by the Commissioner of Pensions. The suggestion of the Commissioner that somebody wrote that letter without his instruction or authority would be, I think, rather unusual; at all events it might place a deserving employé (whether he be a Republican or Democrat, I do not care) in a bad situation by placing him before the public in this way. There are a variety of suggestions which might be made in that line. So I think the inquiry proposed by the Senator from Missouri would be entirely improper, as it is not at all germane to the main inquiry.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator from Missouri think it would be proper to ask the Executive Department who wrote all the communications sent to the Senate?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Massachusetts has had too long practical experience and has too much good sense as to business to think that any such question as that is pertinent to this matter. There are thousands and hundreds of thousands of letters written in the Pension Bureau, and as every one who has any knowledge of the business—and the Senator from Massachusetts has thorough knowledge of it—knows, those letters are prepared by the clerks. They are then sent to the chiefs of divisions and they go through this machinery. The officer who signs them scarcely sees them and never pretends to read them. If he were to attempt to read all the letters he signs, he could not do it in twelve hours each day.

There is a large number of employés in the Pension Office; the business of the Pension Office is behind, and I think it is right and proper that individual responsibility should rest on those who make the blunders and the errors there, and I think it would be to the interest of the public service if the Senate should know and the public should know who it is in that office who permits letters to be prepared and go out as they do.

It is immaterial as to who this man is, it is immaterial as to who his chief of division is. I should apprehend without knowing, or, if knowing, without saying anything about it, that possibly this is an old employé who has been in the Pension Office for several years, and it is probable that his chief of division has not been there so long, so that, so far as responsibility is concerned, it is equally divided.

Mr. PLUMB. Would not that be one of those things which the Commissioner himself would say in his own defense, if it were true?

Mr. COCKRELL. If he were to say that in response to the inquiry of the original resolution he would be criticised and denounced upon the Senate floor.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me read a decision which I have which is also signed by the Commissioner, which is in print, and I think will throw a little light on the subject and show that the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri is entirely wide of the mark.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 29, 1886.

[Samuel Schuler, private, Company E, Sixty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers.]
Ruling 167.] [Certificate No. 55815.

STATEMENT OF FACTS.

Pensioned from May 26, 1865, for gunshot wound of neck. Paid to September 4, 1870, when dropped, upon the ground that his disability had ceased. Again pensioned from March 3, 1873, by a special act of Congress, for a hernia of left side, which pension he has since continuously received.

May 18, 1885, asks a reissue of the certificate to include the gunshot wound of neck, which he claims continues to disable him.

DECISION.

This case coming before the Commissioner—

Not before some clerk appointed at discretion—

This case coming before the Commissioner, he decides that the pensioner having appealed to Congress for special legislation in his behalf, thereby waived his right under the general law, and should have pleaded before that body all the causes of action under which he believed himself entitled. That the rights conferred by the special act are the only pensionable rights now existing in his behalf, and the claim for reissue will be rejected accordingly.

JOHN C. BLACK, Commissioner.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the number of that ruling?

Mr. PLUMB. Ruling 167. I think there is enough in that to dispel the idea that some clerk down there has been running away with the responsible head of that bureau. I do not conceive that the Commissioner of Pensions himself will plead the baby act in response to this resolution, nor will he thank the Senator from Missouri for suggesting that he will.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not care whether he thanks me or not so far as that is concerned. I propose to discharge a public duty.

I have a copy of the ruling to which the Senator refers. That is a case that was appealed to the Commissioner, and he made his decision upon it, and it is not one of the letters prepared in the office and sent out and about which the Commissioner knows nothing. I understand precisely the position of the Commissioner and his ruling. I have in my hand another ruling of the Commissioner, ruling 174, February 23, 1886, which reads thus:

IN THE CLAIM OF JAMES ROCKWELL, CORPORAL COMPANY C, THIRTY-SIXTH OHIO VOLUNTEERS.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 23, 1886.

Ruling No. 174.]

Where, upon a declaration for invalid pension, the claimant, being dissatisfied with the action of this bureau, removes the consideration of his title to pension to Congress, and Congress takes cognizance of the matter, the action of Congress will be held final in the premises upon the evidence before it; and in the absence of new, positive and material evidence, this bureau will not reconsider the claim upon its merits under the provisions of the general pension laws after such Congressional action has been had, whether favorable or unfavorable.

JOHN C. BLACK, Commissioner.

There is no question about the position of the rulings of the Department, but here comes in a letter signed by the Commissioner, not a decision, not a ruling, but an answer to a communication, in which some one has inserted that an appeal to Congress forfeited all the rights of the claimant. Now we are asked that that shall be regarded as a ruling. I simply desire in connection with that to know the whole history of how that letter was written.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Missouri, of course, has the advantage of me in his means of communication with the Department; and if he knows all about this matter, perhaps this resolution is not necessary, so far as he is concerned, but I understood him to say that decision 167 which I have read is in precise accord with the letter signed by Mr. Black which is the subject of this resolution. The only difference is that in one case the letter says the man has forfeited his right, and in the other waived his right. For all practical purposes a waiver is a forfeiture and a forfeiture is a waiver.

If this amendment be adopted on the theory of the Senator from Missouri, no man who ever gets a letter from one of these Departments will ever know until he has run the letter down and ascertained its genesis and who wrote it—whether he was a Democrat or a Republican, appointed under the present or the last administration—whether the letter was in response to his call for information or not. It will simply leave the thing open to the wildest guesswork.

What kind of sanctity or authority is there in a communication from a Department if we are to be met by the suggestion that probably it was written by a clerk and that clerk was a Republican and consequently interested in putting this great and glorious and wise and prudent Democratic administration at a disadvantage? I think that the letters which the Senator from Missouri gets from the Commissioner of pensions rejecting cases or certifying to their allowance, giving him notice of the testimony that is required in order to bring a case within the rules of the office, as well as the letters he gets from all the other Departments of the Government, he sends to his constituents in the simple belief that they record the Department view of the case and the actual facts as they are shown by the record. I do not want this great fabric of trust built upon this presumption to be thus rudely interrupted by the suggestion that a few Republican clerks——

Mr. COCKRELL. A few! All Republican clerks.

Mr. PLUMB. All of them?

Mr. COCKRELL. Nearly every one in the Pension Office.

Mr. PLUMB. The case is worse, then, than I supposed it was; because, of course, if they are all Republican clerks, the Department will fall into pitfalls if those who are thus engaged are in combination against the chiefs and the dignity of this administration. I should be glad to have the Senator from Missouri devise some plan whereby they might be substituted by people who might be relied upon to write only what the Commissioner directed them to write.

Mr. TELLER. I do not desire to debate this resolution; but I want to say to the Senator from Missouri that when he stated that all these clerks are Republicans he could not have examined the record very carefully. There never was a time since I have been acquainted with the Interior Department when there was not a very large sprinkling of Democrats in that Department and in the Pension Bureau. I think I can say that there never has been a time in the administration of that office since the war when there was any distinction made between a Democratic soldier and a Republican soldier when his application came up. Between men who had not been soldiers, Democrats and Republicans, there was a distinction made in favor of Republicans who had not been soldiers. But as between Democratic soldiers who were applicants and Republican soldiers who were applicants, I have never known any distinction. I can say certainly that for three years there never was any made. In that way a great many men got in who are Democrats.

The Senator will remember that recently it appeared that out of some eighty-odd who had been put in under the civil-service rules all but five were Democrats.

Mr. COCKRELL. In what positions?

Mr. TELLER. In the Pension Office.

Mr. COCKRELL. In what place?

Mr. TELLER. Clerks who came in under the civil-service rules.

Mr. COCKRELL. Special examiners?

Mr. TELLER. Perhaps they were.

Mr. COCKRELL. They were put in because there had been one hundred and fifty put in before, and every one of them was a Republican. They were simply divided, as ought to have been done.

Mr. TELLER. I beg the Senator's pardon. There is no record of that.

Mr. COCKRELL. I beg the Senator's pardon; that is the record.

Mr. TELLER. The facts will not justify the Senator in his statement. Of the one hundred and fifty special examiners who went in, I have no doubt fully one-half were Democrats.

Mr. COCKRELL. They may have been Democrats, but that fact has only appeared since Cleveland and Hendricks were elected in 1884. They were certainly Republicans up to that time.

Mr. TELLER. They were not. I have not any doubt that there are a great many men in there who were Democrats, who perhaps concealed the fact or said nothing about Democracy, who now say they are Democrats, and some perhaps have changed. But I wanted simply to antagonize the statement that the Pension Office has been a political machine in any shape or manner, unless it has been by the modern practice by which in some way out of eighty people who passed the civil-service examination seventy-five of them are assured to us to be Democrats, and the other five may be because their politics are "unknown."

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, one inference that was made by the Senator from Missouri is not sustained by the facts. The impression he left was that these letters might have been written by clerks without authority from the Department. As a matter of fact no letter leaves the Pension Office composed by a clerk until it has been submitted for revision and suggestion, and alteration, if necessary, by the head of the division. And the statement the Senator from Missouri makes, that this may have been an unauthorized letter from a clerk, is not borne out by the facts, because there is a corps of revisers and examiners in the Pension Office, appointed by the Commissioner, who have charge of the correspondence, and no letter leaves the office without having been subjected to revision; and one of the clerks has stated to me within the last week that a letter which had been composed by him had been altered and amended three times before it went out of the office, and that he was specially directed to insert provisions which had hitherto never been permitted to be in the correspondence of the Pension Office.

Therefore this letter, which was written by a clerk, which has been presented here in evidence by my colleague, left that office under the sanction and authority of the Commissioner; and there is no doubt in the world but that it was in accordance with that order, which was deemed of sufficient importance to print and put on file as one of the methods of transacting business in that Department.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] if he had listened to what I said would have had no occasion to have made the remarks he has just made, because I stated distinctly that these letters were prepared by the clerks and passed through the hands of the chiefs of divisions, and that I apprehended that in this case it would be found that this letter had been prepared by a clerk who had been in the office for years, and had passed into the hands of a chief of division who had not been there so long. We all know how that is.

My good friend from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] spoke about seventy-five or eighty Democrats having been appointed in the Pension Office. I suppose he refers to the one hundred and fifty examiners in the field. I think if he will examine the record he will not find ten Democrats among the whole of the entire selection. I confess that since November, 1884, according to their professions, quite a number, not only of these special examiners but of other employés, may have been Democrats all the time, concealing that fact and voting the Republican ticket; and so it may be in the Pension Office generally. There may be hundreds of the employés, who, since that election, have turned out to be Democrats and have been so all the time, but their Democracy was never known before. Soon after the election in 1884, when we came here, it was a joke, a standing offer in some of the departments to give $5 to any man who could be found in departmental positions who was not a Democrat; the conversion had been so glorious and so complete!

I have considerable correspondence with the Pension Office, probably nearly as much as almost any other Senator. I have had frequently to send back to that office, and to other offices, letters which they had sent in answer to my communications, but which were not answers; they were not responsive to what I had asked; and I have had to send them back personally to the head of the bureau in order that his attention might be called and a full answer given. He had signed the first reply. So it is in other departments. It is impossible for the head of a bureau such as the Pension Office to know everything that he signs; and I want to get at this as a lesson and instruction. If this letter was written without any such order having been given as it states, let us know where the responsibility of originating it rested; and I can not see why there should be any squeamishness in knowing all the facts in the case, because the Senator from Kansas knows perfectly well that if General Black were to come in here in his response to the resolution and give the statement that that letter was prepared by so-and-so, passed through the hands of a certain chief of division, and was signed by him without looking at it or without being able to examine it, then there would be criticism and harping upon it. What I ask is simply to let us know who prepared the letter; let him make his explanation, and let that come in connection with the report of the Commissioner.

I have sent letters that have remained unanswered for months. When I have called the attention of the Department to the failure to receive a response to a particular letter, it was sent to the division where that letter had gone, and it was sent to the clerk upon whose desk that letter had been placed, for the purpose of receiving his explanation, and I have received the explanations and excuses which they have given for keeping letters on their desks unanswered for months.

I can not see why there can be any possible objection to this little bit of an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

The question being put; there were on a division—ayes 17, noes 21.

Mr. SAULSBURY. There is not a quorum voting. Let us have the yeas and nays. I think this is an important question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not see that there can be any reasonable objection to the amendment. Here is a resolution evidently seeking to inculpate the Commissioner of Pensions in something deemed offensive to the soldiers of the country. The amendment simply proposes to make an inquiry to know who prepared the letter cited. And yet it is opposed on the other side of the Chamber, under the apprehension, I presume, that it will turn out, if the amendment is adopted, that some employé put in under a former administration had prepared this letter, and therefore a case can not be made fully against the Commissioner of Pensions.

We all know that there is in all the departments a large number of men who have no sympathy, and who have never had any sympathy, with the present administration, and it is very possible—I do not say that it is true, because I do not know the fact—that those men under the Commissioner of Pensions, put there by a former administration, may be seeking to bring disrepute on the administration of that bureau while they are receiving the patronage of the Government and the pay that is provided for their positions.

I think the administration is making a great mistake in keeping so many men hostile to the administration in the various departments of this Government. The civil-service law is obligatory upon the President, of course, to execute; but a set of rules has been made under the civil-service law, and with the approbation, I believe, of the President of the United States himself, which cramps the administration at every step and does injustice to the men who placed the administration in power. If I were the President of the United States I would revoke those rules, and I would make such rules as would place the departments under the control of men who were friendly to the administration and not hostile to it.

I think the President is making a great mistake for himself, for his party, and for his country in not exercising the power which he has to have a revision of those rules, to have the rules so framed that his friends shall be placed in power instead of men who are hostile to the Government. You may go to any department of this Government, and there are the same men who have, for years, been carrying on the Government, men who have no sympathy with the administration and who—I do not say they can do it because I do not know the fact—but who, I strongly suspect, sometimes desire to see the very administration under which they are holding place brought into ridicule before the country.

I go sometimes to the Post-Office Department. The head men of that Department are the men who have been there for years, and Democratic members of Congress are sometimes required to go and consult these same officials in reference to matters connected with the interests of that Department in their own States. Personally I have always received very kind and proper attention; I have no complaint personally to make; but at the same time I do believe that it is wrong, and I do not hesitate to say it here and now.

While I would not convert President Cleveland into a public butcher to decapitate every man in the departments who is adverse to him in politics, I would instruct him, if I could, that it is his duty to himself, to his administration, to the party that elected him, to the country, to the service, to purge these departments very largely of the men hostile to his administration. If he does not do it he will not have a successful administration, in my opinion. No man ever yet did carry on any business successfully with agents that were hostile to him in the transaction of his business. It is true of politics as it is true in any other department of life, and I should be glad if the President would wake up to the duty which he owes to the country and to the party which elected him to purge these departments of the men who fought it and seek sometimes to bring the administration into disrepute.

Mr. PLUMB. If there has been any attack on this administration in this debate it has been made by the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Missouri. If there is anybody in the Interior Department to-day, in the Pension Bureau, or any other bureau of it it is simply because the President elects that he shall stay there. There is no civil-service rule which requires any man to be kept, and the rule which the Senator from Delaware has paraded so strongly here has nothing to do with changes of the personnel of the departments. Back of that, perhaps, there is a suggestion that if those who are to be appointed are to be appointed because they can pass a civil-service examination very few Democrats will succeed in getting through that sieve; but, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] says, that is their misfortune and not the fault of the President. He has got a limited amount of material to work with of the character that is fit for executive functions. I credit him with doing the very best he can; and the wisest thing he has ever done, although he has not done any part of it on my recommendation, is his keeping in office the trained men that he found there in order that the public business might not suffer.

The Secretary of the Treasury sent us a letter the other day in regard to the currency of the country which, as I know, does not meet with the views of those who sit on the other side of the Chamber. I have no doubt that down at the bottom they would like to know who wrote that letter. Why do they not offer a resolution to find out?

We are to presume that the President himself, whether he writes his own messages or not, is responsible for that which he sends here, and that every officer under him is responsible in the same way; and to go back of the Commissioner of Pensions and inquire who his clerks are and put the responsibility upon them is to take away his responsibility entirely in that bureau and allot it to the clerks, and that responsibility then to be supervised by Congress directly in reference to the particular individual whose place is at stake. As I said in the beginning, I have a great deal more respect for the Commissioner of Pensions than to believe that he wants anybody to assume that he is not responsible for what is going on in his bureau, which is under his supervision and which he esteems himself able to supervise in such a way that the public interests shall not suffer.

I want simply to know—and it is a pertinent inquiry—whether there is a rule whereby men who are entitled to pensions, because they have exercised the constitutional right of petition in bringing their cases to Congress, have forfeited, according to the judgment of the head of that bureau, their right to have that which the country owes them and has too long denied. For that purpose I do not care to inquire into the personnel of the Department. I look to the head of it as the country looks to the head of the administration in the person of the President and his lieutenants, who are his Cabinet ministers, for that which they find in the administration which is good or bad.

Mr. MORGAN. As this matter seems to be taking rather a political turn and we are called upon for our votes on it by yeas and nays, I wish to express my views in regard to it.

The Senator from Kansas evidently does not want the information that a Republican official in the Pension Office was the author of that letter.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me say that if that is true I assume that the Commissioner will state it in his own defense, but I do not care to suggest to him by the resolution a way whereby he can get out of the responsibility for what is done in his bureau. I want also to say another thing, that the President of the United States can have my vote and my voice to turn out every single Republican in all the Departments. I have not asked that they should remain there at all, and I am not concerned about them in the slightest degree.

Mr. MORGAN. The Commissioner of Pensions is rather an able man, I take it. He has been spoken of in connection with the Senate of the United States on several different occasions. He has for years been considered a man in the United States of marked ability. He does not need a suggestion from the Senate or from any Senator as to what should be a proper response to the words of this resolution of inquiry. But after the Senate has voted down this amendment, if it shall do so, he will doubtless feel himself forbidden to make any allusion to the fact that there is any possibility of his not being responsible for the letter that is being questioned here. In order to give him a fair chance to show exactly how this matter has occurred, the Senate ought to be willing to listen to the truth, and not act upon presumption. Sometimes presumptions that are based on mere appearances are very erroneous and very deceptive, and it seems that the Senator on the other side desires to hold on to what we consider to be an erroneous and deceptive presumption, for the purpose of putting in default a very important officer of this Government.

Now let us have the naked truth. That is the way to get at what is right in this matter, and I am a little surprised that Senators are not willing that we should have it.

I have not very much personal connection with the departments of this Government. I do not worry them very much about business matters. Nevertheless, I have on frequent occasions been led very strongly to suspect that men who have been in office a long time, who have had chances to form combinations and cliques and rings in the different departments, are busily, steadily, continuously acting as spies upon this Administration, for the purpose of collecting up all the little matters that they can, and that they communicate them to the representatives of the Republican population of this country; and I have not any doubt that to-day there are gentlemen in this Senate better informed of what goes on in the Treasury Department of the United States than Mr. Manning can be.

Take the Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service. There is a man who has a very large number of employés under him. How many? Four thousand—my colleague says between seven and eight thousand—a pronounced, steadfast, fixed, and talented Republican, a man who has more arbitrary power to control his subordinates than any other man I know of in the Government of the United States. It would be, I think, a discredit to a Democrat to go to the President of the United States and ask for the removal of that man. There would be no ground that could be taken in regard to it, except that stated by the Senator from Kansas, deliberately, and with so much of intelligence, that the material is too short in the Democratic party to fill up the offices. That would be all.

Mr. PLUMB. I am taking the action of the President as confirmatory of that idea. I can not see why he should have kept Republicans in if he could find competent Democrats to fill the places.

Mr. MORGAN. That is another case of acting on presumption which I think is a little presumptuous on the part of the Senator. The 6,000,000 voters in the United States who are Democrats combine together the best ability that was ever assembled in the United States in its history. There is no question of it. There are more intelligent white men, there is more intelligence to-day in the Democratic party of the United States than ever before existed in a party in this country.

Mr. PLUMB. Then why should the President go by all this great party to select the scalawags he found in office under a Republican administration?

Mr. MORGAN. I am neither indicting nor excusing the President. He is not on trial. The Democratic party is. It is put on trial by the accusation of the Senator from Kansas that we have not got intelligent men enough in our numbers to fill up the offices. That is the proposition. The Senator from Kansas is on trial for his remark, and not the President of the United States. This party, the Democratic party, comprising six million and more of voters, has been drawn together in the face of social and local ostracism in many parts of the United States, and in face of the fact that the Republican party has had the administration and the dispensation of the patronage of this Government for nearly twenty-five years, with all the power of this patronage behind it, reaching to the Army and Navy, reaching to every ramification of office in the United States, with all the power of that immense prestige which the Republican party of the Northern States won by reason of their assumed attitude in conducting the war against the rebellion, we find that man after man, troops of men, have dropped out from behind their banners and allied themselves with the Democratic party. They have not come into association with us because of the temptations of office, for we had no offices to offer them. They have not come because we had money to lay before them to bribe them into our service. They have come because they have witnessed the rapacity, the infidelity to the Constitution, the wrong and injustice of the Republican party toward the people of the United States, which have so moved and impressed them that they were compelled in decent self-respect to leave the banner of that party and come into a party that had some respect for the Constitution and some respect for justice and for law. That is the reason the Democratic party numbered so largely on this occasion in this last election, and that is the reason why I am able to say that there are more men who have been drawn beneath the Democratic banner into the present party organization of intelligence and principle than were ever found in one party in the United States before.

The Democratic party is a conglomerate party made up of men who had the independence of thought to leave their former party leaders and machine workers behind and to come out in the honest advocacy of those opinions and those policies which they believed were essential for the welfare of the individual men of this county, communities, States, and the whole country at large. That is the party we belong to, and I think that out of that number, whether the President concurs with me or not, it is quite possible to get officers enough to fill up the quota in the city of Washington. I concur with the venerable Senator from Delaware, that that man mistakes his opportunities and puts too much at peril who deliberately leaves the administration of affairs, for which he is responsible, in the hands of his enemies. I have not any doubt at all, indeed I could point out if occasion required it, quite a number of men in the offices of this country to-day who are Republicans who are unworthy men.

I will not say that you can not point out Democrats who are unworthy men, either, but I say that it is the duty of the Administration to put the Commissioner of Pensions and the Commissioners of other bureaus and the heads of other departments in such position that they will feel that they are safe in their surroundings. That is the legitimate duty of government, and one without which there can be no proper vigor in government, and without which there can be no proper inspection of the conduct of inferior officers and servants—chiefs of divisions in the departments and bureaus of this Government. I insist upon it that it should be done, and I hope that the Administration and the heads of departments will take warning from this debate this morning and will not any longer allow themselves to be put in a position of jeopardy and distrust and perhaps disgrace by and through the conduct and agency of their subordinates who are treacherous to them and to the party that they pretend now to be regardful of.

Mr. PLUMB. The debate has taken a pretty wide range; I do not know that it is entirely pertinent to the resolution; but some observations which have been made by the Senator from Alabama seem to indicate on his part an absence of accurate knowledge of what is going on in the United States. He has eulogized the Democratic party in a way not so agreeable to many of them who shall ever be able to inspect with knowledge his polished periods in the pages of the vivacious newspaper that we publish here every day. But while he is eulogizing this party and serving it and the country so admirably here, the Democratic party is entirely disappearing. There are sections of country where it once existed, not only in vigor, but in great numbers, where there is only a trace of it left.

In the State of South Carolina, a State having, according to the last census, as many people as the State of Kansas, and having as many Representatives in the other House of Congress as the State of Kansas, only 33,000 votes were cast at the last election for members of the Congress of the United States, while nearly 300,000 were cast in the State of Kansas at the same election for members of Congress. One district in the State of Kansas cast 58,000 votes, nearly twice as many as the entire State of South Carolina. Only about 30,000 votes were cast in the State of Georgia, called the Empire State of the South, over whose name and achievements the average Bourbon Democrat lingers with pride, as he speaks of that Empire State situated midway between the Atlantic and the Mississippi, the keystone of the confederate arch. In the Senator's own State, where, according to the figures of the last census—whether they are to be believed or disbelieved I will not say—there are as many people or more than there were in the State of Kansas in 1880, less than one-quarter the number of votes were cast at the last general election than were cast at the same time and for the same purpose in the State of Kansas. There are men sitting in the other House of Congress assuming to represent constituencies that are akin to the men who sit in the Parliament of England representing rotten boroughs, universities, and estates, the tenantry on which vote according to the dictates of the man who owns the land.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator will allow me to say that in Alabama they had no Republican ticket at all, and the people were not in any way expected to come out to vote. They carried the election without any struggle or effort. There was no Republican ticket.

Mr. PLUMB. Perhaps we might have instruction by ascertaining why it was that the Republicans did not have a ticket in the State of Alabama.

Mr. BECK. May I say a word?

Mr. PLUMB. You may.

Mr. BECK. To show how misleading these figures are I may state that in the district in which I live, the Lexington district, Kentucky, I believe less than 5,000 votes were cast.

Mr. PLUMB. I thank the gentleman for testifying in my behalf.

Mr. BECK. Wait a moment. That was because Colonel BRECKINRIDGE, now the Representative and again elected, had no opposition and nobody thought of opposing him. Everybody knew that 1 vote for him was as good as 20,000. We could have cast and would have cast 30,000 votes if there was any necessity to come out, but in that case 5,000 were as good as 30,000, as no one opposed him. In an adjoining district, where there was a contest, with perhaps 5,000 fewer votes than we have, 31,000 votes were cast because of the contest. That is very often the difficulty about the vote coming out.

Mr. PLUMB. If the suggestion which the Senator from Kentucky makes is correct, that the people are really there, how does their presence there comport with their absence from the voting precincts at the time when members of Congress are to be elected to serve them? They do not come out to express the opinions which they have on public questions; and what groundwork is there for the eulogy which the Senator from Alabama passed on this great Democratic party when only 2 or 3 per cent. of its numbers ever go to the polls to express their judgment on matters which are to be settled by the votes of Congress, and which are supposed to be material to the welfare of the whole people of the United States, themselves included.

Mr. President, in those places where the Democratic party thrives most there is no such thing as public opinion. No man who sits in Congress with only three or four thousand votes at his back at an election which passed off in that way can assume to represent any phase of that public opinion which ought to be finally reflected in laws enacted by Congress.

I do not care to go back of the figures and inquire into the whys and wherefores. I take the eulogy of the Senator from Alabama upon the Democratic party, and then I show either that the Democratic party has entirely disappeared in certain localities or that a worse thing has come about, that the people of those sections have no interest whatever in public matters, do not care who represent them in Congress, do not submit to the arbitrament of intelligent discussion any public question, nor any question affecting their representation in the lower House of Congress, and per consequence are not fitted to exercise the functions of government.

Mr. President, if there is any responsibility in administration to-day that is not fully devolved on the President of the United States and those whom he has selected and whom the Senate so promptly confirmed, I should like to know where it is. I should like to know how it is that this great, powerful, and intelligent organization which selected the President is to-day putting off upon the subordinates it found in office, and whom it either lacked the courage of conviction or the intelligence to discharge, those acts which it ought to be and is practically responsible for itself. No eulogy of the Democratic party, no admonition to the President that he should go on and turn out with greater rapidity, will enable Senators on the other side of the Chamber to disguise the issue which is presented here on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I do not care to go into political wrangles, but the statement of the Senator from Kansas that the number of votes cast for any Representative is either evidence of the ignorance of the people to be represented or that the party who send him do not take an interest in the Government or are unfit to have Representatives is so unjust that I rose to illustrate by just what happened in the neighborhood where I live.

I said the votes cast for Colonel BRECKINRIDGE would have been multiplied four times but for the fact that the Republican party in that district made no contest. That my Representative from Lexington is the ablest man in that body on either side will be determined before two years if it is not known now. It is known to the Republicans of that district as well as to the Democrats, and by common consent he came back without opposition and could have got 20,000 votes just as readily as 5,000 if anybody had attempted to call for a vote against him.

To say that that district is not fit to be represented or that its people take no interest in public affairs because by common consent a distinguished man is allowed to be elected without opposition is not fair; and that happens very often in large portions of the country. As I said, in the adjoining district, where there was a contest, and where there are not so many voters by perhaps five or six thousand, over 30,000 votes were cast, and we could have cast 35,000 or 40,000 if both sides had come out. These are the facts. The statement of the Senator from Kansas does not present the facts really as they exist in the community.

I am neither going to laud the administration nor to find fault with it. A good deal was said by the Senator from Delaware that the administration would do well to act on.

While I am on my feet I will say that as everybody else has a grievance perhaps I have one. I must say that in my opinion it is not wise policy on the part of the administration to keep its enemies in power to hurt it all they can or to allow them to do all the harm they can. I voted against the civil-service law and worked against it, and was one of the few who voted with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. It was simply a method of keeping Republicans in office after you gentlemen had lost your power. There was no examination of those who were in office, but all were kept, and therefore there were no places vacant, and there were 10 per cent. more in office than were really needed.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator says there are 10 per cent. more in than are needed. Is it not true that every head of department except one has asked for an increase of force?

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. With the Senator's permission I desire to say that he misapprehends the force and effect of the civil-service law. There is not a single provision in it which restricts or interferes in the least with the power of the President, or of any other officer having the appointing power, to dismiss any employé or officer of the Government under him—not a single provision.

Mr. BECK. Well, I will not go into that. All that were found there had a right to stay, and nobody could get in unless he went through an examination that could be made easy or hard as the examiner saw fit. But I care nothing about that.

What I was going to state was, that the administration, in my judgment, has made a mistake in not putting its friends in place where it has the power to do so. I do not believe that any man can carry on a farm if his plow-boys are trying to break him down; and a man can not carry on a corner grocery if all his clerks are seeking to destroy him. I do not believe a great government can be administered without having the good will of the men who are intrusted with its positions. There is one case that I desire to refer to, that of the man at the head of the railway mail service, a Republican, a good man, no doubt, but as earnest a worker for the Republican party as I am for the Democratic party.

Mr. PLUMB. He does not make any appointments.

Mr. BECK. The Blue Book shows that he has under him nearly seven thousand men.

Mr. PLUMB. He does not appoint one of them.

Mr. BECK. Of that number 4,400 are railway mail clerks with salaries of from eight hundred to $1,800; and he manages to retain nine-tenths of them as colaborers with him against the party he pretends to serve.

Mr. PLUMB. What a helpless Postmaster-General you have got!

Mr. BECK. No one man can manage any great department without having to rely on his subordinates. When a man like Mr. Jameson—able, I admit, but not indispensable, for he might die, and the railway postal service would not stop if he did die, and somebody should take his place—has under him 4,400 men, as the Blue Book shows, the most intelligent young men in the country, ramifying, in every part of the country, with salaries varying, as I say, from $1,800 down to $800 a year, is it right that I should have to go, with my hat in my hand, and beg him to look into things, and he can turn me off, as if I was a beggar, and I dare not tell him why I want a change made, because the very reason why I desire a change is the very reason why he wants to keep the men he has got. He desires to keep men to break down the administration. I desire to put men there who will build it up, and I cannot tell him so. That is a case I give you, as illustrating the whole matter. I do not care to say more now.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that it would be a very great detriment to the public service to dismiss a class of men like the railway mail clerks. Their efficiency depends largely upon their experience, and their places can not be filled readily. They are not, I understand, within the civil-service rules; at least they have not been so construed, and yet the Department, I think, including the present head of the Post-Office Department, looking more earnestly to the civil-service than to political advantage in that particular, has determined to keep these people, and to make discharges only for lack of ability in the line of duty in which they are serving. It can not be pretended that persons of equal ability can be put in and take their places under months. Is a great public service of the country like that to be disturbed for the purpose of building up a political party? Not at all. I would not blame the present head of that Department if when there is a vacancy and he is compelled to put in a new man, he selects a Democrat and puts him in. I expect him to do that. But I think the public would rise up and be heard if there had been an attempt to discharge this great corps of efficient, valuable, and necessary workers in the railway mail service. You could not have done it without detriment to the public service of such a character as would have overwhelmed the Democratic party.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not rise to make a speech, but I wish to say that I think we have been wasting a great deal of the valuable time of this body, with a vast amount of important matter requiring practical attention by the Senate. I understand that this resolution simply proposes an inquiry whether or not the Commissioner of Pensions has declared or decided and informed any one that he regarded an application to Congress as forfeiting the right to a pension.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator is mistaken about the resolution. The resolution simply inquires whether there is a rule of a certain kind in the office. We know by the letter what was done in the given case, but I simply wish to ascertain what the rule is in regard to it.

Mr. CALL. The decision which has been read by the Senator from Missouri of the Commissioner of Pensions clearly shows that that was simply an infelicitous use of language. That decision no one can controvert. It asserts that when Congress has passed upon the subject of the rights of a pensioner and the evidence, that decision of Congress is obligatory and binding upon the Commissioner; but that other and new evidence will be considered by him. Now, we know what the rule of the Pension Office is; we know what the wise and just decision of the Commissioner is; that it affirms the power of Congress, and that it having been exercised, he submits to it. That is all he has done, and that is all we can find out.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator from Kansas simply introduced his resolution asking if there was such a rule in that Department, there would have been no occasion for the amendment which I offer; but on the 28th of January, when the Senator submitted the resolution, he said:

Mr. PLUMB. The occasion for the resolution is found in a letter, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 24, 1887.

SIR: In response to the request of Hon. P. B. PLUMB, relative to your claim for pension, No. 260105, as late of Company D, Fifth Pennsylvania Reserves, you are informed that it was rejected January 29, 1879, on the ground that the alleged affection of eyes was incurred by lifting heavy timbers in the year 1857, as shown by the certificate of disability upon which you were discharged. Furthermore your appeal to the Congress of the United States for aid forfeited your right as a claimant before this office, which therefore declines further consideration of the claim.

Very respectfully,

JOHN C. BLACK, Commissioner.

DAVID C. CANFIELD, Fort Scott, Kans.

And then Mr. ALLISON and Mr. INGALLS exclaimed:

"Forfeited!"

And Mr. PLUMB replied:

Yes, "forfeited." He is advised that he has thereby forfeited his right to be heard in the Pension Office.

In view of the fact that every one knows that these answers which go out in regard to the hundreds of thousands of inquiries that are made every year have to be written by some subordinate and go through the hands of the chief of division and then signed, as a matter of course, without further investigation or inquiry, I thought it but just and in order that we might find out who was the clerk, and when he was appointed who wrote that letter, and who was the chief of division through whose hands it passed, so that we might have before us all the facts.

Now, Mr. President, a word as to the intimation that the Senator from Kansas made or the slur he attempted to cast upon the Democratic party in regard to ignorance, that we did not have intelligent men enough to fill the offices. This slur has been used on other occasions, and it does not come well from that Senator or any other Senator. I say to him that the census reports will show in 1890 that there are more intelligent Democrats in the State of Kansas than there are intelligent Republicans. I state that the census of the United States will show that there are more Democratic voters who can read and write in the United States than there are Republican voters who can.

RAILROAD ATTORNEYS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the duty of the Chair at this hour to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, the bill under consideration by the Senate now is a crimes act. It belongs to the province of constitutional jurisdiction in criminal matters by the Congress of the United States, if it has any proper place here; and as a preliminary consideration of the value, the necessity, the operation, the expediency, and the constitutionality of this new crimes act I deem it quite important that we should understand what the condition of the law now is as bearing upon the integrity and propriety of conduct of members of Congress.

This crimes act has this clear feature upon its face—that it makes that a crime which never was a crime and in its nature never can be made a crime except by the positive enactment which so decrees. In the next place this criminal legislation is confined to a few persons. In its largest comprehension it includes only the two Houses of Congress, and then, by a lesser reduction, it is only the lawyers of the country who are members of these two Houses. When, therefore, I find that a bill introduced, as I suppose, suddenly into this Chamber at the last session, undertakes to do that, to make a new crime, to confine it only to members of Congress, and to confine it only to members of the professsion of the law as they may be members of these two Houses, as they may purpose to be, or their constituents may desire to make them, members of Congress, if I am right in the examination of this criminal act proposed that it is an artificial decree of criminality when the transaction that is thus made a subject of criminal legislation in its qualities has no such turpitude and no quality of injury to the public service, I shall have gone a great way, I think, in satisfying the honest judgment of this Senate and the honest judgment of this country that such an act should not be passed.

But if in addition to that I shall satisfy the Senate that all that is in its nature to be proscribed, or denounced, or avoided, in the action that is thus made the subject of the denunciation of this act, is already found on the statute-book, then I hope the judgment of the Senate, and I hope the concurrent judgment of the country, will understand that there is no occasion for solicitude, that there is no protection required, and there is no justification for this special legislation.

I hold in my hand the bill as presented by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] and as reported from the Judiciary Committee, which enables us to ascertain what the original proposition was and what the substitute of the committee is. I do not need to read this, for it is in the general recollection certainly of the Senate.

I also hold in my hand four or five amendments that have been presented by different Senators, but for any purpose that I need to contrast the scheme of the original bill as proposed by the Senator from Kentucky with the suggested modifications that seem to pursue a line that is to secure good legislation and is contradictory to and corrective of what I regard as the vice of the original measure proposed by the Senator from Kentucky, I am only called on to refer to the last amendment, which was introduced in the Senate last evening by the honorable Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. I will read this amendment for the purpose of comparison between the bill and what may be deemed a correct line and may be regarded as necessary to meet an expectation in some part of our communities that desire some legislation in addition to what is now on the statute-book. This amendment proposes to strike out the whole of the bill and substitute this:

That it shall be unlawful for any member of Congress to accept employment as general counsel or attorney, or receive payment for services as such general counsel or attorney, from any railroad company, or from any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter or any grant of land or pecuniary aid from the United States: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to prevent members of either House of Congress from appearing as counsel in suits by or against such railroad companies in the State or Federal courts, when the United States is not a party or interested in the result of said suits.

This amendment is extremely well drawn in observance of what I suppose is in the minds of very many of our citizens and in the minds of very many of the Senators when they think that there is a practical and an important interest that should be guarded against being encroached upon by too intimate relations between members of either House of Congress being lawyers in professional service for these same corporations. It also, not only by the limitation of this principal clause, but by the operation of the proviso, distinctly draws the line of usefulness, of what is not opprobrious and is not offensive in the treatment of the profession of the law or of the two Houses of Congress in accepting or imposing this form of legislation.

Mr. President, the principal act now on the statute-book which has most to do with the topic or interest to find a place for itself on the statute-book in the view proposed by the Senator from Kentucky is what is known as the bribery act. It forms one of the sections of the Revised Statutes; that is, section 5500 of chapter 6 in the crimes code of the United States. The name of its title is "official misconduct, &c.," and it pursues through many sections appropriate legislation for the thorough exposition and the proper punishment of violations of conduct on the part of this or that officer.

We come in section 5499 to the topic of what we call bribery, and we all understand that bribery is in its nature a crime, a crime of great heinousness in its relation to the public service, and certainly a very great crime in any high officer of the Government who exposes himself to or is chargeable with any such corrupt purpose or intention. Section 5499 takes up the subject as to judges:

Every judge of the United States, who in any wise accepts or receives any sum of money, &c.

I will not read it in full. The next section is that which touches members of Congress, and that I shall read in full in a moment.

Section 5501, still adhering to the same subject of bribery, takes up the application and the punishment in the case of—

Every officer of the United States, and every person acting for or on behalf of the United States, in any official capacity under or by virtue of the authority of any Department or office of the Government thereof.

And the next section, which is 5502, besides the sanctions, which I think are the same in each of these sections, has this further punishment provided to carry all of these instances:

SEC. 5502. Every member, officer, or person, convicted under the provisions of the two preceding sections, who holds any place of profit or trust, shall forfeit his office or place; and shall thereafter be forever disqualified from holding any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States.

It will be admitted at once that however mild or however general the phrases which may be used in the new act proposed by the Senator from Kentucky having any relation to the subject of punishment or to the subject of danger needing to be guarded against, it is in its relation to bribery, it is because it belongs to that topic that it is here; and if it be a rightful matter of treatment under that head it should find its place under that section, and there will be very little consideration required to see whether it deserves a place in that section or whether all that there is needing to be guarded against is not already embraced and covered by this section.

If Senators will give me their attention while I read this bribery section they will see at once, without much aid from argument on my part, that all that is really aimed at and is worthily embraced within the operation and the punishment and the dangers of bribery is covered by the existing legislation. Let me read:

SEC. 5500. Any member of either House of Congress who asks, accepts, or receives any money, or any promise, contract, undertaking, obligation, gratuity, or security for the payment of money, or for the delivery or conveyance of anything of value, either before or after he has been qualified or has taken his seat as such member, with intent to have his vote or decision on any question, matter, cause, or proceeding which may be at any time pending in either House, or before any committee thereof, influenced thereby, shall be punished by a fine not more than three times the amount asked, accepted, or received, and by imprisonment not more than three years. [See § 5450.]

If lawyers bring themselves into relation with land-grant railroads or railroads receiving their incorporation from the United States, of course in regard to them as in regard to a thousand other relations that are possible with other railroads, other corporations, other private litigants—if they bring themselves fairly within the imputation of having accepted such relation and compensation connected therewith with the intent that the vote or decision of such lawyer is to be influenced thereby, the case is covered by that section as it now reads. The language is broad; the distribution of the topics and forms under which bribery may be approached or bribery be submitted to are distinctly here. Let me again call attention to some of these phrases, "who asks, accepts, or receives any money or any promise, contract, undertaking, obligation, gratuity, or security for the payment of money."

If a railroad attorney, as he is stigmatized, comes into a relation with a land-grant corporation of general employment with an intention to be honest in the transaction in which he is ostensibly employed, and there is also an intention that he is to be retained, so to speak, for a particular interest or the general interest of this employer in any matter that shall be pending at any time in Congress, the proof of that is as clearly embraced within the prohibition and within the punishment as any of the other more direct forms of the offense of bribery.

Nor will it do to say that it may be true, but it may not be easy to prove the criminal intent. But without the criminal intent it is not a crime. You are not to avoid the necessity of proving that essential ingredient of the corpus delicti by undertaking to punish things that are not crimes in order to guard against or disable men from committing crimes. This latter is the essence of tyranny in legislation. Neither will it do in dealing with a topic that intrinsically is intricate, to substitute affirmative and purely arbitrary rules of evidence. That is another form of tyranny—a form of tyranny that I hope will never find its place on any statute-book in this country.

If you are willing to impart to the vigor of this section on crimes a force which shall expose to punishment and opprobrium the conduct denounced in the bill proposed by the Senator from Kentucky, then here is its place; put it in juxtaposition with the elements of turpitude and of mischief and of punishment that belong to it; put it in as a crime though it is not now a crime and does not include any of the turpitude or the evil intent indicated in the section, but that it shall be punished as in the nature of corruption of the integrity and purity of the conduct of members of Congress, or put it in as a rule of evidence, leaving the section to stand as it now does in the enumeration of the acts that are punishable as a crime, and provide in bold and bald assertion that if any member of Congress shall argue a cause for a railroad corporation in the public courts of this country in matters that have nothing to do with Congress or its legislation, that shall be conclusive evidence of his having accepted a bribe. Logic can not be discarded from legislation, from criminal legislation especially, and these two distinct forms of tyranny have been carefully avoided in the legislation of this country in the States and in the United States.

Let me read an amendment to this section that will place in proper juxtaposition the scope and nature of this new criminality and the application of the old punishment, not too severe, and the old guilt. Better to fetter it at once with the mild form that belongs to the nature of the transaction to which the new criminal legislation is to apply. After reading down to the completion of the criminality as thus defined, "with intent to have his vote or decision on any question, matter, cause, or proceeding which may be at any time pending in either House, or before any committee thereof, influenced thereby," then it goes on to say "shall be punished." Let me introduce what, in my judgment, is the amendment of the criminal law of the country by the crimes act proposed by the Senator from Kentucky:

And any such member, being of the profession of the law, who shall accept any professional employment in any matter in which a railroad company which has received its incorporation or any land grant from the United States is concerned, from such company, though such matter have no relation to any matter pending in Congress, and though such acceptance and employment be without intent to have his vote or decision influenced thereby, shall be punished——

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. EVARTS. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. The essence of bribery, I understand, is the agreement, express or implied, between the giver and the receiver that the conduct of the receiver shall be affected in some way by the bribe. It has been therefore held that a judge ought not to receive a gift from any person having a suit in court, notwithstanding there may be no agreement of a corrupt character such as is denounced by that statute. I think Lord Bacon was charged with having received gifts from suitors. But while there is no corrupt agreement between the railroad company and the attorney which would be dishonorable to either or which would compel the attorney to carry out the wishes of the railroad company, yet the attorney, just like the judge in the case which I have mentioned, is the recipient of benefits, of favors from the railroad company which might impair his impartiality in a matter of legislation in which the railroad company was interested.

Mr. EVARTS. Then it belongs under the head of bribery, as Lord Bacon's conduct came under the head of bribery. It is not necessary that there should be an agreement inter partes about it. The point is whether the relation is such that the action in the public capacity shall be influenced thereby.

Mr. GEORGE. Is it not absolutely improper for a judge to receive a gift from a suitor in his court although there may be no agreement, express or implied, that it shall affect the judge's action?

Mr. EVARTS. It is an executed contract when he receives the gift.

Mr. GEORGE. That does not answer the question. I ask if it is not equally improper for a judge to accept a valuable gift from a suitor having a cause pending in his court without any agreement as to whether he should be affected by the gift or not?

Mr. EVARTS. The point unquestionably is that you discriminate and punish and condemn a transaction that carries the nature of turpitude and influence, though there be a failure to show a deliberate and express contract to that effect. The act of a judge in his capacity receiving gifts from a suitor is in itself an official impropriety, whether or not it comes within the definition of bribery as affecting judges as described in one of the sections to which I have referred.

Mr. GEORGE. Suppose the judge should be so good a man and so pure a man as that he would not be influenced by it, is it not as matter of public policy for the security of the fair and due administration of public justice and to maintain the character of the courts, even in a case where the intent of the parties on both sides was entirely innocent—is it not an improper thing for a judge to receive a gift from a suitor?

Mr. EVARTS. Such an act undoubtedly has the denunciation of morals, and when it reaches the point of requiring to be redressed by public justice and it does not fall within proper regulation of criminal legislation, then it falls within the rule of impeachment.

Mr. GEORGE. Again, if the Senator will allow me, if that be true, as the Senator admits we are judges in a most important matter between the United States and these railroad companies, would not the very rule which he admits to be correct in reference to a judge sitting on the bench apply to a judge sitting in this Chamber or in the other end of the Capitol to determine the rights of parties before the American Congress?

Mr. EVARTS. I do not admit the correctness of the analogy, because there is not one word as to gift in this bill that is proposed by the Senator from Kentucky. There is not any relation of favor or gift about it, and subsequently in my discussion I shall point out that fallacy in the proposition.

Mr. GEORGE. But allow me here to say that while there is no gift in the matter, yet the employment of an attorney at a large salary is always such a favor on the part of the employer that it may affect the employé.

Mr. EVARTS. That I shall consider; but at this moment I ask the Senator if there is anything in the bill about a large fee or a general fee. I am not to discuss here questions of morals as to how this or that may be shaded into a corrupt or corruptible ingredient. I am talking about the bill as it reads, and there is nothing in it about gifts, and there is nothing in it about large and general retainers at all, nor is any general relation between attorneys or members of our profession with these railroad companies or anybody described. I am talking about the bill as it is, not as it might be, not as it might be made consonant, perhaps, with what all would appreciate as falling within the region of either denunciation or debate.

Mr. GEORGE. Now, if I am to understand the Senator as admitting that the tender by the railroad company and the acceptance by the attorney of a large fee would be objectionable, then I respectfully suggest that what would be large to one man would be small to another, and that as every one has his price, as Walpole said, some men have much more capacity to be influenced than others.

Mr. EVARTS. I have not admitted the proposition about the railroad attorneys; I have only admitted it about the judges, that such conduct on their part came within the range of impeachment or denunciation.

Mr. GEORGE. I understood the Senator to admit it by implication.

Mr. EVARTS. I said the bill did not attempt to go upon any such idea of gift or of criminal relation that carried it beyond the mere actual service employed, with no intent of any kind; but I have reserved that matter for more explicit determination when I come to take it up.

I think there is not a lawyer in or out of either House of Congress, nor any fair-minded man, whether he be connected with journalism or with the busy and common occupations of life, who would not pronounce such an amendment as I have proposed here as a fit expression of the denunciation of the bill before this body, if it is to be included within the shade and the criminality of bribery; first, that the statute as it now reads covers every form of retainers, but carries under guise of honest and honorable relation a purpose that by its actual circumstances shall disclose or by accompanying evidence shall impart to it the ingredient of being done—and this is all that this clause requires—with the intent that it shall affect his decision or vote in this body.

There are two other crimes sections which are not embraced under this code as the heads are distributed in the Revised Statutes, and they are important, serious, and comprehensive regulations of members of Congress in regard to the matters which are there disposed of. They come under a general title of provisions applicable to several classes of officers, and these two criminal sections as I think ought to find their place under the title from which as I think I have already read of bribery, are put under a regulation of conduct, but they are crimes statutes and nothing else. I need not read these, though I shall ask that they be taken in the RECORD in full from the statute-book which is open before me.

The sections of the Revised Statutes referred to are as follows:

SEC. 1781. Every member of Congress or any officer or agent of the Government who, directly or indirectly, takes, receives, or agrees to receive, any money, property, or other valuable consideration whatever, from any person for procuring, or aiding to procure, any contract, office, or place, from the Government or any Department thereof, or from any officer of the United States, for any person whatever, or for giving any such contract, office, or place to any person whomsoever, and every person who, directly or indirectly, offers or agrees to give, or gives, or bestows any money, property, or other valuable consideration whatever, for the procuring or aiding to procure any such contract, office, or place, and every member of Congress who, directly or indirectly, takes, receives, or agrees to receive any money, property, or other valuable consideration whatever after his election as such member, for his attention to, services, action, vote, or decision on any question, matter, cause, or proceeding which may then be pending, or may by law or under the Constitution be brought before him in his official capacity, or in his place as such member of Congress, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be imprisoned not more than two years and fined not more than $10,000. And any such contract or agreement may, at the option of the President, be declared absolutely null and void; and any member of Congress or officer convicted of a violation of this section shall, moreover, be disqualified from holding any office of honor, profit, or trust under the Government of the United States.

SEC. 1782. No Senator, Representative, or Delegate, after his election and during his continuance in office, and no head of a Department, or other officer or clerk in the employ of the Government, shall receive or agree to receive any compensation whatever, directly or indirectly, for any services rendered, or to be rendered, to any person, either by himself or another, in relation to any proceeding, contract, claim, controversy, charge, accusation, arrest, or other matter or thing in which the United States is a party, or directly or indirectly interested, before any Department, court-martial, bureau, officer, or any civil, military, or naval commission whatever. Every person offending against this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be imprisoned not more than two years, and be fined not more than $10,000, and shall, moreover, by conviction therefor, be rendered forever thereafter incapable of holding any office of honor, trust, or profit under the Government of the United States.

Mr. EVARTS. We are more familiar, I think, with reference to this debate with these two sections, because they are relied upon as a line and method of legislation that gives support to this additional and progressive feature which is the subject of the proposed act. Section 1781 provides that—

Every member of Congress, or any officer or agent of the Government, who directly or indirectly takes, receives, or agrees to receive, any money, property, or other valuable consideration whatever, from any person for procuring or aiding to procure any contract, office, or place from the Government—

That is a sufficient description of that section. That is a crimes statute, clearly so, and it is a denunciation of an improper thing to be done. It is in its nature, in its quality improper to be done—the corpus delicti, in the nature of morals and of government. That is against brokerage on the part of members of Congress in obtaining the appointment of persons to office.

That is the nature of this legislation. It pursues very carefully every form and shape of this denunciation, and it provides that the member of Congress shall be imprisoned not more than two years, and fined not more than $10,000; that the contract may be declared null by the President of the United States at his option; and when a member of Congress or officer is convicted of a violation of the section he shall moreover be disqualified from holding any office of honor, profit, or trust under the Constitution of the United States. That is a crime. You can not alter its nature by putting it under a series of regulations that do not fall within that description. It is imprisonment and fine, a grave and weighty punishment, and the penal punishment to be excluded from the enjoyment of the common right of citizens of the United States in enjoying public place.

Mr. GEORGE. Still that was not legally equivalent to a crime until the act was passed.

Mr. EVARTS. It was not put in the shape of a criminal section, but it was criminal before in its nature, and it is punished for the reason that it is wrong.

Mr. GEORGE. That is, morally wrong, but not legally.

Mr. EVARTS. No; the act itself (we will not dispute about the word "criminal" in the sense of being written down in the crimes act) is a criminal thing.

Mr. GEORGE. I mean legally a violation of criminal law. That is what I mean by "criminal."

Mr. EVARTS. It was not a violation of criminal law until the criminal section was passed, and the bribery was not punishable before, but there is no interest in that equivocation on the meaning of what is written down to be punished, when it is in its nature wicked and corrupt, and is put into the statute book for punishment because it is a crime, and not one that is made a crime, and on its face is not a crime, against the duties and obligations of society or of Government.

Mr. GEORGE. Do you say as much for the statute which prohibits members of Congress from prosecuting claims against the United States?

Mr. EVARTS. I can not notice all these sections at once, but I shall not omit that when I come to expose the true nature of each of them. I now come to section 1782.

No Senator, Representative, or Delegate, after his election and during his continuance in office, and no head of a Department, or other officer or clerk in the employ of the Government, shall receive or agree to receive any compensation whatever, directly or indirectly, for any services rendered, or to be rendered, to any person, either by himself or another, in relation to any proceeding, contract, claim, controversy, charge, accusation, arrest, or other matter or thing in which the United States is a party, or directly or indirectly interested—

That is the description of the misconduct, but the representation of the board or officer then follows—

before any Department, court-martial, bureau, officer, or any civil, military, or naval commission whatever.

It will be observed that although the misconduct here denounced is so recognized in its character, whether it is made a subject of penal punishment or not, it is offensive to the interests of society and it is denounced and punished to guard against the misconduct. But I ask the attention of members of the Senate to the discrimination there made. It does not undertake, even in regard to these representations, to make it punishable for a member of either House to represent interests in the great and public courts of record of this country; it is only in these particular and limited administrative functions, as a court-martial is really the only one that comes up to a court in the least sense.

Mr. GEORGE. The Court of Claims is mentioned there, is it not?

Mr. EVARTS. It is, but not in the section I am now talking about. When I come to that I shall endeavor to adequately express and elucidate it. Leave out courts-martial and you have nothing of the public administration of justice in courts; it relates to department or bureau officers, civil, military, or naval commissions, or whatever. That is made punishable by the same grave and weighty denunciation, and the same consequence of losing employment.

In these two sections, whatever you may think of them as useful legislation—and about that I have no question, I have no reason to make any, certainly none in reference to my argument—the thing forbidden is itself a crime, and the form and manner of its punishment is the only question taken up by the National Legislature in passing those sections. It does not take up what is innocent, and denounce it and make it punishable as a crime, because some injury may be expected or may be feared by the influence even of innocent parties.

If it was desired that the offense described and made punishable in section 1782 should be extended to a representation by a member of Congress in the courts of the country at large, here is the place to put in that amendment; and that would be, after the enumeration of the places in which this representation or maintenance of interests is described, in this form:

Or before any public court or tribunal of justice of the United States, or of any State.

I do not now make any question as to whether it could be only lawfully or constitutionally confined to courts of the United States or not. Then it is seen you would place what was omitted from the representation in great and open courts of the country, an espousal by an advocate, an attorney, as you may please to call him, of the matters of which the United States was interested, the corpus delicti here being a matter in which the United States was concerned; and that was the crime and the mischief to be guarded against.

I have thus shown in regard to this crimes enactment that it does not undertake to turn upon the employment of members of either House in their ordinary avocations. It undertakes to deal with the subject-matter of criminality and of redress and prevention, and that is of undertaking to be themselves representatives of private interests in matters in which the United States is concerned. Therefore you can find no more in those two sections than in the bribery act any justification of the legislation that is now proposed.

I now come to the only other piece of legislation which affects the conduct of members of Congress in reference to their occupation and their relations of an improper kind that the law should regulate, and it is the law establishing the Court of Claims. The name of the title is "The Court of Claims: Organization and Sessions." The Court of Claims is then constituted, and what is it? It is a board with judicial function to audit and adjust and maintain, according to law and justice, claims against the United States; so that you do not need to find any special reasons for prohibiting members of Congress from practicing there. The existing act only needed to be applied to the Court of Claims, if it had been treated as a matter that really should be brought within the regulation of criminal law; but it did not need to be brought within the regulation of criminal law, nor did it need to trespass upon the private rights and interests of society, of members of any profession, or of members of either House of Congress except in the simple statement which I will read. After the complete organization of the court, section 1058 adds:

Members of either House of Congress shall not practice in the Court of Claims.

Is it necessary for me to give reasons why this is not a regulation of private conduct? It is a regulation of the constitution of the court itself, which on its face has for the defendant the United States. There is no litigation before the Court of Claims in which the United States is not a party presumptively, an actual party to the record and in the discussions. When matters are sent there they are sent by the will and order of the two Houses of Congress, conferring for special reasons a jurisdiction pro hâc vice in the matter thus referred.

It is impossible to raise an argument that the private conduct of members of society, the private conduct of members of the profession, or the private conduct of members of the two Houses of Congress is touched or affected by that provision. It is the subject-matter there that is the foundation of precluding members of Congress from practicing in that court. I venture to say that if that clause had not been in the law, no member of Congress would ever have practiced there. I can not conceive on what general principles you need to draw a line to enforce on the conscience and the sense of propriety of members of the Senate or of the other House the fact that the Court of Claims is in its whole arrangement and management of adjustments a court in which the United States is on one side and the claimants are on the other; and section 1058 precludes members of Congress from practicing not only for suitors there but for the United States. It is an arrangement of the court, and an eminently proper one. Congress did not need to denounce it by criminal legislation, and it is not accompanied with any denunciation or any punishment whatever. It is an element in the composition of the jurisdiction of the court, and it is, as we all know without any further insisting upon it, an auditing between suitors and the Government of the United States, the payment after judgments depending upon the action of Congress. For every reason, without any public exposition or elucidation of the nature of the court, that is all there is on the subject of the Court of Claims, and it, with the section I have read, is the only basis by which it is argued that this further step can be taken.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator allude to the statute which prohibits members of Congress from being interested in contracts with the Government, which was cited by the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. EVARTS. No; I have not read that section. It certainly does not go any further than sections 1781 and 1782.

Mr. GEORGE. It only prohibits members of Congress from being interested in any contract with the Government.

Mr. EVARTS. It certainly does not go any further than the sections I have read.

Mr. GEORGE. It is only valuable in the aspect that it is an instance in which Congress undertook to make criminal and to punish acts of members of Congress which before the passage of the law were perfectly innocent.

Mr. EVARTS. It does not approach as near this subject as the sections I have already adverted to, and it can carry no argument. It does not apply to any class of the members of the two Houses, which is denounced very properly and rests on the same reason that they are precluded from representing claims against the Government, and there is the same reason for punishing the engagement in them.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to call the attention of the Senate and of the Senator to the fact that it is an instance of a statute passed by Congress for the regulation of members of Congress which prohibits the doing of things by members of Congress which in themselves before the passage of the act were perfectly innocent.

Mr. EVARTS. I think not.

Mr. GEORGE. And further, these acts being innocent, not contrary to law, they were prohibited not because a member of Congress could not perform his contract with the Government as well as anybody else, but because of the tendency of that sort of relation to the Government to influence improperly the member of Congress.

Mr. EVARTS. I should not at all agree with the Senator from Mississippi that the action was innocent before the statute was passed.

Mr. GEORGE. It was innocent so far as the law was concerned.

Mr. EVARTS. Now we are back to the old question as to whether a crime depends on punishment written down in the book. I have undertaken to draw the distinction. Nor was there in that motive nor in its treatment of that denunciation a recognition of the right of prohibiting because there would be an evil tendency that might escape into bad relations. The law relates to an act which in its terms and conduct and relations is not justifiable and should not be allowed.

Mr. GEORGE. The taking of a contract in which the Government is interested on one side by a member of Congress is not reprehensible in any point of view, except in the point that its tendency is to make him do wrong as a member of Congress.

Mr. EVARTS. It is not necessary for me to point out the distinction. In the first place, getting the contract is one thing. He has an advantage over the rest of the world in that, and he makes the contract with men who are in subordination to the action of the two Houses of Congress, and the whole relation is, from beginning to end, vicious and reprehensible.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from New York allow me to make a suggestion in answer to the query of the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. EVARTS. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. I believe that in all systems of jurisprudence a contract by a trustee or by any one holding a fiduciary relation to others in respect to the matters of his trust is denounced as immoral and against public policy; I mean any contract by which the trustee is to be benefited. So when a member of Congress, who is a part of this Government, undertakes to make a contract with the Government he is in one sense contracting with himself, and is therefore obnoxious to the rule which would prohibit any one in the capacity or position of a trustee from undertaking to benefit by any such relation. It seems to me that the law which the Senator from Mississippi has alluded to comes clearly within the denunciation of that class of contract relations.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator from New York will allow me, I am very much obliged to the Senator from Delaware for calling my attention to the general rule of law about the contracts of trustees in relation to trust property. Those contracts are denounced, not because they are injurious to the trust property, for they may have been beneficial, but because of the tendency of such contracts to make the trustee act improperly. That is all there is in it. It is the tendency, and not the act itself, because if the contract was shown to be beneficial to the cestui que trust it would, nevertheless, be condemned by the law.

Mr. EVARTS. I do not need to either contradict or to discriminate between the propositions of the Senator from Mississippi and those that I have occasion to support in regard to the bill presented by the Senator from Kentucky, under discussion here, because I think he will agree that the relation of making contracts with the United States is quite as near making an influence on action in this body as this attorneys bill.

Mr. GEORGE. I myself believe that the contract law is a proper law, and I wish the Senator to understand that I believe the taking of a fee from a railroad company by a member of this body, until prohibited by law, is not only not wrong, but I see no objection to it whatever. It may be a highly honorable relation carried out in that way. So far as that is concerned, I do not want to be understood as saying that there is anything malum in se in taking the contract.

Mr. EVARTS. Then the Senator agrees with me on that point, although I can not agree with him that for Senators and Congressmen to make a contract with the Government is an innocent thing in itself.

What does this proposed act undertake to do? I will read it as originally presented and as it was referred to the Judiciary Committee:

That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress to accept employment as attorney at law, or payment for services of any kind, from any railroad company, or any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter or any grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States.

And any person who violates it shall be punished. That is the crime. The Senator from Mississippi gives at least his countenance to the proposition that the act thus denounced is perfectly innocent in his own mind.

Mr. GEORGE. No man is condemned for taking that relation unless a law, which does not now exist, is passed on the subject.

Mr. EVARTS. Of course we know it is wrong to violate laws. Whether laws are good or bad, it is wrong to violate them. We all know that, and we know the difference between a law in criminal relation finding a crime and proceeding to punish it and a law finding a perfectly innocent relation and then turning it into a crime and punishing it by mere force of law.

The motives for passing this measure will be of course considered, and I shall have something to say about them; but in the conscience of men, in the intelligence of men, in the safety of society, in the freedom of our communities, in the great institutions which are the features of governments of justice, you never can get over the distinction between pursuing wrong and pursuing fraud and punishing it, and pursuing innocence and the ordinary freedom of citizens and punishing it by mere enactment of law. The distinction never can be dissimulated; it never can be disguised; and when as the first proposition you are criticising a new law you are to find that in the nature of things it is perfectly innocent and in the common right of the people of this country, that it belongs to them as a part of their innocent property; then the burden is upon those who find such a mischief, and such a motive, and such a necessity as will justify taking from common possession, common right, and common innocence, and denouncing them all as crimes to be punished by sending men to jail. How long does such a law last? It may grow into an enactment; timorous, agitated communities may resort to such legislation; but it never lasts long, and never is justified except upon that supreme and final necessity in overlooking the distinction between right and wrong.

Mr. GEORGE. That is all very true, but in the administration of justice, in the discharge of high functions of government which decide between man and man, the law is full of denunciations against acts which are in themselves perfectly innocent, but which are condemned solely on the ground of public policy, because if such acts were permitted they might tend to corrupt the administration of justice. For instance, as I have said, you can not make a gift to a judge, you can not give a juror who is trying a case a drink of water or a piece of bread, not because it is criminal to give him a drink of water or a piece of bread, but because of its tendency to corrupt justice.

Mr. EVARTS. The difficulty, if the Senator will allow me to say it, is that he cites no instances which are innocent. They would be innocent if the man was not a judge, and they would be innocent if the man was not a juror, but he does not cite any case where it is innocent as towards the judge or innocent as towards the juror. It is an interference with the administration of justice in the panel that is to be guarded against approach of any kind, even a message from a dying wife, unless it goes through the channel of the court.

Mr. GEORGE. That is exactly what the friends of this bill say, that although the act itself may be innocent as between other parties, yet as this may affect the conduct of a member of Congress in the discharge of a high public duty in the administration of public justice, it ought to be condemned.

Mr. EVARTS. I shall proceed to consider, as I go on, what this proposed legislation does. It is entirely uncalled for. Every gentleman who has defended or espoused this proposed enactment has discarded at once any impression or any imputation that there now exists in this body or in the other House of Congress any practice or any relation that needs to be guarded against. Is it not the first duty of legislators, when a crimes act is to be enacted, especially when innocence is to be turned into crime, that there should be some controlling public interest which makes a supreme and subtending authority out of what otherwise would be intolerable oppression? Is it not understood that if you will find a similarity in the protection of the jury-box from any intrusion from any cause you find in the very seclusion of it the necessity for the suppression of this or that form of message to prevent intrusion in any form upon the seclusion of the panel?

This proposed legislation is wholly uncalled for. Nothing is occurring here, nothing is occurring in the other House of Congress, that in the least is supposed to require any such enactment. It is true the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] has said, looking outside of this Chamber, imputing no such instances here, that there is—I use his own words—"a restless dissatisfaction or a vague fear." That is the nearest approach I have heard in the justification of this new legislation trespassing upon the line of the regulation of the conduct of Congressmen toward the action of Congress and the encroachment upon the liberty of citizens in the ordinary conduct of their affairs.

I have laid down all the citations from the statute book, and I had no intention of leaving out the provision about contracts with the Government which the Senator from Mississippi has very properly introduced into the matter. This measure is unprecedented by any of that legislation. I know that it is professed, and I know it may be felt that it is in some argumentative estimate and criterion of this new legislation, a step forward. If the existing legislative acts are based on the substantive and firm principle of actual delinquency and of actual danger in the service of the country, where do we find any warrant for a step that takes you entirely over the bound of dealing with innocent acts and dealing with the common conduct of members of society? There is the danger.

Is it enough for us to feel that there is a restless dissatisfaction and a vague fear? I do not speak with any disposition of disparaging public opinion even in the form of restless dissatisfaction and vague fear, but I do not find, and should not find if there were, in the minds and breasts of the members of this body or of the members of the House of Representatives what they could not define and solidify more clearly than "a restless dissatisfaction and vague fear." No measure has ever yet been passed in either House of Congress upon an opinion even in the members of the two Houses that there was in their own minds a restless dissatisfaction or a vague fear. They must find a substantial dissatisfaction and a sincere, and thorough, and sensible fear.

But conversant with what is occurring in the business of the country as it is committed to the two Houses of Congress, conversant with the members as surrounding us under the delegation of their respective States, the representation in the other House coming directly from the suffrage of the people in their respective districts, if our own judgment does not face us with any impending danger or any threatened or meditated mischief, there is not any reason why we should excuse our sober judgment which would direct us one way and accept as a basis for legislation a restless dissatisfaction and a vague fear somewhere else.

If the members of society who feel this restless dissatisfaction and this vague fear would devote their own attention and acquire the same knowledge that we possess on the subject, the same estimate of the mischief and the same estimate of the gravity of the enactment, I will venture to say that brought into conference among themselves and applying their own judgment to a deliberate discrimination and assertion of what they would insist upon, it would end in denouncing the bill presented by the Senator from Kentucky, and they would be entirely satisfied with the provision included in the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

I do not undertake to draw distinctions between the capacities or the integrity of those who are members of Congress and those who are not, and who are each in their own functions, each in their particular addiction, animating and influencing public opinion; but we can not part with our function, although they may with energy, with courage and intelligence, judge that there is need of legislative interference. It is our energy, our intelligence, and our courage that is to deal with the matter of placing on the statute-book of the United States a permanent inscription of law.

Besides this measure being entirely uncalled for and entirely unprecedented, it is entirely illusory. There is not any sensible, intelligent man in Congress or out of Congress who fears a corruption or a tendency to corruption that shall subject the free, unbiased action of members of Congress to the subjugation of the relation between attorney and client. There is not any man but who will say and will see that if there be corrupt desire on the part of any members of Congress or any lawyers, if they are to be treated in a more disparaging light as members of either body of Congress, or as the corrupting agents or the corrupting motives of the vast interests that touch the relations between great corporations, land grant or not land grant, so as to affect members of Congress in their action here, what a libel is such a bill as this, as if the open, and solid, and just, and right occasion by which the relations between client and lawyer should be established being denounced it would be a suppression of the "itching palm" of Senators or the extinction of the corrupting power of Senators. If you enter upon this legislation you must produce a situation of general opinion at least, to be accepted and acted upon here, that the body of lawyers are in the nature of their employment a disgraced body, a body of habitual criminals. There is the terror of this thing. Is it true that servility is the badge of all our functions? If we are to accept that attitude put on us, if we are ready to write as on frontlets between our eyes, servility as the badge, then indeed we can see that this act proposed does not rest on "restless dissatisfaction" or "vague fear," but that we are a recognized and described body of fellow-citizens who are to be followed by punitive legislation wherever we go.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I do not like to disturb the Senator from New York in his debate, but he is an old lawyer and it will not hurt him. Will he be kind enough to tell the Senate and the country wherein the substitute offered by the Judiciary Committee is an improvement on the bill I presented?

Mr. EVARTS. Certainly the Senator from Kentucky does not wish to interrupt me at this moment. I expect to consider that point when I take up the amendment, which I have not yet approached.

Mr. BECK. I did not wish to interrupt the Senator at any particular time, but he has seen fit as a member of the Judiciary Committee to make by a substitute any attack that we may assume to have been made on the legal profession infinitely worse than anything I ever ventured to suggest, and I want him to tell the Senate and the country, whenever he likes to do so, how far he has improved the measure I introduced by his substitute?

Mr. EVARTS. If the Senator from Kentucky had done me the honor to listen to my argument to-day he would not have had occasion to suppose that I imputed to him for one moment any motive or any purpose. Whatever I said about the bill in the aspect that I am now regarding it, which has recently engaged my attention, and but for a few minutes, is on the face of the section as pointed by the observations of the Senator from Mississippi; that this was all innocent conduct in itself, but that it was to be guarded against, because it had an opening and an opportunity for fraud and mischief.

Mr. BECK. Then I have to apologize to the Senator, because being a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and a member of the subcomittee having charge of the post-office appropriation bill, and the committee having met in full committee at half past 2, I was obliged to go out and to take part in seeking to perfect that bill; and so I missed a part of what the Senator said. I ought not to have interrupted him, having lost part of it.

Mr. EVARTS. The Senator from Kentucky will do me the credit of saying that neither in my manner nor in my observation did I show the least objection to his withdrawal from the Senate. I knew of his engagement, and I gave it as a reason why when in the order of my argument I should come to the topic to which he draws my attention it would then be in my way to consider it. I do not think any member of the two Houses of Congress will deny, I do not think that any vigilant critic and observer of public duty will deny that if there be a corrupt purpose and a corrupt wish on the side corrupting or on the side of the corrupted member, it is wholly illusory, and that is the topic with which I have engaged myself, and I shall dismiss it.

Mr. President, I shall enter on no encomium of the profession of the law. There is no other collection of men where there is so large a proportion of those who understand their profession, understand themselves, understand their relations to clients and the relations of clients to them. So if we do inscribe this enactment upon the permanent statute-book of the United States it will have been written by lawyers and about lawyers, and they can not escape the imputation of those who join in it that in their judgment, from what they know of lawyers and know of the relations between clients and lawyers, it is a class to be taken out from the rest of the community and separated from other members of the two Houses of Congress and reserved from the honorable and innocent conduct of their profession for fear that they may be drawn over the line of their duty. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON], I think it was, who said that this enactment would be a wise and judicious admonition to the bar and a safeguard to them against being overtaken in some unwary moment by an undue subserviency to the influence of corporations. Another form of expression used by, I think, both the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Arkansas, and certainly the Senator from Kentucky used the phrase, was of lawyers coming into the Senate with their clients' money in their pockets. Whose money is in their pockets in the innocent relations of attorneyship and great service by a great and noble profession to the needs of the community which was demanded in every form of their necessity and their danger and never denied to them? Will not the people of this country know what the lawyers are? And can any relation ever be more sacred than theirs because of the very honesty, the very fidelity, the very prudence, the very sanctity of their profession?

You may rely upon it that when a lawyer takes a fee from a land-grant railroad, or a company incorporated under the United States laws, that it is not of the true relation between attorney and client of honest compensation, of fair compensation, then he is on the very edge of taking, under the guise of compensation, what is denounced and is punishable, and is capable of punishment, under the bribery section of the statute. It is not less a bribery of the Senator from any State that, not occupying the relation of a lawyer giving service for a compensation, he takes the compensation without the service, and then appears in the Senate as a votary or a defender of wrong. He brings himself within the denunciation of bribery, taking, under the guise of compensation, what is no compensation for the lawyer's service, but is a payment under a shadow or an expectation or a fear that the corporation is buying something that is not matter of merchandise; that is the sale of a public trust.

But I repudiate the notion that when a lawyer has in his pocket the money that he has earned and received from his client, it is the client's money in the lawyer's pocket. What is it? Do we consider that the grocer, the butcher, or the baker, when he has his bill paid at the end of the month, goes about with his patron's money in his pocket? Then we go about with their bread and their beef in our health and our strength. Therefore my quarrel—if the Senator will allow me to say—is his talking about one thing and my talking about another. I am speaking of that which is dear to the rights of every lawyer in the interest of his client and in the interest of society; and not only for his own profession, but for all the employments of life. I contend that citizenship is not to be impinged upon because honest employment may lead to criminality. Shall we suppress the apothecary shop because poison is dealt out there? We punish for administering poison; but we do not say that the keeping of a shop for the sale of medical means of cure is to be prohibited because it is a cover for the sale of poison. We do not pass laws of that kind in the United States jurisdiction, not in the States, nor do the freer states of Europe. We long got out of that system by which a tyranny by terror and fear, moral and real, is set up for the control of actions by in terrorem legislation.

Mr. President, nothing that has been said here, on one side or the other, will in the least affect the judgment of lawyers about themselves, or of the community about lawyers. I will put it to any community, rural or city, if the lawyers have not the confidence of the community. They know that the lawyers know all their affairs, and I believe it is a general proposition that this widely diffused profession of the law in this great country, sooner or later, in its own neighborhoods, knows, under the confidence and trust reposed in it, all that may be hid and should be hid for the interests of society. But do lawyers see themselves under that guise and in that form in the attitude of hostility to the general interests of society? Every State in the Union, I imagine, certainly the great State that I have the honor, with my colleague, to represent, provides, in the interests of the administration of justice, which Burke has eloquently described as the main interest of all society, that the lawyer shall not be allowed to disclose anything that has passed in confidence between himself and client. Why is it?

We lawyers no less than the judges are servants of the law, and the primary and principal and essential duty is in the integrity and the intrepidity of the bar. Where is innocence defended? Where is power resisted? Certainly not by judges who originate and assume no jurisdiction, but in the courage and intrepidity of the profession of the law; and as I have said, strange as it may seem, this vestibule leading into the courts of justice must protect the relation between client and lawyer, because it is the first stage of the perfect administration of justice and the first department of the execution and maintenance of law.

So then, as I said, not as an encomium upon the profession of the law, those of us who have advanced in that profession to the dignity either of mere professional success or of prominence in public interest and in the public approval of the communities in which we live—and none else are here—know what lawyers are, and know whether there is anything in the history, or in the nature, or in the workings of the profession of the law that needs them to be set up and guarded, not by punishing them if they do wrong, but by punishing them for doing what is innocent and right, because there may be opportunities of cover and disguise to do wrong.

Mr. President, there is another suggestion in maintenance of this provision, unconnected with any question of morals. It has been insisted upon here that as lawyers, in common with other members of the two Houses, are paid $5,000 a year, they should withdraw from attention to anything but their business in the Senate and in the House of Representatives. Well, do railroad retainers draw men in that sense out of the Senate any more than commerce? If you are going to propose a bill applying to lawyers, if you think there is a difference between lawyers and other members of the body, for attending to their private interests and pursuits, make the distinction or apply it to all, and pass a law, not that they shall not take a fee from a railroad company, but that they shall not take a fee at all; that they shall not, between the 1st day of January and the 31st day of December, have their minds and thoughts and strength subtracted from the duties of the Senate.

This bill is not of that nature; and the proper place for such a provision is an amendment to the Constitution, a provision for compensation of the members of the two Houses of Congress. Put it there, $5,000 a year, and no one shall be at liberty during his membership of the body to pursue any individual trade, business, art, profession, or occupation. Then you would have it; then it would not be an aspersion of a great profession, nor would there be as great an aspersion of the great bodies of Congress; then with our eyes open we should know that all gain of merchandise, and of commerce, and of the liberal professions in all their forms was to be excluded from the means of subsistence.

How does the argument that we shall not be withdrawn from this body while in session apply to the eight or nine months from the 4th of March to the 1st of December next? Are we to be idle then?

Before I take up the next topic, which will be the constitutionality of this bill, I wish to call not the attention of the Senate, for it is well known to them, but the attention of those who shall do us the honor to consider our debates in the community at large, to the fact that not only have we firm and certain provisions of criminal law already on the statute-book, not only have we the clauses of the Constitution which give a dominion over all the members of the two Houses in the respective exercise of power by each House over the continuance and over the conduct of members, but we have recognized as a part of the parliamentary law which no one has ever disputed, what seems to be as thorough and as clear a recognition that it is regarded by this body, as no doubt by the House of Representatives, as a clear violation of propriety and of duty for a member to take part in any decision that affects the private interests of the member. Let me read from Jefferson's Manual:

> Where the private interests of a member are concerned in a bill or question he is to withdraw. And where such an interest has appeared, his voice has been disallowed, even after a division. In a case so contrary, not only to the laws of decency, but to the fundamental principle of the social compact, which denies to any man to be a judge in his own cause, it is for the honor of the House that this rule of immemorial observance should be strictly adhered to.

Where will you find a more rigid rule of morality, of decency, of the principles of the social compact? You can not find an instance of a parliamentary body, a house of bishops, any confederacy of the highest repute and honor in the world, that from immemorial usage has not adhered to the position which I have read. Is it not true now? Has it died out? Do we need criminal enactments, not against criminal conduct, but against freedom of action lest it should involve a contrariety or a diversity with duty. Now, duty to the country, duty to this Senate is the law that prevails here. We are not to be taunted with a need of obeying two masters. We can obey as our master the administration of the law when we are in fact in the attitude of servants of the law serving the needs of our clients and the court, and here we have our subservience to our duty to the country and the Senate under as rigorous a rule of demeanor as can be made by human ingenuity. And are we serving two masters when we serve the dignity of the law and the protection of the community in the courts, and when we protect them here also in the interest and the duty of a Senator of the United States to our constituents?

Away, then, with this plea! It is all a mere confusion of words and ideas. People are talking about one thing and denouncing it. We are defending another. What is this legislation? What is a corporation? What are these safeguards, and what are the mischiefs that are apprehended? It is in vain to think there can be any difference between the lawyers on the other side of this gangway and the lawyers on this if we inscribe this law. When we look to-morrow or another year for this notion of your apprehended dissatisfaction or vague fear, what answer have we to make to other professions and to the community outside of these Chambers that we with our own hands have inscribed this imputation, covering with shame with one breath this honorable profession and the dignity and glory of the Senate? Whatever may be the debate here, whatever may be the debate, the resistless debate, outside of the two Houses of Congress, it is we who will have written this inscription that servility is the badge of all our profession, and each one must answer for his own profession, for it can not be disguised that there is a feeling that induces men to exclaim absque argento omnia vana. Outside apprehensions and vague fears do not protect us when we bring face to face this action and the lawyers and are asked where we found the ground for a denunciation of this class among all the learned professions that they can not be trusted to decide between what is good and what is evil, submitting to the law to punish guilt, but expecting the protection of the law given to all men in what is innocent.

Now, I come to dispose of the question of constitutionality. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has exposed to the Senate what is the nature, what is the discrimination which I draw between the legislative acts that are now on the statute-book and this proposed legislation. We shall all agree that the only criminal jurisdiction of the United States is over legislation where it has control of the subject-matter. Whenever you approach a specific species of conduct before you can exercise your criminal control in punishment you must find that that subject-matter is committed to you. In every one of the sections that I have cited I have found that it is attributed to the United States jurisdiction in its criminal jurisprudence because of the necessity of it in the conduct and attitude of the action of the members of the two Houses, that the very matter is one that does touch upon it. Whenever you find that the corpus delicti is not adhering to the line of Federal jurisdiction it is an invasion and should be considered a very dangerous invasion either of the rights of the States or the rights of members that are not governed except by the regulation of the two Houses.

Where is the constitutional provision that gives the least jurisdiction to the United States here? It is quite true that we are members of the Senate; it is quite true that we are, in our relation as members of the legal profession, entirely outside the Federal jurisdiction at all, and that there is no part of our conduct as members of our profession that can come within the criminal jurisdiction of the United States for its far-reaching power. There is no such authority. There are many instances, we all know, where lawyers are brought within the jurisdiction of the criminal jurisprudence of the United States because the subject-matter is within the sphere of that jurisdiction. But this bill says:

> That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress to accept employment as attorney-at-law, or payment for services of any kind, from any railroad company, or any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States.

We are restrained from any jurisdiction of this criminal legislation as any other members of Congress, unless you make an exception of some kind to bring us within the Federal jurisdiction. Where is it? Do you find it in a statute relative to accepting bribes or engaging in furthering claims against the United States in the Court of Claims?

The very issue of this subject-matter is that you are prescribing regulation and punishment for the conduct of individual members of this body in their every-day duties and employments and honest and honorable avocations. How is it connected with their Senatorial duties? Because their conduct is invaded and controled and domineered over by Federal legislation, either because of requiring other qualifications in Senators than the Constitution has imposed or as restricting the ordinary and common rights of the community in regard to the particular services of lawyers, because if they are improperly in such employment there is an opportunity of proving crime under the existing statutes, but this is because of a suspicion that they might commit some impropriety!

The Senator from Kentucky asked me how the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary had improved the bill's denunciation of lawyers. It has not improved his bill at all, but it has admitted the logic of his bill and applied it discreetly and decorously and logically to other employments, and that wound that the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary has given to the bill has troubled the Senator from Kentucky. It has taken his logic and reduced it to an absurdity. The Senator denounced it as bringing ridicule and contempt on the profession. He even questioned the good taste of the members of the Judiciary Committee. Now you may read every clause here, and I defy him and challenge him to say that there is a clause here which is not according to the logic of his bill. I do not think any distinction can be made in regard to some of these matters, nothing can be drawn in the way of distinction between the principle of the measure as it came from the hands of the Senator from Kentucky except that you may say there is not any such occasion and is not any complaint, any restless apprehension about the other classes named in the amendment. I challenge the Senator to show the difference between any one of the clauses the Judiciary Committee has appended to that first clause to distinguish it from the operation of the first one except that there is some fear that somebody may think we may go too far in the ramifications of the principle of the Senator's bill.

Mr. President, I do not know any more how we can be governed by fear. I believe that a Government of fear is the worst Government in the world. It costs nothing to govern by fear. Fear is a base motive that makes cowards of all. Some may be afraid that if they do not persevere with energy against railroads, in the way of aspersion if not of restriction, they may suffer in the estimation of their falling short of duty. Others may fear that as some Senators think necessity and duty impel them, although they cannot be driven to do the act, yet they will be misjudged if they fail to respond to this call for action. From these two fears, one of active impulse and one of cowardly retreat, we are to have a bill passed when no justification for it is shown, and that is a violation of common propriety. If from the wise steps already taken by the sections I have cited from the statutes you can deduce the power to pass this bill, overlooking the discrimination I have pointed out, I should like to know why you can not argue from this bill when it becomes a law to any and every extent of dominion over private duty and conduct of members.

Why should we stop at lawyers? Why should we not include those who are in manufactures, and those who are in commerce, and those who are managing railroads, and those who own stock, and those who are interested in bonds? Where can you draw the line between the power and duty of criminal legislation by this Government and the private security and protection in honest employment of those who do not violate the rules of law or of justice?

Let us look at the operation of this limitation, this encroachment upon the freedom of the suffrage and the freedom of the representative. There are to be found in our Constitution firm lines that make this a free country. How? Because its function and law, the supreme law of the Constitution dominates over it, and then there can come into existence no other mode of dealing with rights except the law, and that law should be obedient to the laws of God and the rules of the Constitution. When you have laid down the proposition on which the constitutions of these two Houses are founded within the brief pages of the Constitution of the United States, you have said all and everything that can touch the question of the freedom of eligibility and the freedom of action; and if you can disparage this or that class from being open on the same terms with all others to the selection of the suffrage and to independence after coming here, then you have the beginning in principle, in mischief, and in danger of encroachment on the freedom of the suffrage and the independence of the judiciary.

Now, let me call attention to the energy and the perspicacity and the circumspection with which these two Houses of Congress are recognized in two sections of the Constitution of the United States in the establishment of these two great bodies resting upon free suffrage and how they are limited. There is a clause in the constitution of New York, solemn and formal (and in how many other States I do not know), and it is a proper arrangement in the view and purpose of that State in which they were obliged to legislate in the shape of constitutional clauses, and the tribunal that judges of the elections of Senators has determined that this was an encroachment on the firm, clear, absolute freedom in the mode of filling these chairs which was not to be encroached upon even by wise and politic and prudent arrangements in the constitutions of the States. I read from the constitution of the State of New York:

> No member of the Legislature shall receive any civil appointment within this State, or to the Senate of the United States, from the governor, the governor and senate, or from the Legislature during the time for which he shall have been elected; and all such appointments and all votes given for any such member for any such office or appointment shall be void.

And yet when the Legislature meets in the State of New York to choose a Senator, under the instruction from the determination of this body that that is foreign to the freedom of the Senate established by the Constitution, it may pay no attention to this clause of its State constitution. I do not know that anybody has ever been elected who came within that regulation, but I know that several times votes have been cast for such persons without any hesitation.

Then, Mr. President, to conclude, I must think that a proper examination of this bill will show that it is entirely uncalled for, that it is unprecedented, that it is illusory, that it is unconstitutional; and that to restrict our employment, unless we come within the inculpation of the criminal legislation of the Government of the United States, based on its jurisdiction from connection with our duty in Congress in reference to what is binding and what is a part of the action of the United States Government, is, as I have said, entirely unconstitutional.

If we wish to denounce permanently all general engagements which enlist the lawyer in the general service of one of these corporations, let that legislation exclude those occupying that relation from participating in the votes or decisions before the Senate. If you think it important for the public interest that that should be prescribed, let them prescribe that, for it will not offend the sense of freedom or of morality by classifying such an agreement as is specified as being in itself an adequate and suitable reason for infringing the proper freedom of action, that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] has offered. Do not allow any vague fear, any restless general apprehensions, to carry us beyond any necessary exaction or constraint on the ordinary freedom of citizens.

I have endeavored to bring attention to existing legislation and to the very features which distinguish this bill from that. I have endeavored to point out a transgression of the primary principles of legislation in a free country which is to suppress innocence and not to guard against danger of corruption, and I have pointed out that if we enact this measure it will be our own accusation, our accusation of the Senate, and our accusation of our profession, and then when we look for vouchers or instigators of these imputations outside of this Chamber, we shall find nobody that will take the responsibility.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-four minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House requested the Senate to return to the House the message announcing that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8869) granting a pension to Mrs. Henrietta M. Drum Hunt.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1536) for the purchase of suitable grounds in the city of Owensborough, in the State of Kentucky, and the erection thereon of a public building for the post-office, United States collector's office, United States commissioner's office, and for the use of other United States officers in said city, and appropriating money for said purposes, with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 10203) to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to make a special distribution of seeds in the drought-stricken counties of Texas, and making an appropriation therefor; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

HENRIETTA M. DRUM HUNT.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the bill mentioned by the House in the message, House bill 8869, be returned in compliance with the request of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. BLAIR submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, to report it with amendments, and I give notice that I shall call it up at an early day.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT OWENSBOROUGH, KY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1536) for the purchase of suitable grounds in the city of Owensborough, in the State of Kentucky, and the erection thereon of a public building for the post-office, United States collector's office, United States commissioner's office, and for the use of other United States officers in said city, and appropriating money for said purposes, which was in section 1, line 20, after the word "therein," to insert:

Nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site, nor plan for said building, shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $50,000 for site and building; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was concurred in.

HOURS OF SITTING.

Mr. CALL submitted the following resolution for consideration; which was ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That, for the remainder of the session, the Senate will convene at 11 o'clock a. m. and, with a recess of one hour, will continue in session until 9 p. m.

Mr. MILLER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 4, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate the 3d day of February, 1887.

POSTMASTERS.

Robinson M. Jones, to be postmaster at Chico, Butte County, California, vice Jo Davis Sproul, resigned.

George C. Middlebrook, to be postmaster at Millbank, Grant County, Territory of Dakota, vice Alfred H. Lewis, whose commission expires February 5, 1887.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 3, 1887.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. Dr. BULLOCK, of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. DAVIS, of Massachusetts, by way of a correction of the Journal, perhaps, desires to have it stated that with reference to the report of the Committee on Commerce on the bill H. R. 10347, in relation to the boundaries of the fourth collection district of Virginia, he dissented from the report made by the majority of the committee, and asks consent to file the views of the minority.

The SPEAKER. The statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts will go into the RECORD; and if there be no objection the gentleman's colleague will be permitted to file his views dissenting from the report of the committee hereafter.

The Journal was then approved.

ESTIMATES, CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the estimates of the Civil Service Commission for appropriations for additional force for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

METROPOLITAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a report of the receipts and expenditures of the Metropolitan Railroad Company of Washington, in the District of Columbia, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL COPY OF ENGROSSED BILL.

The SPEAKER also directed the reading of the following communication from the Senate:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 2, 1887.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to furnish the House of Representatives, in compliance with their request, a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Clerk of the House will be directed to re-engross the bill so as to include the amendments adopted by the House, and make the proper official indorsements upon the same, and again inform the Senate of the action of the House thereupon.

Mr. RANDALL. This is the bill which was lost during the recess?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that this is a bill which passed the Senate and came to the House, where it was amended by agreeing to a substitute for the bill. Thereupon a committee of conference was appointed, but before their report was made the original engrossed copy of the bill was lost or mislaid.

The Senate has now transferred to the House another engrossed copy of the bill as it passed that body originally, and the order suggested by the Chair is to cause it to be engrossed as it passed the House and return it to the Senate in that form.

Mr. RANDALL. That would be the final engrossment of the bill as it passed the House?

The SPEAKER. It would.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be re-engrossed as amended and transmitted to the Senate.

MRS. HENRIETTA M. DRUM HUNT.

The SPEAKER announced as the managers on the part of the House at a conference to be held on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 8869) granting a pension to Mrs. Henrietta M. Drum Hunt, Mr. SCOTT, Mr. ELDREDGE, and Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. WAKEFIELD, for one week, on account of sickness in his family.

EXPLANATION.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday while the bill with reference to Congressional funerals was under consideration I made a statement upon information which I had then, in which perhaps I did injustice to certain gentlemen who were appointed upon a committee not long since to attend the funeral of a deceased member. I used the following language:

During this present session, if I am correctly informed, a committee was appointed to attend the funeral of one of our members (a gentleman for whom I had great respect and whose memory I revere), and the members of that committee, on account of the great distance, the inclemency of the weather, and the inconvenience of leaving their business here, actually declined to go.

I am informed, sir, that the reason why that committee failed to attend the funeral was not as I stated, but from an intimate knowledge they had obtained of the well-known opposition of the deceased member during his lifetime, and I refer to my friend, the late lamented Mr. PRICE, of Wisconsin, to Congressional funeral committees. I deem it but just to the gentlemen on that committee to make this explanatory statement.

Mr. CASWELL. Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to add in this connection that it was ascertained the funeral would occur before the committee could reach the place of holding it. I will also add at the suggestion of my colleague upon the committee [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], that they were prepared and had all arrangements made to go to attend the funeral until this discovery was made.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT OWENSBOROUGH, KY.

Mr. LAFFOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1536) and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to purchase suitable grounds in the city of Owensborough, in the State of Kentucky, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable public building, with a fire-proof vault extending to each story, for the post-office, United States collector's office, United States commissioner's office, and for the use of other United States officers in said city. The cost of the site, and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed $50,000: Provided, That no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the grounds for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Kentucky shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil processes therein.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $50,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used and expended in the purchase of said grounds and the erection of said building.

The committee recommend the following amendment to the Senate bill:

After the word "therein," at the end of section 1, add the following:

"Nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site, nor plan for said building, shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $50,000 for site and building; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to ask whether the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds had this bill under consideration and reported thereon?

Mr. LAFFOON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROWS. What is the population of this place?

Mr. LAFFOON. Fifteen thousand.

Mr. BURROWS. Are there United States courts there?

Mr. LAFFOON. No, sir. There is not a United States court within 150 miles of that place; but we want one, and can not have it without a public building.

Mr. BURROWS. The gentleman says the population is 15,000 and there is no United States court there. What is the public building to be used for?

Mr. LAFFOON. For the post-office, United States collector's office, United States commissioner's office, and for other Federal offices in that city.

Mr. BURROWS. I would like to make an inquiry of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I have had a bill referred to that committee for constructing a public building in my city where the population is 20,000, and where there is a United States commissioner and all the offices mentioned here. Why has not that bill been reported?

Mr. JAMES. The committee will get to that bill in good time.

Mr. LAFFOON. The bill of the gentleman from Michigan will no doubt come out all right.

Mr. BURROWS. I would like to know on what principle the committee is acting.

Mr. TAULBEE. Wait till we get this bill through.

Mr. BURROWS. I shall not object to this bill; but I desire to have my bill reported.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LAFFOON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STORM. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask leave to present hereafter the report in writing required by the rules.

There was no objection, and the report was ordered to be printed, when filed.

Mr. MILLS. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 3052) to extend the time for filing claims in the Court or Claims under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to July 31, 1801;" which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. ROGERS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with adverse recommendations bills of the following titles; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 10209) to enable the people to name their postmasters;

A bill (H. R. 10150) to amend section 714 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (H. R. 10386) for the redistribution of unclaimed money in bankrupt and receivers' estates; and

A bill (H. R. 10997) to amend section 9 of chapter 341 of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 23.

Mr. ROGERS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, also reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. 10695) to regulate the prosecutions against Indians for crimes committed in the Territories.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire that this bill shall go on the House Calendar.

The bill was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. 10003) to amend section 3220 of the Revised Statutes; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. EDEN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. 10519) relating to limitations in criminal cases; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

S. D. BARCLAY AND OTHERS.

Mr. CULBERSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 10794) for the relief of S. D. Barclay, G. D. Adams, and William H. Kimbrough; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. ELLSBERRY (by Mr. LOVERING), from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with an adverse recommendation bills of the following titles; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 9963) granting a pension to Jacob Crosly; and

A bill (H. R. 9580) granting a pension to C. H. McWethy.

ELIZABETH RICE.

Mr. ELDREDGE, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 2216) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth Rice; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. ELDREDGE, from the Committee on Pensions, also reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. 10764) granting pensions to the dependent relatives of the members of the Life-Saving Service who were lost at Virginia Beach January 8, 1887.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask that this bill be placed on the Private Calendar.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

NEHEMIAH OSBURN.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 9252) for the relief of Nehemiah Osburn; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ROBLEY D. EVANS AND RICHARD M. GREEN.

Mr. FLEEGER, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 1361) for the relief of Robley D. Evans and Richard M. Green; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ALBERT GREENLEAF.

Mr. SHAW, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 11029) for the relief of Albert Greenleaf; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WINDSOR HOTEL COMPANY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEARD, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 2761) to incorporate the Windsor Hotel Company of the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. DOCKERY, the Committee on Accounts was discharged from the further consideration of resolutions directing the Clerk of the House to make certain payments to Joseph A. Woodsworth, William Tyler Page, Robert Dougherty, Noah W. Halley, and Samuel J. Long; and the resolutions were severally referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

On motion of Mr. SPOONER, the Committee on Accounts was discharged from the further consideration of a resolution directing the Clerk of the House to pay Charles Holbrook, out of the contingent fund of the House, for services as laborer from July 1, 1886, to August 5, 1886, inclusive; and the same was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORT OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

Mr. FARQUHAR, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with favorable recommendation joint resolution (S. R. 94) ordering the printing of the annual report of the National Academy of Sciences, with the accompanying memoirs; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EDWIN L. JEWELL.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back, with favorable recommendation, a House resolution authorizing the Clerk of the House to pay out of the contingent fund to Edwin L. Jewell, assistant index clerk of the House, the sum of $240, being the amount of his salary from December 6, 1886, to January 15, 1887; and, in accordance with the recommendation of the report, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The call of the standing and select committees for reports is now completed. The hour for the consideration of bills begins at fifteen minutes before 1 o'clock. The call rests with the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 10078.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I make the point of order that that bill must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole, as it requires an appropriation of money.

Mr. OATES. That requirement was dispensed with yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The House, by unanimous consent, yesterday discharged the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the consideration of this bill.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I introduced this bill because I was convinced of the necessity for some such enactment. It was not for my own convenience or benefit, because, by the favor of the Speaker in the last Congress and in this, I have had the good fortune to be chairman of a committee which has given me the assistance of a clerk. I know, however, from my own experience that if a member of Congress undertakes to perform the drudgery of attending to the interests and requests of his constituents before the Departments, and of giving prompt answer to the letters which he receives touching public business, he will have no time for the study of important questions of legislation, unless he is a gentleman of much more extraordinary capacity than any within my knowledge. As I have stated in the report, as succinctly as I possibly could and upon the floor, the reasons why I think this measure should pass the House, I will now ask that the report be read, and will beg the attention of gentlemen to the reasons for the bill therein set forth.

The report (see page 1303) of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD) was then read.

Mr. OATES. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CALDWELL].

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, no more delicate duty could be devolved upon a Representative of the people than to be called upon by any act or vote to increase his own compensation or patronage, or to give to himself any additional perquisite beyond those which were attached to the office at the time of his election. My idea of the trust of this office of Representative is that the only way in which any gentleman would be authorized to vote to grant to himself any additional patronage or perquisite of office would be by having first canvassed the matter before his constituents at the time he was honored with election to a seat here. If it were an original question—if this Congress were called upon for the first time to fix the compensation of its members—then gentlemen would have been elected with full knowledge on the part of their constituents that that was one of the questions on which they would have to vote. But such not being the case, I say that the only way in which any Representative of the people can be justified in voting for this increased compensation—because it is nothing more nor less than that—is by having first submitted the question to the people who elected him.

The only contingency I can see in which any Representative would be justified in voting for this measure would be, as I have said, after canvassing the question with his constituents and after they had sent him here with a full knowledge that he intended so to vote.

A MEMBER. How would he ascertain their views?

Mr. CALDWELL. Why, let him get the expression of the convention that nominates him, or the expression that comes from the people at the ballot-box. When he is making the canvass of his district let it be understood that he is to be voted for with this as a part of his platform. No man on this floor, at any rate no Democrat, is authorized to vote, under present circumstances, for any such increase either of patronage or of pay. The platform upon which the Democratic party came into power was retrenchment and reform, and a return of this Government to "Jeffersonian simplicity." I want to know whether it is "retrenchment" to add three hundred and twenty officers to the present list of Government employés. I want to know whether it is "reform" to reach out and grasp patronage which does not belong to us. I want to know whether it is "retrenchment" or "reform" to add to the burdens of the people a quarter of a million dollars per annum. I want to know whether it is a return to "Jeffersonian simplicity." I say it is not.

Why, gentlemen, in passing such a bill as this you are putting between yourselves and your constituents a body servant—"a bright and active young man" to attend to your duties at the Departments. And I tell you your constituents will conclude that if your business can not be attended to in person at the Departments, if you are not "bright and active" enough to do it yourselves, they had better leave you at home and send the bright young man here.

Further, on the question of "Jeffersonian simplicity;" a return to that administration of the Government which kept the Democratic party in power for half a century before the war and which has returned them after twenty-five years of exile upon the cold and barren promontory of defeat, I say that those sound principles of administration are violated by interposing between the people and their representatives any sort of shadow or makeshift such as this. It puts me in mind of an aristocratic doctor who would take off his gloves to feel the pulse of a rich man, who would feel the pulse of a poor man with his gloves on, and who would feel the pulse of the poor negro with his walking-stick. [Laughter.] What would you do under such a bill as this? You would send your bright young man to do what you ought to do before the Departments. As a special act of grace you would with your own hand write to a favored constituent; to the ordinary man you would dictate a letter in the handwriting of your clerk, with your lordly signature affixed at the bottom; but as to the poor common fellow, you would communicate with him through the medium of the type-writer.

I say, Mr. Speaker, whatever others may think of this measure, I see in it disaster to Representatives here; I see in it the grave of the Democratic party; and I invoke the voice of the people's representatives against thus burying that grand old party.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CALDWELL. One minute more. I say that if there is any power left in the veto hand of the President, he will bury this measure, if passed, under the trip-hammer of his veto, rather than bury himself and his party by approving it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BRUMM (to Mr. CALDWELL). Have you not a clerk as chairman of the Electoral Count Committee?

Mr. CALDWELL. I have.

Mr. BRUMM. Does he not do your private business?

Mr. CALDWELL. That is none of your business.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

CLERKS TO SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. OATES. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to what I suppose to be a question of order. I wish to inquire in what manner the time is being divided.

Mr. OATES. I am dividing the time.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House the gentleman from Alabama has control of one hour. After that some other gentleman would be entitled to recognition; but the consideration of the bill under this order will cease at the expiration of one hour.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman will allow the time to be equally divided.

Mr. OATES. I am dividing the time.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise to advocate this bill, simply because I believe it to be right and necessary. I am one of those who have the courage of their convictions and are ready to vote for what they deem to be right, and not merely to bow to public clamor. I believe that none of my constituents who thoroughly understand this matter would refuse to indorse my vote in favor of this bill. I apprehend that on this question other members are in a similar situation to my own. I represent a population of almost 200,000, embracing 35,000 to 40,000 voters. We all understand that the general business which is to be transacted here in Congress, with the numerous bills presented, which should receive the careful consideration of every member, is, undoubtedly, sufficient to occupy the entire time and attention of any of us. But besides attending to this branch of our duties many of us are in constant correspondence with constituents for whom there is always business to be attended to at the various Departments of the Government in this city. Now, can we say that this is none of our legitimate duty, that we will throw it all aside and not attend to it?

Certainly no members are going to do that. We can not do it. We are sent to represent the people, and I say it is to the interest of our constituents that each member of this body should have a clerk. Undoubtedly he has clerical work enough to occupy his time and attention, and to occupy all of his time.

This House has decided this is so. As to the Senators at the other end of the Capitol we have voted for this same thing time and again. Different Congresses have done so. Does anybody pretend to say that is not right, that those clerks are not necessary to be employed? Does any one pretend to say that members of the House have not as much labor to perform, as many bills to examine, and as large responsibility lying on their shoulders as the Senators at the other end of the Capitol? We have indorsed it, and the people do not complain of it.

Are we going to vote against this because we fear it will raise a clamor or something of that kind? Are we going to vote against it because the newspapers will clamor against it?

I am in favor of this bill, Mr. Speaker, not for personal interest. I will receive no personal benefit from it. I am not a member of the Fiftieth Congress. I hope my successor will represent my people as well as I have tried to do. [Applause.] And unless he has more than ordinary brain and more than ordinary physical power he can not do it without the assistance of a clerk, unless he works himself to death. [Applause.] If any of my constituents could follow me from morning till night around the different departments attending to the different requests which come up to me, and then attending the sessions of the House from 12 o'clock until 5 or 6 o'clock in the evening, and then afterwards follow me to my home where I am kept until midnight answering the correspondence which I have received, I tell you, sir, they would say if they knew it all that a clerk is needed; that the work requires it.

If necessary we should take the responsibility, and when we do what is right our constituents will indorse us every time. Certainly the work imposed upon a member of Congress does require the service of a clerk. We all admit the necessity. We all admit we need such services, and why not get up and vote for these clerks if we think this proposition is right? If we do not think it is right, and the work is not to be done, then do not do it. In all my votes I have the courage of my conviction, and vote as I believe to be right. Therefore I am for the pending proposition, and I apprehend the House will take the same view of it and pass the bill as reported from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. [Applause.]

Mr. OATES. I now yield for three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER].

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I hope this bill is not going to be put through by whip and spur under the gag of the previous question, preventing discussion——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama has yielded to the gentleman from Ohio for three minutes.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, what are clerks to members of Congress for? Certainly not to help them in the discharge of their legislative duties. Clerks can be little or no help to members of Congress in the discharge of such duties. It is, then, to aid them in the discharge of private business—that sort of business that is thrust upon them by those having claims of one kind or another, in other words, private and not public business.

Now, sir, what is most needed is to curtail this private business which members of Congress are now called upon to do. They ought not to have it to do. They are now often made mere employment agents to help persons to places—claim agents to do business at the various departments of the Government—pension agents, patent agents, and claim agents for all kinds of claims; and their efficiency and usefulness as legislators is in a large measure destroyed by demands of this kind upon them. Now the clerks proposed in this bill would become claim-agent attachments to members of Congress, and would be so considered. A member then might properly sign himself M. C. and C. A.—member of Congress and claim agent. [Laughter.] It would be notice to the whole country that every member of Congress has a claim agent attached to him and you will please send all your claims to him to be prosecuted at the public expense instead of to claim agents at your own expense. [Laughter.]

Bad as the claim-agents business has become, and abused as it often is, I nevertheless regard it as the lesser evil of the two. Better these than three hundred and twenty-five claim agents attached to as many members of Congress, for that is what this bill means and nothing else. If it is not that, then it will amount to giving salaries to sons, nephews, or nieces who want to spend their time in Washington. Or, possibly, to some one to act as "home correspondent" to tell constituents, through the local press, how great a man they have representing them, and how tremendously he and his clerk are working for them. The secondary effect of creating three hundred and twenty-five claim-agent attachments will be to double up the private business before Congress. It will be brought from the departments to the House as fast as three hundred and twenty-five active men anxious to serve their employers can bring it here, until the House becomes little more than an "annex" to the departments for adjudicating private claims. Better, Mr. Speaker, divest members of Congress altogether of the duty of acting as claim agents in the prosecution of private claims and provide some other machinery, perhaps State agents. At any rate take it from members of Congress and leave them to attend to the public duties they were elected to perform. Do not invite more by providing for three hundred and twenty-five claim agents to be attached to so many members of Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ask my friend from Ohio if it is not true, as a matter of fact, that this is simply an increased compensation for members of Congress?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Yes; but I think it is something more than that; it is an invitation besides to the public to send to him all the private business anybody may have to be attended to at the public expense.

That is the objectionable feature of the bill, in my judgment, and I oppose it on that ground. If it is not that, then, as the gentleman from Indiana says, it is an indirect way of increasing the salaries of members. I say relieve members of Congress of that kind of business; provide some other way to have the private business of constituents attended to without requiring all the time of a member of Congress and a clerk too, as will be the case under this bill. If left to attend to public and legislative duties as they should be, and must be if they are expected to attend properly to these, and not have their time frittered away on private matters, members of Congress would need no clerks, for clerks in such matters can be of little or no use to them. Clerks would then be of no more use than a footman or a liveried servant. For these reasons I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. If a constituent writes you about an office, do you send his letter back to him unanswered?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. No, sir; but I answer such letters myself.

Mr. OATES. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to speak from an experience of twenty-six years, and I may be permitted to say that year after year I have paid from my poor salary $900 for such services as I have had to perform, and services of which the gentleman from Ohio can show no means of divesting members. I have for two years of my service enjoyed the privileges of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CALDWELL], who opposes with so much vigor the bill; that is to say, I was chairman of a committee that had a clerk, and that privilege saved me my $900 a year. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CALDWELL. There is no law compelling you to come back, or to stay after you got here. You could resign at any time.

Mr. KELLEY. I am at this very day using the service of a gentleman to whom I pay $100 a month out of my poor salary of $5,000; and I believe if my constituents knew the sacrifices I have made to serve them they would shock the public sense by making up a fund and reimbursing me, for they know I have not paid out that sum of money for my own service, but for theirs. Nor do I want a clerk to help me to get offices, for in 1868 my response was, to as flattering an invitation as ever man received requesting the withdrawal of a refusal of a renomination—my answer was, "not if I am to be regarded as an appointment agent." If they would put it into the platform that I should not be expected to administer or seek to administer the minor employments of the Government I would take it; and for eighteen years they have elected me with increasing majorities because they find me serving the general interests of the people and leaving the distribution of the offices to the care of those to whom the Constitution and the laws confide them.

There is not a man on this floor who ought not to have the right to draw, on behalf of his constituents, a competent salary during the sessions of Congress for a man to perform those duties which few of us have the physical ability to perform in connection with our duties to our constituents and to the people of this country.

With a clerk and a competent one, a phonographer and type-writer, a gentleman familiar with the routine of the departments, I came here at noon to-day exhausted by a hard day's labor dealing with my correspondence brought to me through the post-office here to-day; and when night comes instead of finding rest, my clerk, the agent of my constituents, will be there ready to earn his portion of his $100 a month. We can not rid ourselves of these private duties if we would, and we should not if we could. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. OATES. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the pending measure ought to be considered merely as one providing for an increase of the pay of members of Congress. Of course, sir, gentlemen find it necessary during the current sessions of Congress to spend a part of their salary in employing clerical assistance, but such is not the case now any more than it was in former years—for the employment of clerical assistance in their correspondence and sometimes in making researches into public questions has always been, or at least for many years past, to a greater or less extent inevitable. That, I think, has been the experience of all members of Congress now in this House without regard to the periods in which they served.

But the question is whether or not, in view of the salary now paid to members of Congress, a member of the House or Senate can not very well afford to incur this expense without casting it upon the Treasury. Let us look for a moment how rapidly we are progressing, and it should be remembered that the measure of economy on the part of the Government, in the House and in Senate, will be the measure of public expenditures and the measure of economy throughout all departments of the Government.

Thirty-two years ago the pay of a member of Congress was $8 a day.

Mr. EDEN. And during the session.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, as my friend suggests, $8 per day during the session. Twenty-two years ago, the year the late war closed, when the cost of living was greater than it is at the present time, and when the correspondence of a member of Congress was as great as now, the pay was $3,000 a year.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. With potatoes at 10 cents a bushel and board $3 a week. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir, the gentleman is mistaken in that respect. The cost of living was much higher then than now. In 1865–'66, right on the heels of the war, when the cost of living in this city was nearly twice as much as it is to-day, the salary of a member of Congress was $3,000. It advanced to $5,000, and yet some gentlemen think that we can not afford to pay out of this advanced salary—this largely increased salary over that received by our predecessors—the small amount necessary to obtain clerical assistance to aid us in performing some of the duties which are incumbent upon us here. I wish gentlemen to observe that the pay of a member of Congress has been increased from $8 per day during the session to $5,000 per year within thirty-two years—a single generation.

Mr. BRUMM. Has the gentleman from Indiana himself a clerk, as chairman of a subcommittee?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not a clerk.

Mr. BRUMM. Do you not have the use of one?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not had one except what I paid for myself.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. OATES. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY].

Mr. DOUGHERTY. There are two reasons especially which induce me to vote in favor of this bill. There are other reasons which the limited time at my disposal will not permit me to state to this House. I should be better satisfied if the bill were amended in one respect, and if in order at any time during the discussion, I will submit an amendment that this act, if it should become a law, shall not take effect until the convening of the Fifty-first Congress, so that these members of the Forty-ninth Congress who are to be members of the Fiftieth Congress shall not be exposed to the suspicion of having voted to increase their own pay. But if this bill can not be passed with such an amendment and if it is necessary that its provisions shall apply to the members of the Fiftieth Congress, even then I shall vote for it for the reasons which I will now endeavor to give as briefly as possible.

The first reason is that it is an utter impossibility without this assistance for any member of this House to give to the duties, which the business of his constituents require him to attend to, that attention which those interests deserve, and also to find the time which is necessary to enable him to inform himself in reference to the public questions that he is called to vote upon as a member of this House.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OATES. I yield the gentleman from Florida one minute more.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. If I performed all the duties required at my hands by my constituents and performed those duties as my constituents have the right to have them attended to, I never would be able to attend a session of the House. That, then, is one reason which will induce me to vote for this bill, that I can give more attention to the duties which the people of the State of Florida require shall be performed by me, and in order that their business may be more satisfactorily attended to by those who shall succeed me here.

The other reason is that at every session of Congress for years, as the record shows, a Senate amendment to an appropriation bill has come here which practically increases the salaries of Senators by allowing them clerks, and after a show of objection the House, though controlling the purse-strings, backs down and agrees to the amendment. Now, I am not willing to admit that any Senator performs his duty any more earnestly and conscientiously than I do, and I do not believe he is entitled to any compensation more than that which is accorded to me as a member of this House. I know of no duty which those statesmen in the other end of the Capitol are called upon to perform other than that performed by Representatives of the people, except it be the self-imposed one of filling the sinecure places under the Government with their "brothers, their sisters, their cousins, and their aunts," and other blood relations and protégés.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. OATES. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. TURNER. I should not have asked the indulgence of the House on this occasion at all if it had not been that on account of being a member of the committee which reported this bill I had a sort of immediate responsibility for the report. I want to put in a disclaimer, Mr. Speaker, for any responsibility for the opinions contained in that report, although I have the highest respect for the gentleman who is chairman of the committee, and whose wishes I regret very much to antagonize.

I want to say, in the first place, Mr. Speaker, that it is no new thing for me to be reminded that the position of a member of Congress is not a sinecure. It is full of arduous and difficult and embarrassing duties. But I submit, sir, that it is hardly consistent with our party professions that we should commit ourselves to a measure which is intended to increase our own allowances.

In the second place, I want to say that the record we have made as a party on this question and on the amendments put by the Senate on our appropriation bills proposing compensation for clerks for Senators requires, if we are consistent with that record, that we should adhere firmly to the policy of resistance to which we dedicated ourselves even as early as the Forty-seventh Congress. I remember when gentlemen on both sides of this Hall stood together to a man determined to resist that measure which the Senate put upon our appropriation bills, even to the extent of incurring the hazard of a prolongation of the session or even of an extra session. Now, I ask is it exactly fair to ourselves in committing ourselves to this proposed measure of increasing our own allowances when we are unable to resist the Senate to embark ourselves in the same measure and give ourselves the allowances which we denounced when proposed for those at the other end of the Capitol?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Does not my friend remember that the burden of our complaint and the main ground of our opposition was that they had and we had not this allowance?

Mr. TURNER. The gentleman from Ohio is too familiar with the powers of this House not to know that if we had dared to incur the responsibility for that sort of thing we could have proposed an amendment to the Senate amendment by which we could have given ourselves the same allowance.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But we had not the courage of our convictions, that is all.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. OATES. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN].

Mr. CURTIN. If I know anything of the spirit and disposition of my countrymen I think I am not mistaken in the assertion that the American people are not fond of small things or little economy. I have been a member of Congress for some time; and, as my distinguished colleague from Philadelphia stated of himself, my life here has been taken up in labors greater than I ever incurred in the practice of my profession. From early morning until I come here at 12 o'clock I am engaged; I have engagements also for the evening, and I could not perform the duties which devolve upon me without assistance. I have employed and paid assistants, paid them regularly, and I could not perform my duties without them, and would scarcely have an opportunity to read or reflect upon the measures coming before this House.

But now, Mr. Speaker, I am going out of Congress. I shall have nothing to do with the next Congress, except to give it my support as a private American citizen, and in leaving this Hall I do not wish to yield to any small legislation or to condescend to any demagogism, but I desire to fire one stern gun in favor of those who come after me. [Applause.]

Mr. OATES. It is impossible, Mr. Speaker, in the short time that I have to allow opportunity to all the gentlemen who wish to express themselves on this subject, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that members who see proper to do so be allowed to print their remarks in the RECORD.

A MEMBER. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. OATES. Then, Mr. Speaker, I only desire in conclusion to correct an error which my friend from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] committed, unintentionally I have no doubt. I understood him to characterize the opposition which this House made to the appropriation adopted by way of amendment in the Senate for the pay of clerks allowed to Senators as a partisan opposition. I did not so understand it.

Mr. TURNER. If the gentleman refers to me, I beg to correct him. I said that both sides united in opposition to that amendment.

Mr. OATES. Then, Mr. Speaker, I merely wish now to call attention to the fact that the Senators for whom those clerks are provided, with the assent of the House each year, are Senators who are not chairmen of committees, and that they are the Democratic Senators. Now, sir, I was inclined to offer an amendment to this bill so that there could not possibly be any doubt as to its meaning. It provides that "from and after the approval of this act," &c., and I thought that language might possibly be misconstrued to apply to the present Congress, but, as I have no real apprehension of any such misconstruction, and as the bill is not intended to apply to the present Congress, and, if approved at all, will probably not be approved much before the adjournment of this Congress, I do not think any amendment necessary; and I now move the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. EDEN. I move that the bill be laid on the table, and on that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, let us have the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 142, nays 105, not voting 71; as follows:

So the motion to lay the bill on the table was agreed to.

Mr. NEECE. I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LITTLE]. Were I not paired, I should vote ay.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. BENNETT with Mr. PERKINS, until Saturday next.

Mr. LE FEVRE with Mr. IKE H. TAYLOR, on this vote.

Mr. NEECE with Mr. LITTLE, on this vote.

The following-named members were announced as paired until further notice:

Mr. BYNUM with Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois, with Mr. NEGLEY.

Mr. MAHONEY with Mr. WAKEFIELD.

Mr. BALLENTINE with Mr. JOHNSON, of New York.

Mr. CANDLER with Mr. BUNNELL.

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. WADE.

Mr. REAGAN with Mr. HISCOCK.

Mr. BACON with Mr. PARKER.

Mr. BLAND with Mr. DAVENPORT.

Mr. ROGERS with Mr. O'DONNELL.

Mr. COX, of New York, with Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana.

The following-named members were announced as paired for this day:

Mr. BELMONT with Mr. DINGLEY.

Mr. SADLER with Mr. THOMPSON.

Mr. COMSTOCK with Mr. ATKINSON.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia; with Mr. HANBACK.

Mr. ELLSBERRY with Mr. WHITING.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. EDEN. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, and also to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of bills under this order has expired.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, the sundry civil appropriation bill has been returned from the Senate with various amendments. I ask unanimous consent that the bill, with the amendments, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 10203) to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to make a special distribution of seeds in the drought-stricken counties of Texas, and making an appropriation therefor; when the Speaker signed the same.

PLEURO-PNEUMONIA.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the special order, the pleuro-pneumonia bill.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to raise the question of consideration on that bill.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] is in order. The only way to defeat it is to vote it down.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to call up another special order, the bill to increase the efficiency of the Army.

The SPEAKER. The special order called up by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] has priority over that which the gentleman from Indiana desires to call up.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to inquire whether the bill which the gentleman from Missouri wants to call up is older than the order under which he makes this motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know; but that order covers all business which may be presented by the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. STEELE. Then that committee is in a position to antagonize everything else until the close of the session.

The SPEAKER. Except those matters which are specified in the order as having priority.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HATCH, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. BLOUNT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the further consideration of the pleuro-pneumonia bill. The pending question is on an amendment offered yesterday by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON].

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us have that amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, as a further proviso to section 1, the following:

"And provided further, That the said experts and agents to be appointed by the Commissioner of Agriculture for the purpose of collecting information under the provisions of this section shall be selected by and appointed upon competitive examination in the same manner provided for the selection of candidates for the classified civil service under the act of January 16, 1883; and the Civil Service Commissioners shall provide a special and technical examination for such candidates for appointment under this section, and shall keep a special register of candidates who pass such examination; and no person shall be appointed as such experts or agents under the provisions of this section except upon such competitive examination."

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman from Michigan made the point of no quorum, although the amendment was voted down more than two to one. I hope he will withdraw his point, and let us proceed with the bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman let us have a vote on this amendment in the House?

Mr. HATCH. No; I can not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will be again put to the committee, if there be no objection.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 69.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. HATCH and Mr. CUTCHEON.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 13, noes 86.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I withdraw the point.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Agriculture to prepare such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the speedy and effectual suppression and extirpation of said diseases, and to certify such rules and regulations to the executive authority of each State and Territory, and invite said authorities to co-operate in the execution and enforcement of this act. Whenever the plans and methods of the Commissioner of Agriculture shall be accepted by any State or Territory in which pleuro-pneumonia or other contagious, infectious, or communicable disease is declared to exist, and whenever the governor of a State, or other properly constituted authorities, signify their readiness to co-operate for the extinction of any contagious, infectious, or communicable disease in conformity with the provisions of this act, the Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby authorized to expend so much of the money appropriated by this act as may be necessary in such investigations, in paying for the animals it is deemed necessary to slaughter, as hereinafter provided, and in such disinfection and other means as may be necessary to extirpate the disease: Provided, That the Commissioner of Agriculture shall cause special investigations to be made as to the existence of pleuro-pneumonia, foot-and-mouth disease, and rinderpest in any part of the United States where he may have reason to suspect their existence; and upon the discovery of any of these diseases, the Commissioner of Agriculture, with the consent, approval, or co-operation of the governor or other properly constituted authority of the State where such disease may be found, shall cause the appraisal of the animal or animals affected with or that have been exposed to such disease, and, under the laws of the State provided for condemning private property for public use, shall cause the same to be destroyed, and pay the owner not to exceed three-fourths of such amount as the appraisers may determine to have been the value before being diseased or exposed, out of any moneys appropriated by Congress for this purpose: Provided further, That he shall not pay more than $160 for any animal with pedigree recorded or recordable in the recognized herd-books of the breed to which it may belong, nor more than $60 for an animal not pedigreed; and that in no case shall compensation be allowed for any animal slaughtered under the provisions of this act that may have contracted or have been exposed to such disease in a foreign country, nor shall compensation be allowed to the owner of an animal where by reasonable diligence he could have prevented his animals from becoming exposed: And provided further, That whenever a State or Territory, in any section of which a contagious or infectious disease exists which the Commissioner of Agriculture has declared to be dangerous to the animal industries of the nation, fails to make provisions for its extirpation, or to co-operate with the plans of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the extirpation of such disease, the President of the United States, on the presentation of the facts by the Commissioner of Agriculture, shall be authorized to declare in quarantine the said State or Territory, or such part of said State or Territory as he may deem dangerous to the animal industries of the country, and to regulate or prohibit the transportation of cattle out of said State, Territory, or district.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to offer an amendment on behalf of the committee in lines 59 and 60. After the word "State," strike out the words "provided for condemning private property for public use;" so it will read:

And under the laws of the State shall cause the same to be destroyed, &c.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will state, in explanation of that amendment, that in some of the States where they have laws on this subject the acts are not entitled "acts to provide for condemning private property for public use;" but in an act of May 29, 1884, establishing a bureau of animal industry, special provision is made for condemning private property for public use.

Mr. HAMMOND. But how can the law be operated where a State has made no such provision?

Mr. HATCH. Where a law is made for condemning private property, diseased or exposed to disease, for the purpose of stopping the spread of the contagion, the condemnation of private property cannot be made under the State law.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But suppose there is no State law, then under what law would the condemnation be made?

Mr. HAMMOND. As the amendment is proposed to be amended by the gentleman from Missouri, condemnation and destruction of this property could only be made under the State law. Many States have no such law, and in such a State you could not operate this law.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman is broad in his statement there are many States which have no such law.

Mr. HAMMOND. Suppose there is only one State, the State of Georgia, which has no law for the condemnation of private property?

Mr. HATCH. Condemning private property in such case?

Mr. HAMMOND. Or in any case. Except when the Legislature desires to authorize any such condemnation it passes a specific act for such purpose, just as the United States, which has no law condemning private property for public use, does when occasion requires such a law. And that is the law in most of the States.

Mr. HATCH. In that case the Commissioner would be compelled to treat directly with the citizen, and he would have to get his consent before the property could be condemned and destroyed. The theory of the section is: there shall be no invasion of the right of private property within a State except by State law, or by the approval of the owner. That is the theory of the whole section.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I submit to the gentleman from Missouri that the amendment he offers takes out that feature of the bill and leaves (if Congress can give that authority to all) the right to destroy private property without regard to the law of the State.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman misapprehends the effect of the amendment, as he will see if he will listen for a moment. That section, as reported from the committee, reads as follows: "And under the laws of the State provided for condemning private property for public use, shall cause the same to be destroyed," &c. Many of the States have since the enactment of the law establishing the bureau of animal industry passed laws conforming to the provisions of that act.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. HAMMOND. I do not care to be heard upon this amendment, but wish to offer one in a line above that.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Before we come to that, if the gentleman will yield to me——

Mr. HAMMOND. I have not the floor.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do not wish to take the gentleman from Missouri off the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Now, I submit to the gentleman from Missouri if his amendment will not have the effect I claim. What is the effect of striking out this provision? Let us read it as it is in the bill, and as it will stand if his amendment is adopted:

Shall cause the appraisal of the animal or animals affected with or that have been exposed to such disease, and, under the laws of the State provided for condemning private property for public use, shall cause the same to be destroyed.

That is the bill as it is reported by the committee. The amendment, as suggested by the gentleman from Missouri, is to strike out that portion of it——

Mr. HATCH. Commencing with the word "provided"—the words "provided for condemning private property for public use."

Mr. MCMILLIN. Yes, you strike out of that provision the following words:

Provided for condemning private property for public use.

Then if there is no such law in the State this provision will be ineffectual.

Mr. HATCH. Of course, and it would be anyway if there is no law.

Mr. MCMILLIN. And this much-feared pleuro-pneumonia, that is going to destroy finally everything in the way of cattle unless it be exterminated instanter, will be allowed to range at will throughout the length and breadth of the State; and hence, after all of this army of special examiners have been appointed, and have entered upon their duties and have gone forth indued with the wisdom of this Congress, if they have it at all, to ferret out pleuro-pneumonia, they find out that they are utterly powerless to deal with it, and that is to be the substance of this action by this Congress!

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. MCMILLIN. With pleasure.

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman vote for a provision or a section that will give the officers or employés of this department—Federal officers—the power to go into a State and condemn and take possession of or destroy private property?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will never vote to go as far as your bill proposes to go. No, sir; I will not give them authority to override the Constitution of the United States, as your committee proposes to do, with all due defference to the committee.

But, Mr. Chairman, I was just pointing out that the gentleman's bill, after giving him all that he asks, and after this commission has been appointed, will be utterly powerless to deal with the disease in any portion of the country.

Mr. HATCH. Wherever the disease breaks out it will be easy to get the State to act in conjunction with the Federal authorities to stamp it out.

Mr. HAMMOND. The Legislatures of twenty-three of the States only meet every two years.

Mr. MCMILLIN. They have only biennial sessions in many of the States; and three years ago we were told that if we did not get a specific and certain remedy for this disease, and that very soon, too, that the cattle industry of this country would not be worth enumerating; and yet after three years of this terrible danger which then threatened us we know no more about pleuro-pneumonia, we know no more about the cause of the disease or the remedy for it than we did then; and again the Agricultural Committee comes and asks this House to give them more power and more men and more money, and the same threat is held over us that if we do not yield to this request ruin is impending.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman claims that he does not know more than he did three years ago. He does not mean I presume to include everybody in that statement.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have listened patiently to the great Agricultural Committee of this House and its reports, and to the gentleman from Missouri in particular, and I am compelled to say that after all of his lucubrations on this subject the matter is involved in as much obscurity as it was before.

Mr. HATCH. That is not the fault of the "gentleman from Missouri." He can state facts, but it is impossible for him to make the gentleman understand them.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The trouble is the gentleman from Missouri fails to state any new facts. We have heard this old story before.

Mr. HATCH. Read the report of the committee.

Mr. MCMILLIN. And the gentleman's "statement of facts" comes in direct conflict with the reports from the Bureau of Agriculture itself.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman is mistaken in that.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to strike out the last word.

My friend from Tennessee says that the country has learned nothing about pleuro-pneumonia since this legislation began. In that I regret to say that my friend, who is usually well informed, is very much mistaken. Last summer and fall this disease broke out in the city of Chicago at the stock yards, and so great was the alarm and damage resulting from that outbreak that the cattle industry of the whole country was damaged to a greater extent than by any other circumstance that has happened to that industry in the last quarter of a century.

I regret that the House has not taken pains to inform itself of the extent of the outbreak which has caused such a loss, and I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will give me his attention and I will try to enlighten him upon the subject.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Thank you. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. The outbreak last summer and fall has, by the testimony of intelligent cattle men, involved the State in a loss with reference to this industry amounting to the enormous sum of at least ten millions of dollars.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I ask the gentleman from Illinois if to-day this Agricultural Bureau and the governor of his State are not at loggerheads on this question?

Mr. SPRINGER. I answer the gentleman from Tennessee that that has nothing to do with this question. Those flowers of rhetoric that bloom in my friend's mind have nothing to do in this case.

I have been trying to impress some facts on the mind of my friend, and he seems to be utterly unimpressible. I want to call his attention and the attention of the House to the fact that that disease did have a most extraordinary and damaging effect upon the great Northwest even since the adjournment of the last session of Congress; that more than three thousand head of cattle were either exposed to or actually affected with this disease, and that several hundred head of cattle were, under the operations of the bill, now a law, and of the laws of the State of Illinois, condemned and slaughtered; and that every veterinary surgeon and scientist who came there, and many did come to Chicago for the purpose of investigating the disease, that every one of them concurred in stating two facts, which do not seem to be understood on this floor. First, that the disease was infectious and contagious; and, secondly, that the cattle which there died did have this disease. There was not a dissenting opinion on this proposition among the scientists and physicians who investigated the disease at the yards.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Was it not also agreed among a portion of them that the disease originated there?

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Is it not claimed that that is a fact?

Mr. SPRINGER. It is not claimed by any one who has investigated the subject that it is a native disease. It is exotic. It does not belong to this country. It has never been brought about by any local circumstances in this country. Every single case which has been investigated in the United States has been traced to countries beyond the sea. Never has a case grown up of itself in this country.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Where did it come from to the State of Illinois?

Mr. SPRINGER. It came from the Eastern States, and it came there from Europe. In this case the disease came from Baltimore to Ohio, from thence to Indiana, and from thence to Illinois. Every case has been traced. Gentlemen talk about other diseases, such as hog cholera. Those diseases have nothing to do with this disease.

Mr. HAMMOND. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMMOND. If this disease comes from abroad and the object of the bill is to protect against it, and in order to provide that protection you must offer a high reward for the killed cattle, why is it the bill offers no reward for the cattle imported into the country sick—why is it it will not pay for them at all?

Mr. McMILLIN. There is no reward there for the detection of the disease.

Mr. HATCH. With the permission of the gentleman from Illinois I will state that we have at an expense of $30,000 kept up quarantine stations from which no head or hoof of imported live-stock can be taken out except under prescribed regulations.

Mr. HAMMOND. But I understand from the report of the committee, of which the gentleman from Missouri is chairman, that this disease may be fifteen months in incubation. Is there any place where cattle are kept fifteen months?

Mr. HATCH. No, sir.

Mr. HAMMOND. Then your detective system amounts to nothing.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not yield any further.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has expired.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "provided," in line 59, insert the following:
"Therefor, or under such laws as may exist in such State."
So that it will read:
"Under the laws of the State provided therefor, or under such laws as may exist in such State for condemning private property for public use."

Mr. HATCH. I have no objection to that amendment. But let me ask the gentleman from Michigan how does that add anything to the broad statement—

Shall cause the appraisal of the animal or animals affected with or that have been exposed to such disease, and, under the laws of the State, shall cause the same to be destroyed, &c.

How can you make it broader than that?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I will answer the question of the gentleman from Missouri. If there exist in a State laws for condemning diseased cattle or other animals they will be condemned under those laws. But if there be no law applicable thereto they will be condemned, should my amendment be adopted, under the law most analogous thereto for the condemnation of private property.

Mr. HATCH. I think the expression "laws of the State" covers the whole ground.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was adopted.

Mr. HAMMOND. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the word "exist," in line 39, the words:
"Or such State or Territory shall have adopted plans and methods for the suppression and extirpation of said diseases, and such plans and methods shall be accepted by the Commissioner of Agriculture."

Mr. HATCH. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. HAMMOND. The existing act was passed and approved on the 29th of May, 1884. The gentleman from Missouri by the amendment which he recently offered declared that the purpose was not to restrict the rights of the several States; and yet in this clause copied from that statute he has stricken out the words which I propose to reinsert, the only words which recognize the authority of a State to make laws on the subject.

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman allow me to explain?

Mr. HAMMOND. Yes, sir.

Mr. HATCH. That was simply because we supposed we had provided for it better in another place, but, as the gentleman seems to be critical about it, I have consulted with several friends of the bill and said that I was perfectly willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman tell us where he thought it was better provided for?

Mr. HATCH. In the amendment which has just been adopted, which covers all the laws of the State, and which provides that the condemnation, wherever it is made, can only be made under the laws of the State. Also, in the several provisos that follow in regard to payment.

Mr. HAMMOND. The difference is just this: After a long fight over this bill of 1884, Congress consented to go into this business to the extent of letting the State go foremost and the Commissioner of Agriculture ride behind, and confined the bill to only such matters as related to interstate commerce; whereas this bill strikes out the State, puts the Commissioner of Agriculture in the lead, and lets him cut up the State as he sees proper. Now, Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as that amendment is to be accepted, I go on to call the attention of the committee to the situation here.

This bill passed before, in 1884, by only a small majority. Upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to recommit it the nays were only 145 as against 138 yeas. The proviso which begins here, at line 75, was stricken out in that bill of 1884 upon a yea-and-nay vote of 155 yeas against 127 nays. The House solemnly voted, after long debate, that that ought not to be in any such bill; yet it is brought here and put in again as a proviso to something new and made to appear necessary to carry out the provisions of the bill as to interstate commerce. Again, the bill of 1884 authorizes no money to be expended for any other purpose than to prevent the spread of the disease between the Territories and the States of this Union.

Those words are stricken out. The words which gave the bill of 1884 its constitutional status, if it had any, are by this bill stricken out, and in place of them the words "to extirpate said disease" are inserted. The other bill did not touch cattle until they became an article of commerce; this bill allows the United States, by its Commissioner of Agriculture, to visit my private barn and kill a cow that I never intend shall be moved and that never will become the subject-matter of commerce. For my own part, I shall content myself with voting against the bill, but I wish those gentlemen who support it, and who desire to find a constitutional basis for their votes, to try to ascertain by what authority the United States can interfere in this matter.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Let us dispose of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND].

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understood that that was accepted.

Mr. HATCH. I can not accept it for the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMMOND. Now, Mr. Chairman, to make the language conform, I desire to offer another amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by striking out "to extirpate the disease," in lines 48 and 49, and insert in lieu thereof "to prevent the spread of such disease from one State or Territory to another."

The question was then taken on the amendment; and there were—ayes 39, noes 53.

Mr. HAMMOND. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] to act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 44, noes 120.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SWINBURNE] will now be reported.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 61, section 3, strike out "destroyed and," and insert "quarantined and destroyed if deemed necessary for scientific investigation by the scientific experts provided for in section 1 of this act; and, to carry this provision into effect, the said experts shall provide such rules and regulations as in their judgment are necessary to best prevent the spread of the disease and promote a thorough investigation and understanding of its nature, characteristics, consequences, and the laws governing the same, and where the cattle are destroyed to."

Mr. SWINBURNE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment simply prescribes what the experts shall do if the House should see fit to pass the bil in that form. I offer the amendment for this reason: In connection with our report as an Agricultural Committee a misfortune happened—how or why, I do not know. That report was made early in the session, long before the reports were received from the Agricultural Department. I mean our report known as "the Hatch report," in which it was stated that 62,000 head or cattle, or thereabouts, were then sick or exposed to the disease, and the proposition was to kill all of them. That statement went abroad over the Old World and injured our commerce to the amount of untold millions. The sale and transportation of our cattle was interfered with to such an extent that foreign buyers would hardly deal with us at all, for they said, "Why, you are sending over to us beef that has died of pleuro-pneumonia, so called."

The other day when I called for that report from the Agricultural Department—and the committee were with me in asking for it—the answer was that they had never made that report. But the fact is it was made nearly three months before.

Resolution after resolution was adopted, there being, I think, three resolutions altogether; and finally when I got that report from the Agricultural Department, it was in the form of stray leaves. In that report it is charged that there is a large amount of this disease in New York and Brooklyn. I transmitted to the boards of health of those two cities a copy of the statement on that point; and they said it was not true. Dr. Loring, who is familiar with this question, said that he never had been able to find a case where he could produce the contagion in animals that were not acclimated; that in animals brought, for instance, from the mountains, he had never been able to find a case of that kind, though a large number of them were said to have pleuro-pneumonia. Now I would be glad if we could have an Agricultural Department upon whose statements we could rely, a department composed of scientific men.

We have been told by the Department that this disease has existed in Chicago for three years. The Department undertakes to say the disease existed there before Chicago had found it out herself. What has become of the four hundred and fifty-five herds and the sixty thousand cattle that were stated to be sick of this disease, or to have been exposed to it? You have the answer in the RECORD.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. What is the answer?

Mr. SWINBURNE. That they did not make the report. In short, they did not give us a word of information in response to that resolution. That is the reason I have offered this amendment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I have but a word to say with reference to this amendment. As we all know, the remarks just made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SWINBURNE] were uttered in so low a tone as to be inaudible to almost every member of this House; but as I understand his amendment, it provides that these experts to be appointed under the operation of this bill shall provide various rules and regulations. Now, I want to express my conviction that there has been already too much scientific talk on this bill. It is an old proverb that whilst the doctors disagree the patient dies.

Mr. SWINBURNE. Does the gentleman mean to say that the doctors, as such, have ever been consulted in regard to this measure?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am speaking of the discussion on this floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. It occurs to me this is a case where the advocates of the bill want the patient to die.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I fail to see the pertinency of the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am sorry.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The very astute gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] may understand it.

Two facts are beyond dispute. One is that there is some disease, call it what we may, unknown until within a few years past in our country, that is destroying our cattle. I do not care whether it is called pleuro-pneumonia, contagious lung fever, or anything else. The disease exists. It exists in the district that I have the honor to represent. It exists in almost every country district represented on this floor. Another fact exists beyond dispute. This disease is capable of being communicated from one herd to another, and is so communicated. When these two facts coexist a remedy becomes necessary. I do not venture to approve every detail of the proposed remedy; but I have heard enough of the discussion on this floor to convince me that unless the friends of the farmers and of the cattle interests in this country stand by this bill, it will be so emasculated as to be of no practical benefit to the interests it is designed to promote. Whatever the remedy may be, it is necessary that something should be done. This evil is no longer confined to a single State. It exists throughout the country; and the remedy must be broader than the confines of any State. If it would be effective, it must be as broad as the domain of the United States.

Mr. MCADOO. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly.

Mr. MCADOO. I would like my colleague to state what was the result in New Jersey of a large expenditure of money on a somewhat similar basis to this bill, for the purpose of putting down this disease? My colleague will remember that New York and New Jersey acted conjunctively in the expenditure of that money and in carrying out provisions of law somewhat similar to the bill now before us.

Mr. BUCHANAN. We only know this, that as a result of those efforts beyond reasonable doubt the disease was kept confined to narrower limits than would have been the case if those efforts had not been made.

My friend the other day discussing this bill said he would rather every cow in the country should die than that any principle of the Constitution should be violated. And as he said that I pictured to myself the farmer in our State coming into his house and saying to his wife, "Nancy, the last cow is dead, but, thank God, Mr. MCADOO has saved the Constitution for us." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MCADOO. But is it not a fact that it was an utter failure in New Jersey, and every dollar was wasted?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No, I think it was not.

Mr. MCADOO. Yes, every dollar was absolutely wasted, and you did not save a single consumptive cow or decrepit hog. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. It was not wasted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HATCH. I move that all debate on the pending section and amendments be limited to ten minutes. [Cries of "Object!"]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I shall certainly object to closing debate on this section and the amendments which are to be proposed to it in ten minutes.

Mr. HATCH. Then I shall move that the committee rise for the purpose of going into the House and limiting debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration a bill (H. R. 7208) to amend an act entitled "An act for the establishment of a bureau of animal industry, and for other purposes," approved May 29, 1884, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and pending that motion I move that debate on the pending section and all amendments thereto be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I wish to amend that.

Mr. HATCH. And on that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. STEELE. Make it fifteen minutes.

Mr. HATCH. I am willing to accept fifteen minutes.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let the gentleman withdraw his previous question, and let the House fix the time itself.

Mr. HATCH. If it will suit gentlemen, I will make it twenty minutes.

Mr. LANHAM. If the previous question is ordered will it exclude further amendment?

Mr. HATCH. It will not. My only object is to close the debate.

Mr. STEELE. Does the gentleman agree to make it twenty minutes?

Mr. HATCH. I do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not do that pending the demand for the previous question if objection be made.

Mr. HAMMOND. Then I object.

The question recurred on ordering the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 33.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. No quorum has voted.

Mr. HATCH. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 175, nays 57, not voting 86; as follows:

The following additional pairs were announced for the rest of the day:

Mr. STEWART, of Texas, with Mr. KETCHAM.

Mr. MARTIN with Mr. LOUTTIT.

Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois.

Mr. LOWRY with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, with Mr. BUTTERWORTH, on this vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States, in writing, was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

RETURN OF MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will lay before the House a resolution for present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to request the Senate to return to the House the message that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8869), granting a pension to Mrs. Henrietta M. Drum Hunt.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that this bill is still in conference, but by mistake it was enrolled, and a message sent to the Senate that the House had agreed to the amendment.

There being no objection, the resolution was adopted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested; namely:

A bill (S. 2877) to promote the efficiency of the General Land Office;

A bill (S. 2896) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the cities of Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 3157) to authorize the removal of the quarantine station from Ship Island, Mississippi.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution providing for completing the compilation and printing of the veto messages of the Presidents of the United States.

Also, that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 5097) to regulate the use of the grounds of the Washington National Monument, known as Public Reservation No. 3, in the city of Washington, D. C., and requests a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Messrs. SPOONER, MORRILL, and VEST as managers on the part of the Senate.

PLEURO-PNEUMONIA BILL.

Mr. HATCH. I now ask unanimous consent to modify my motion so as to limit the debate to twenty minutes instead of ten minutes.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I object. If the gentleman will make it one hour, I will withdraw the objection.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HATCH, the House divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 13.

Mr. WARNER of Ohio. No quorum.

Mr. HATCH. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 173, nays 49, not voting 96; as follows:

So the motion to limit debate was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I object. Let them be read.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. HUTTON with Mr. MORROW, for the rest of the day.

Mr. SCOTT with Mr. KETCHAM, for the rest of the day.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. BUTTERWORTH, on this vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCREARY). The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the pending bill (H. R. 7208).

The question being taken,

The SPEAKER pro tempore stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 118, noes 19.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER].

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 151, noes 12.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. BLOUNT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the pleuro-pneumonia bill. By order of the House debate on the pending section and amendments thereto has been limited to ten minutes.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. We all recognize the fact, Mr. Chairman, that there may be conditions affecting the public safety or the public health with which the several States are unable, and in some cases possibly unwilling, to successfully deal, and when such conditions arise an appeal is very properly and in fact necessarily made to the General Government as having a larger jurisdiction and more ample powers to meet such an emergency.

It is urged that this bill deals with such a condition of affairs in that one of the great sources of our food supply is seriously threatened with partial destruction, and in turning aside such a calamity all our people are interested. The necessity for legislative action being conceded, a question remains whether this bill deals wisely in all its provisions in meeting the conditions which confront us.

I submit that, admitting whatever there may be of wisdom in the other provisions, that which authorizes and in effect requires the payment by the United States of three-fourths of the appraised value of the animals slaughtered, the appraisement fixing the value as of sound, healthy cattle, as the bill requires, is well calculated to promote pleuro-pneumonia instead of suppressing it. The result in each case would obviously be to pay the full value of the animal, thus affording a ready market for herds and creating a strong temptation to collusion and fraud. The several States are vitally interested in the case of the herds of cattle owned by the citizens within their borders, and will or should be required to co-operate with the General Government and should make some provision for paying at least in part for private herds of their citizens when they are destroyed in pursuance of the provisions of this bill, and in no event ought the General Government to be authorized to pay over one-third or one-half at most of the value of an animal appraised as if sound. The States could in fact, if they would, suppress pleuro within their jurisdiction and pay the expense. Massachusetts did so.

But in view of the danger arising from interstate-commerce in cattle the General Government is appealed to. But in my judgement the General Government should not do more than ought properly to devolve upon it.

If the State of Ohio can not supplement the payment by the Government of one-third of the value of the herds slaughtered in the private pastures of that State, then Ohio is remiss, and ought not to be heard when she appeals to have the United States bear burdens which should properly be borne by the State. All the people of Ohio are interested in the suppression of pleuro-pneumonia, whatever it is and wherever it is within her borders; and I submit that it is quite enough for the General Government in behalf of all the people to aid to the extent of paying at most one-half the loss sustained in the destruction of cattle owned in that State. Otherwise the General Government resolves itself into a philanthropic live-stock insurance company, and tainted herds will soon become very numerous and pleuro-pneumonia would abound. There is a good deal of human nature throughout this land, and supplementing the good neighborhood which obtains everywhere would insure the payment in every instance of about the full value of each animal, and herd-books with pedigrees would be multiplied without limit and blooded stock would be found in every pasture.

No provision should be adopted which even tends to absolve the States from doing their full duty in protecting their own herds from destruction, and the best way to secure this is to leave the responsibility and loss largely on the States. To assume they would do nothing would be to assert that the citizens of such State court pestilence and famine. With a division of the burden and responsibility, the General Government, acting conjointly with the States, can successfully accomplish what is sought by this bill. In that view, I shall at the proper time offer an amendment to strike out "three-fourths" where it occurs in the section being considered, and insert "one-half," and rely upon the several States to do their share whatever that may be. It is urged that men will conceal the fact that they have worthless animals unless you pay them three-fourths the value of sound animals as an inducement. That is absurd. A man who has an animal tainted so that its meat is unfit to eat ought to be punished criminally for offering it for sale; and it is enough for him that the Government pays him one-third or one-half of the value of the animal appraised as if it were sound. I submit that is as far as we ought to go, if, indeed, we ought to go so far. Therefore, I shall offer the amendment I have indicated.

So far as the amendment of my friend from New York [Mr. SWINBURNE] is concerned, I understand it looks to defining and limiting the duty of experts; but I am not sufficiently familiar with its exact provisions to approve or disapprove it. But I do feel we are offering a premium for the propagation of pleuro-pneumonia by offering three-fourths of the value of every herd selected in any pasture and appraised by the neighbors of the owner, where good neighborhood obtains, insuring payment of full value of each animal. I therefore hope, if it pleases the House, that it will reduce the amount to one-third. This bill doubtless meets a much-felt want, but in view of the vast powers it confers it should be carefully guarded.

Mr. HATCH yielded to Mr. LA FOLLETTE.

Mr. CALDWELL. I ask for the reading of the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SWINBURNE].

Mr. HATCH. I object.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appeddix.]

Mr. CAREY withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. SPRINGER was recognized, and yielded to Mr. LANHAM.

Mr. LANHAM. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 76, after the word "which," strike out "a contagious or infectious disease," and insert "pleuro-pneumonia, foot-and-mouth disease, or rinderpest."

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto has expired.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to state to the committee that I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. GALLINGER. I have an amendment that I desire to offer, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SWINBURNE].

Mr. MCMILLIN and Mr. SPRINGER. Let the amendment be reported again.

The amendment was again read.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. SWINBURNE; and there were—ayes 84, noes 81.

The CHAIRMAN. The ayes have it——

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a quorum. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers are demanded. All in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until they are counted.

Mr. HATCH. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HATCH. My point is that the confusion is so great that the committee can not hear the Chairman. I have not heard more than one announcement out of three. I ask for tellers upon the last vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was submitting that question to the committee.

Tellers were ordered, 64 members voting in favor therof.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, is the question now on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SWINBURNE]?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

The committe again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 97, noes 73.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will next be taken on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 76, page 4, after the word "which," strike out the words "a contagious or infectious disease," and insert "pleuro-pneumonia, foot-and-mouth disease, or rinderpest."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 61, 62, and 63 strike out "three-fourths of such amount as the appraisers may determine to have been the value before being diseased or exposed," and insert in lieu thereof "such amount as the appraisers may determine to be the value of the cattle as diseased or exposed."

The question being taken, there were—ayes 70, noes 70.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair votes in the negative, and the noes have it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. No quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MCMILLIN and Mr. HATCH were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 72, noes 91.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 52 strike out "and," and insert, after the word "rinderpest," the words "and hog cholera."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I could not hear a word of that last amendment. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has been disposed of.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I offer the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 61 and 62 strike out "three-fourths" and insert "one-half;" so as to read, "and pay the owner not exceeding one-half of such amount as the appraisers may determine to have been the value before diseased or exposed," &c.

The amendment was agreed to; there being—ayes 110, noes 36.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration a bill (H. R. 7208) to amend an act entitled "An act for the establishment of a bureau of animal industry, and for other purposes," approved May 29, 1884, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, returned to the House, in compliance with its request, a message from the House, announcing its agreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8869) granting a pension to Mrs. Henrietta M. Drum Hunt.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House now take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion of Mr. MILLS was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 4, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication from the Secretary of the Treasury; which was read:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 3, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, copy of letter of the Secretary of the Interior of the 2d instant, submitting an estimate of appropriation for pay of special agents to make allotments of lands in severalty, including actual and necessary traveling and other expenses of such agents, $25,000.

Respectfully yours,

D. MANNING, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore United States Senate.

Mr. HALE. I should like to have the letter from the Secretary of the Interior accompanying that communication read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 2, 1887.

SIR: In accordance with the provisions contained in the second section of the act of July 7, 1884 (23 Stat., 254), I have the honor to transmit herewith for presentation to Congress copy of a letter of 1st instant from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, inclosing an item of appropriation in the sum of $25,000 to provide for the salaries and necessary expenses of special agents to make allotments in severalty, including actual and necessary traveling expenses of such agents.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

H. L. MULDROW,
Acting Secretary.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. HALE. I should like to have the estimate, not read, but printed in the RECORD. It is a very important matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Nothing further accompanies the communication from the Secretary of the Treasury except a short letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. That will be printed in the RECORD; and all the papers will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed in document form.

The letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 1, 1887.

SIR: The general allotment bill (S. 54), now before the President for his signature, provides that the allotments of lands in severalty therein authorized shall be made by special agents appointed by the President for that purpose, but makes no provision for the payment of the salary and expenses of such special agents.

I therefore have the honor to recommend that the attention of Congress be called to the matter, through the proper channels, with the request that an item (draught of which is herewith submitted) be inserted in the Indian appropriation bill appropriating the sum of $25,000 for that purpose.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. D. C. ATKINS, Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Item of appropriation:

For pay of special agents to make allotments of lands in severalty, including actual and necessary traveling and other expenses of such agents, $25,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in reply to a resolution of January 11, 1887, an estimate of contingent expenses of the Treasury Department; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting an estimate of $1,500 appropriation for removing the Jicarilla-Apache Indians in New Mexico to a more suitable location; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting an estimate of appropriation for the erection of shops, &c., at the Indian Industrial School at Genoa, Nebr.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a letter from the secretary of the Territory of Dakota, transmitting a resolution of the Legislative Assembly of Dakota, remonstrating against the removal of Fort Abraham Lincoln; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TERRITORY OF DAKOTA, SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Bismarck, D. T., January 31, 1887.

SIR: In compliance with the instructions contained in the inclosed joint resolution of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Dakota, I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of house bill No. 50.

I am, your obedient servant,

M. L. MCCORMACK,
Secretary of Dakota.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
President of the Senate, Washington, D. C.

Whereas it is reported that the early abandonment of Fort Abraham Lincoln, in this Territory, is contemplated by the United States Government: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Dakota, That we earnestly protest against any such contemplated action, and do respectfully petition that said fort be maintained and further improved for the following reasons:

Its location at the crossing of the Northern Pacific Railroad over the Missouri River makes it pre-eminently suited for a distributing post for arms and supplies for other posts along the Missouri River and in the country farther west.

Its facilities are the very best for the massing of troops, and for their prompt dispatch in case of Indian outbreak, riots, or emergency of any kind to exposed points in every direction.

Its abandonment would necessitate the removal of the bodies of the dead in its cemetery to some other point, many of whom have but recently been brought there from other posts and interred.

Its adequate maintenance is a necessity to the settlers in the adjacent country, who are unprotected, except by the near presence of United States troops, from the depredations of the roving bands of Indians who are continually wandering over the country, or from the horrors of an outbreak of the thousands now massed on the adjoining Sioux reservation, whose atrocities and massacres are still fresh in the memories of the people, while its abandonment would not only greatly alarm and jeopardize the present scattered settlers and small communities, but would also seriously retard further settlement and development of that section of the country.

Resolved, That we urge upon our Delegate in Congress, Hon. O. S. GIFFORD, to use every effort to secure the object above set forth.

Resolved, That duly certified copies of the foregoing preamble and resolutions be forwarded to Hon. O. S. GIFFORD, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, at Washington, to be laid before both Houses of Congress, and ordered printed and referred to appropriate committees.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.
TERRITORY OF DAKOTA, SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

I, M. L. McCormack, secretary of the Territory of Dakota, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the foregoing copy of house bill No. 50, being a joint resolution against the removal of Fort Abraham Lincoln, approved by the governor January 29, 1887, with the enrolled original now on file in this office, and that the same is a correct transcript therefrom, and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the Territory of Dakota, at Bismarck, this 31st day of January, 1887.

[SEAL.] M. L. MCCORMACK,
Secretary of Dakota Territory.

Mr. EUSTIS presented the petition of J. L. Lyons & Co. and other citizens of New Orleans, La., praying for the repeal of the internal-revenue laws; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLISON. I present a petition signed by all the national banks of the city of Omaha, Nebr., suggesting certain amendments to the bill (H. R. 9110) in relation to national banks. The petition suggests that Chicago be added to the list of cities where reserve banks can deposit money as now in the city of New York. I also present a similar petition signed by all the national banks of Kansas City, Mo., suggesting that Saint Louis also be added to the list. I move the reference of these petitions to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of druggists of Reading, Pa., and a petition of druggists of Scranton, Pa., praying for a reduction of internal-revenue taxes; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORRILL presented the memorial of G. F. Dunlop, M. I. Adler, Robert E. Frey, and a large number of other citizens of Georgetown, D. C., remonstrating against the proposed franchise to allow the Washington Cable Railroad Company to lay its tracks through the streets of Georgetown and Washington; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER presented a petition of citizens of Virginia, praying for the passage of what is known as the Colquitt bill to regulate the granting of liquor licenses in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BUTLER presented resolutions adopted by the Board of Health of Charleston, S. C., favoring legislation looking to the erection of a hospital near Key West for the purpose of assisting the proper authorities in keeping out yellow fever from the United States; which were referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

He also presented the petition of Joseph Berry, of Aiken County, South Carolina, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR presented the petition of W. T. Dale and other citizens of Spring Hill, Tenn., praying for the passage of a bill in relation to the observance of the Sabbath; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HAWLEY presented resolutions adopted by the Board of Trade of Norwich, Conn., favoring an appropriation for the improvement of the Thames River; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MCMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6538) to define the boundaries of the collection districts of Miami and Sandusky, in the State of Ohio, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3013) for the relief of First Lieut. James Regan, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7819) to establish the order of promotion in the Medical Department of the Army, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10048) to authorize the Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley Railroad to build its road across the Fort Meade Military Reservation, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3146) granting a pension to John W. Reynolds, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred an amendment intended to be proposed to the post-office appropriation bill, reported it favorably, and moved its reference to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 3265) to increase the pension of Lucy Moore; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 3266) for the relief of Lacon R. Tillman; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MILLER introduced a bill (S. 3267) to increase the appropriation for the erection of a public building at Troy, N. Y.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

SCHOOL BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be directed to make suitable appropriations for the rent or construction of buildings for school purposes sufficient to accommodate all children of school age in the District of Columbia.

In connection with the resolution I desire, in order to show the importance of the subject and the oversight or neglect which has followed the want of buildings for school-houses, to have read as part of my remarks a preamble and resolutions adopted at a meeting of citizens of this city.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks that the preamble and resolutions he sends to the desk be read. If there be no objection they will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Preamble and resolutions unanimously adopted at a public meeting of citizens and tax-payers of East Washington, D. C., held December 29, 1886.

Whereas Congress has by law imposed a penalty of $20 on every person or guardian in the District of Columbia who fails to send each child of school age to school twelve weeks each year; and

Whereas the official record for 1886 shows that there are 5,000 more school children enrolled than there are school seats in the District; and

Whereas Congress by its laws has deprived the people of the District of the legal right or power to build a school-house with their own taxes even, except by its permission; and

Whereas the record shows that, because of the want of school buildings, over 12,000,—considerably more than one-third of the children enrolled—are compelled to attend half-day schools; and

Whereas in the third school division, known as East Washington, out of a total of 83 schools, 35 are half-day schools, embracing 1,750 scholars, 786 of whom are in the third and fourth grades, and who are compelled to occupy an old stable, a loft over a tin and paint shop, an old engine-house, and similar unfit places; and

Whereas the eight-room building now being erected will not provide room for half of these children; and

Whereas the children of the poor seldom attend school beyond the fourth or fifth grade, and therefore receive little or no benefit from the high grades or the high school; and

Whereas it is an axiom that "ignorance is the mother of crime and vice," and it has been publicly charged by a high officer of the United States Government that in consequence of this condition of our educational affairs there is more crime in proportion to the population in the District of Columbia than in the city of New York; and

Whereas it has been publicly stated by a Senator that this bad condition of our school affairs is the fault of the people of the District, because they had not made their wants known to Congress, notwithstanding their repeated memorials and petitions, backed by urgent appeals from the Secretaries of the Treasury and the Interior, the Commissioner of the Land Office, and by Washington, Jefferson, and Monroe from 1804 to the present day; and notwithstanding the fact also that the official record of Congress shows that, while it has given to the States over $28,000,000 in money, over 80,000,000 acres of the public lands for school purposes, and 155,000,000 acres for railroads, it has never given to the District of Columbia a dollar of money or a foot of land for such purpose, but, on the contrary, received as a free gift from the citizens of the District three-fourths of all the land occupied by the city of Washington; and notwithstanding also that more than one-third of the pupils are the children of colored people, a large portion of whom were brought here by exigencies of the war as "freedmen" and left on our hands, and for whom we are required by a law of Congress to expend as much per capita as for the white children for school purposes, very few of whom are able to or do contribute a cent to the District revenues or school fund, besides whom we are required to provide school facilities for a large number of non-residents in the employ of the United States Government, who also contribute nothing to the school fund;

Therefore it is hereby resolved by the citizens and tax-payers of East Washington, in public meeting assembled, as follows:

1. Resolved, That we here and now call the attention of Congress to the terrible condition and needs of the public schools of the District, as set forth in the report of the board of school trustees and of the superintendents of the schools; and ask for the publication of this preamble and resolutions in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, to the end that all Members and Senators may be informed as to the facts in the case.

2. Resolved, That for the reasons above set forth it would, in our opinion, be a great wrong to expend any more of our limited revenues to enlarge high-school buildings or to increase the expenditures for said schools until the lower grades have been more fully provided for.

3. Resolved, That the conditions and needs of the third school division imperatively demand the erection of at least one twelve-room school building in said division the coming season.

4. Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by this meeting to wait on the Committee of Appropriations for the District of Columbia of the House and Senate and urge on said committees the necessity and propriety of increasing the school facilities for the lower grades first, and of providing for at least one twelve-room school building in the third division the coming season.

Fifth. Resolved, That in view of the facts herein set forth, simple justice would seem to require that Congress should, by a grant of land or otherwise, provide a public school fund for the District of Columbia at least equal to that provided for the several States of the Union; and we hereby invoke the earnest attention of Congress to the matter.

S. C. CLARKE, Chairman.

T. B. MARCHE, Secretary.
Washington, D. C., December 29, 1886.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. PLUMB. What is the resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

Mr. PLUMB. I understood that the resolutions presented were resolutions of a meeting of citizens of this District.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A resolution was offered by the Senator from Nebraska, which will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. VAN WYCK.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I have no objection to that motion. I intended to ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I offered the resolution for the purpose of laying the foundation in order that the resolutions of the citizens of this city might be properly presented to this body and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I presume all that will be necessary will be that the wants of the citizens as expressed should be called to the attention of the committee.

The facts stated in the resolutions are alarming, if they be true, and no doubt they are true. While great efforts have been made by Congress to appropriate millions and millions of dollars for school purposes, right in the shadow of this Capitol this neglect has been going on year after year, so that there are not absolutely buildings or seats provided for the children of school age, and to such an extent has it grown that it has been published to the world that the ratio of crime is really greater in the city of Washington, in proportion to population, than in the great city of New York, which we always supposed took precedence in that regard.

I therefore ask that the resolutions of the citizens and the resolution which I have offered may be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution and accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to say just a word upon the motion to refer. It is not alone the fact that there is not school room enough for all the children of school age in the District. If there were seats and benches for three-fourths of them it would probably be enough, but there are not enough for those of school age who are enrolled as desiring to attend. I think I explained this once before. If the school age be from four to sixteen, as it used to be in my State, it covers twelve years. If children on the average go to school eight years out of the twelve they are doing tolerably well, as an average. That would require school room only for two-thirds of the number who are returned as of the school age. But in this District that is not what the Senator from Nebraska refers to, if he will allow me to say so. The difficulty is that there is not room for those who do apply and desire to attend school, and they are only a fraction of the total number—a large fraction it is true, but not all by any means.

Mr. DAWES. I do not think that Congress is open to the criticism implied in these resolutions and in the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska. Congress has never failed to come up to all that those who are clothed with the authority of administering public affairs in this District have asked.

The law does not require the Committee on Appropriations to make the estimates for public schools in this District. The law imposes that duty upon others, and if they have been more engaged and enlisted in other enterprises looking to the prosperity of the District or of any portion of it than they have to the education of the children of school age in this District, the criticism should be applied to them and not to Congress.

The resolution of the Senator from Nebraska and the resolutions which it covers suggest that the Committee on Appropriations make the estimates, and that they determine for themselves what is necessary for the schools in this District. What is the purpose of having a board of commissioners to manage the affairs of this District, what is the object of having a school superintendent in this District, what is the purpose of having a board to which the interests of the schools in this District are committed, if the Committee on Appropriations, which has considerable to do, I am of opinion, is to go and visit all the schools, is to go and enumerate all the scholars, is to go and ascertain the average attendance, and the standard of progress made by the scholars, and to determine where it is best to have a school-house, and what is the shape best to have it built, and how much is to be expended? Those officers appointed here under the Government are ornamental if that is the purpose and the object of all these resolutions. I suggest to my distinguished friend from Nebraska that he open his cannonade upon those officers to whom the interests of this District are committed.

I happened to attend the public meeting to which those resolutions allude, and I heard a high official of the Government make the statement that the crimes committed in this District were greater in proportion than they were in the city of New York, and he did not seem to understand what the matter was. He declared that the whole difficulty was with Congress.

The Committee on Appropriations have never failed, nor has Congress ever failed, to give to this District for the purposes of education everything its officials have asked.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution and accompanying papers are referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no question before the Senate; concurrent or other resolutions are still in order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator from Massachusetts seems to misunderstand the extent and the purport and the object not only of the resolution which I offered but of the resolutions adopted by sundry citizens of Washington on this behalf. There was no cannonade intended on the part of the citizens, neither was there any cannonade intended on the part of the resolution which I felt it my duty to offer.

I do not know why it should be that when the Congress of the United States are appealed to, or a distinguished committee of this body are solicited, mildly, humbly, gentlemen at once feel it their duty to suppose that some attack is made upon them and to characterize it as a cannonade. This is the petition of the citizens of Washington, humbly beseeching and asking, as they have to do when any of their rights are recognized, coming obsequiously, with hat in hand, begging that they may be recognized in their rights. They come to this body year after year to seek for redress of wrongs and for the prevention of outrages, and neither the committee to which the gentleman refers, nor any other committee, nor Congress itself manifests any disposition to take them by the hand, or to relieve them from the scourgings that are inflicted upon them. They come now, meekly as usual, to ask Congress at least to prevent them from the increase of crime by giving them school room sufficient to educate their children. That is all they ask, and the Senator from the grand old State of Massachusetts, which boasts of the excellence of education to all her children, charges the citizens of Washington, when they make this humble appeal, with a cannonade upon the committee. It is remarkable in the source from whence the objection comes.

Is the right of petition to be thus stigmatized when their petition only asks to be allowed to expend their money for the purpose of educating their own children and the children of the poor that there may be less of crime and less of poverty in the District of Columbia?

Then my friend says that it is beyond the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to make estimates. Certainly. The citizens are not asking them to make estimates. Did the distinguished Senator, who is a member of the committee, read the report of the school board of this city? Did he find time for that, may I ask him? Has he read the report of the superintendent of public schools for this year presented to this body?

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator does not ask the committee to make estimates and they have made appropriations for all the estimates, what does he ask the committee to do?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask the Senator if he has read the report of the superintendent of schools of this city? Has he read the one for the current year? Has he read it?

Mr. DAWES. Suppose I have?

Mr. VAN WYCK. It is not a question of supposition; it is a question of fact. Has the Senator read it? [A pause.]

Mr. DAWES. The Senator has come to a full stop because I have not answered his question. Perhaps I should be tempted not to answer it at all.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Just as the Senator chooses. I can not enforce an answer.

Mr. DAWES. I am quite free to say that I have read it with great pleasure and delight, and I have derived a good deal of profit from reading it, but it has thrown no light on the question as to what the Committee on Appropriations can do if they are not called upon to make estimates and have made appropriations for every estimate that somebody else has submitted to them.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If the Senator had gone a little further he might have characterized the proper feeling which the reading of that document would naturally have inspired. He says he read the report with profit and pleasure. I think he could have added that he read it also with pain. That such a state of facts exists as is set forth in the report of the superintendent of the public schools in this city should produce pain in the mind of a distinguished Senator coming from a State which values education so highly as does the State of Masschusetts; that such facts could be stated in the report of the superintendent of education in this city should have brought the Senator to his feet at once in this body and not caused him to enjoy the pleasurable sensation of which he speaks—the idea that such a state of facts could have existed beneath the shadow of the Capitol of this great Republic is a matter which might have better produced pain than pleasure in the mind of the Senator reading it.

The facts are there, and now the committee shields itself under this cannonade, as the Senator calls it, from the fact, he says, that it is beyond the dignity of the committee to make estimates. Certainly the citizens do not ask the committee to make estimates. The necessary estimates will be gladly furnished to them. All the people of the District want is a disposition on the part of the Senate to do for them what they ask and implore and have a right to demand. If Congress is determined to keep its clutch and hold upon a population of 200,000 citizens, intelligent, and desiring that their children should grow up in intelligence, if Congress will insist upon denying to the people of this city home rule, the power to regulate their own matters in regard to a question so important as education, then Senators should not stand up here and find fault with the duty and labor which they impose upon themselves and arraign a feeble people and call it a cannonade because they dare come and ask Congress to relieve them from the stigma and stain that their children should grow up in idleness and that vice and crime should come commensurate with that ignorance and poverty. It is a startling proposition. England answered Ireland, when Ireland demanded home rule and she denied it, in no more opprobious terms than the gentleman who stigmatizes this humble effort as a cannonade on the part of the citizens of Washington. If Congress are determined to deny this little of home rule to this people, this little of self-control to this people, then they must not arrogate to themselves any special prerogatives of dignity when they are called upon to yield in so important a matter as that of education a little of the time and attention which they give to other matters.

Mr. President, I have said all I need to say upon this matter. It was only called out by the very remarkable expression of the Senator from Massachusetts, and I trust what I have said will be sufficient. I trust I may say to those who passed the resolutions that all they have to do is to ask, to stretch forth their hands and to implore, and the doors of the Treasury will be opened at least in the matter of education.

I will say to my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] that there are thousands and thousands of children in this city who are only allowed the advantages of school one-half of each school day because there is not room enough in this great city of this great Republic for which the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] desires to appropriate nearly a hundred million dollars for educational purposes. Thousands of children in this city are denied the privileges of education one-half of each school day of the year because this great Republic will not allow to the citizens of this city the privilege of taxing themselves to build houses or rent rooms for that purpose.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I only rise to suggest to the Senator from Nebraska what perhaps he has overlooked, that the appropriation in the bill to which he refers of $77,000,000 would carry to this District its proportion and would do thus much toward helping out and relieving the evil that the District is suffering from in common with the whole country.

Mr. VAN WYCK. But as that bill is so far off in the future it gives very distant prospects of relief to the citizens of this city, who immediately need relief, and they want it. What a disgrace! And the Committee on Appropriations do not know it! The intelligent Senator from the highly cultured State of Massachusetts does not seem to know that there are thousands of children here to-day not only of school age but upon the roll seeking education, demanding it, and yet the innocence of Senators who have not been properly approached is such that they do not know it; and the report which states that fact does not excite any feeling of dissatisfaction or pain.

Mr. President, I trust that with this explanation on the part of the Committee on Appropriations and the liberality manifested they will see to it that if the commissioners have neglected to press it, as I think they have not, if the superintendents of education in this city have neglected to press it, as I think they have not, they will press this matter now even at the risk of being charged with another cannonade as against the Committee on Appropriations or the Congress of the United States.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further "concurrent or other resolutions?"

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to say a word or two more upon this subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution has been already referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HAWLEY. I rose as soon as the Senator from Nebraska closed his remarks. At any rate I do not think it out of place altogether to say something about the report to which reference has been made, because the discussion will inevitably arise, and it is quite as well that something should be said at least before the Committee on Appropriations has come to any decision. I will confine myself to giving an official statement briefly of the chief facts in this matter as presented by the board of trustees of the schools of this District. They say:

> In the first place, it is shown that the basements of eight of our public school buildings are, under the pressure of absolute necessity, crowded with children. No one of these basements was ever intended for any such purpose, and every one of them is wholly unfit for it. As stated by the superintendents, they are dark, damp, and incapable of proper heating or proper ventilation—so dark that on many days in the year the schools must be dismissed because the children can not see to read their lessons.
> But, in the second place, these reports show that, even after resort to these basements and to the thirty-nine unsuitable rented school-rooms, 9,120 children, or more than one-third of the entire attendance, were restricted to half-day schools last year, for the simple reason that the total seating capacity provided for the accommodation of pupils, these objectionable make-shifts included, left 4,530 children wholly unprovided for, and compelled the unseating of that many other pupils for one-half of each day throughout the school year in order that the first-named might not be wholly excluded from the benefit of the schools. And the statistics for the current year included in the two reports show that the number of children whose common-school opportunities are thus dwarfed and mutilated is now increased to 12,089.

And again:

> We have in actual attendance about 5,000 pupils in excess of the seating capacity provided—

In attendance, mind; 5,000 in excess of the seating capacity—the basement and rented school-rooms all included.

Mr. DAWES. From what is the Senator reading?

Mr. HAWLEY. The "report of the board of trustees of public schools of the District of Columbia for the school year ending June 30, 1886."

Mr. DAWES. To whom is it addressed?

Mr. HAWLEY. I know the legal point the Senator makes. I will attend to it when I get through reading from the report.

Mr. DAWES. I want to know to whom it is addressed.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is addressed to the commissioners of the District of Columbia, who are the mere instruments of Congress.

Mr. DAWES. So I supposed, and they address their conclusion——

Mr. HAWLEY. I will attend to that before I get through.

Mr. DAWES. They address their conclusion to——

Mr. HAWLEY. I will attend to it before I get through. The Senator pleaded in abatement that miserable evasion before. The board of trustees say:

Each teacher, with us, is intrusted with about fifty pupils; so that, retaining the basements and rented buildings, we actually need, at the present time, one hundred additional school rooms.

Again, from Mr. Powell to the president of the board of trustees:

I herewith present a summary of statistics compiled from records in my office and from the report of Superintendent Cook.

This is submitted to the trustees:

The total number of school rooms owned and rented (458) accommodated 21,663 pupils, but there were 26,223 pupils enrolled on an average throughout the school year, excluding those enrolled in the Washington High School.

There were therefore 4,560 pupils for whom there were no seats and 4,560 other pupils were compelled to give up their seats to them a half of each day; that is, there were 9,120 pupils on an average throughout the entire school year who were attending half-day schools.

The condition of the schools for the current year is worse than was that of last year, because the additional demand for school room because of the increase in the population of the city is much in excess of the additional supply.

The additional demand does not keep up with the increase of the number of pupils.

The Senator from Massachusetts says that a cannonade is made upon the Committee on Appropriations. Not at all, sir. I am saying nothing savage or harsh about either the commissioners or the Committee on Appropriations; they must do their duty as seems best to them; but I submit that Congress can not escape its obvious duty in this matter by saying that the commissioners have not asked for all that is needed. They are afraid to ask for all that is needed. That is what I have been told over and over again.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President——

Mr. HAWLEY. To wait until I get through would be just as well and much better. The commissioners do not estimate for what they know to be needed. I state that, and I ask the Committee on Appropriations to summon those commissioners and put them upon their honor to testify—I say nothing of their oath—whether they have asked all that was in their judgment needed by the demands of humanity and common decency for the schools of the District. I say they have not; but whether they have or not, if there be any legal authority in this body to increase that appropriation upon the District appropriation bill I hope it will be done by the Committee on Appropriations, and if not, I hope it will be done by the Senate, that we at least may clear ourselves.

I say deliberately that somebody is disgracefully neglecting duty. It is either the commissioners or the Congress, one or the other. I do not care to attempt to apportion it, but the evil is unquestionable, and is a shame to civilization. Here we have proposed to vote $77,000,000 as a gift to the various States because we say the States are too indolent, or too stupid, or too ignorant to take care of their own children, when right here in the District of Columbia, in the center of the country, in that bit of land which ought to be the typical presentation of the benefits of free government, we are exhibiting a worse neglect of schools, I venture to say, than prevails in any State or Territory of the Union.

Mr. DAWES. No member of the Committee on Appropriations that I have heard of has fallen short of the Senator from Connecticut or the Senator from Nebraska in denouncing the condition, hopeless almost, of the children of this District for want of education. If any commissioner of the District has attempted to shield himself from responsibility by saying that he dare not ask the Committee on Appropriations for what he deems necessary for the education of the children in this District, he has stated to the Senator from Connecticut or to somebody else that which does not exist in fact. Every commissioner of the District ever since I have been upon the subcommittee connected with the District appropriation bill knows that the committee themselves have attempted and have put in appropriations beyond the advice of the commissioners; and when they prefer to have the money taken from the purposes of school education to extend streets out from the boundary of the city, or to expend money in other methods of improvement in this District, they shall not undertake to shield themselves here in this body from any dereliction of duty to the poor beggar children of this District by saying they did not dare to ask for appropriations from the Committee on Appropriations. They never have asked for a dollar since I have served upon that committee for the purposes of education that they did not get, and they have got more than they asked many a time.

Mr. HAWLEY. I disclaim any reflection upon the Appropriations Committee, gentlemen for whom I have the highest respect, personally and officially. I simply state that the condition of the District is infamous.

Mr. DAWES. I agree with the Senator in that.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President——

Mr. BUTLER. If this cannonade can be suspended for a little while, I should like to present some morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no question before the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I think we had better cease firing.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The question is on the reference of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution was referred long since. The Chair endeavored to stop the debate, but could not.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed an order, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate, directing the Clerk to make a duplicate engrossed copy of the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes, indorsing thereon the action of the House in requesting a conference with the Senate on said amendment, and after indorsing on the duplicate engrossed copy of said bill furnished by the Senate in compliance with the request of the House, the action of the House on said bill, he deliver all of said papers to the Senate, and request that body to have indorsed on the duplicate engrossed copy of the amendment of the House the action of the Senate on said amendment in agreeing to a conference, and request the Senate to return all of said papers to the House of Representatives.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8869) granting a pension to Mrs. Henrietta M. Drum Hunt, further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment, asked a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SCOTT, Mr. ELDREDGE, and Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

PACIFIC RAILROAD INVESTIGATION.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 170) authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of Pacific railroads which have received aid from the United States, to report it favorably with an amendment and to ask the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. HALE. Let it be read first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be reported at length.

Mr. HOAR. The joint resolution is altered by recommendation of the committee to a bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to hear it read before we give consent to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute reported by the committee will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HALE. This is a long proposition and a very important matter, and there are other subjects that ought to come up this morning. I think it had better go over and be printed.

Mr. HOAR. If any Senator wants it to go over I am indifferent. The resolution has been submitted to Senators who have represented in debate various views of this question, and so far as I am aware the amendment has the general approbation of all those Senators except in one respect, in which I dissent from it myself, but I think when it is read it will pass without discusson. Still it is quite reasonable that it should go over if the Senator prefers.

Mr. HALE. I do not know that I am opposed to the resolution, but I think it had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. I give notice that I shall call it up at the first possible moment, probably to-morrow, at the proper time.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest that this be printed in the RECORD. I do not know what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order to print has already been made.

Mr. ALLISON. That is in bill form.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Iowa asks that the amendment may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the substitute reported by the Senator from Massachusetts will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The substitute reported by the Committee on the Judiciary is as follows:

That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint three commissioners, whose compensation shall be $750 per month to each, and the necessary traveling expenses and board bills, for which proper vouchers shall be returned, to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior; and said commission may appoint a stenographer, if necessary, and fix his compensation; and the persons appointed on the said commission shall have power to examine all books, papers, and methods of the companies hereinafter named, employ experts if necessary; and they shall at all times be under the immediate direction and control of the President of the United States, and may at any time be removed by him in his discretion.

SEC. 2. That the duty of said commission shall be to examine into the working and financial management of all of the railroads that have received aid from the Government in bonds; to ascertain whether they have observed all the obligations imposed upon them by the laws of the United States under which they received such aid, or which have been since passed in reference thereto, and complied with all other obligations to the United States; and whether their books and accounts are or have been so kept as to show the net earnings of the aided roads, and what said books and accounts actually show in regard thereto, and what have been in fact said net earnings; or whether there has been a diversion of earnings of aided roads to less productive branches, through constructive mileage allowances, or average mileage allowances between aided and non-aided roads or parts of roads, or otherwise, and also whether such system of constructive mileage allowances is fair and usual, and in practical operation has resulted adversely or otherwise to the aided roads and the interest of the United States; or whether there has been a diversion of earnings of aided roads to wrongful or improper purposes, and, if so, to what extent; whether there is a discrimination of rates in favor of unaided against aided roads; whether any, and, if so, how much, money is due and owing to the United States on account of mistaken or erroneous accounts, reports, or settlements made by said roads; whether any traffic or business which could or should be done on the aided lines of said companies has been diverted to the lines of any other company or to non-aided lines, and what amounts have been deducted from the gross earnings of any of said aided railroad companies, by their general freight and passenger agents or auditors, by way of rebate, percentage of business done, constructive mileage, monthly or other payments on any pooling or rate arrangement, contract, or agreement; and also to inquire into, ascertain, and report as to the kind, character, and amount of the assets of said companies, and what assets of each company are now subject to the lien of the Government, and the value thereof; and also whether any dividends have been unlawfully declared by the directors or paid to the stockholders of said companies, and, if so, to what extent, and whether the amount thereof may not be recovered from the directors unlawfully declaring the same or persons who have unlawfully received the same; whether the proceeds of any trust funds or lands loaned, advanced, or granted have been diverted from their lawful use; whether any new stock or bonds have been issued or any guarantees or pledges made contrary to or without authority of law; whether any of the directors, officers, or employés of said companies respectively have been or are now, directly or indirectly, interested, and to what amount or extent, in any other railroad, steamship, telegraph, express, mining, construction, or other business company or corporation, and with which any agreements, undertakings, or leases have been made or entered into; what amounts of money or credit have been or are now loaned by any of said companies to any person or corporation; what amounts of money or credit have been or are now borrowed by any of said companies, giving names of lenders and the purposes for which said sums have been or are now required; what amounts of money or other valuable consideration, such as stocks, bonds, passes, and so forth, have been expended or paid out by said companies, whether for lawful or unlawful purposes, but for which sufficient and detailed vouchers have not been given or filed with the records of said companies; and, further, to inquire and report whether said companies, or either of them, or their officers or agents, have paid any money or other valuable consideration, or done any other act or thing, for the purpose of influencing legislation; and to investigate and report all the facts relating to an alleged consolidation of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, and the Denver Pacific Railway and Telegraph Company into an alleged corporation known as the Union Pacific Railway Company. Said investigation shall include the alleged sale of the stock of the Kansas Pacific Railroad Company to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and all the circumstances and particulars pertaining to said alleged sales, and whether any of the Pacific railroad corporations which obtained bonds from the United States to aid in the construction of their railroads have expended any of their moneys or other assets in the construction, or to aid in the construction, of other railroads, or invested of their moneys or other assets in the stocks or bonds of any manufacturing, mining, and commercial companies or corporations, or of other railroad corporations; and if any such expenditures or investments have been made, the extent and character thereof made by each of said corporations shall be inquired into, and also the present interest of any of said corporations in the railroads auxiliary to their respective railroads.

And said commission shall also ascertain and report the names of all the stockholders in each of said companies, from its organization to the date of the investigation herein provided for, as they appear on the books of said companies at the date of its annual meeting in each year; the amount of stock held by each; what consideration, if any, was paid by each stockholder to said company for his stock, and when and in what property such payment was made; the date when each stockholder so appearing on the books became such; and whether stock is now held or has heretofore been held in the name of any person in trust or for the benefit of any other, and the names of all such persons; the total amount of stock in each company, and the dates and amount of any increase of such stock, and the reason for such increase; and the amount of the annual salaries or compensation that are now or at any prior time have been paid to any officer or employé of said company, when such salary or compensation amounts to $5,000 or more per annum, and the names of the persons now receiving or who have heretofore received such salaries or compensation, and all bonuses or donations which may have been given or paid to any such person; and all payments made under the head of legal expenses, to whom made, and the amount paid to each, and for what specific services such payments were made.

Said commissioners shall also consider and report whether the interests of the United States require any extension of the time for the performance of the obligations to the United States of said companies, or any of them, and the facts and circumstances upon which said opinion is based, including the security held by the United States for the performance of such obligations, and the value thereof, and the value of the property of such companies, and either of them, not included in such security, and what further security it is expedient that said companies shall be required to give; and if, in their opinion, such extension shall be required by the interests of the United States, they shall submit a scheme for such extension, which shall secure to the United States full payment of all debts due them from said companies, with a reasonable rate of interest, in such time as the commissioners shall propose, having due regard to the financial ability of said companies and the proper conduct of their business in such manner as shall afford efficient service to the public.

And the said commission shall report in full in regard to all such matters aforesaid, and in regard to any other matters which may be ascertained or come to their knowledge in regard to said companies respectively, on or before December 1, 1887, to the President of the United States, who shall forward said report to Congress with such recommendations or comments as he may see fit to make in the premises.

That the commissioners hereby created, or either of them, shall have power to require the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all books, papers, contracts, agreements, and documents relating to the matter under investigation, and to administer oaths; and to that end may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents under the provisions of this section. Any of the circuit or district courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any person, issue an order requiring any such person to appear before said commissioners, or either of them, as the case may be, and produce books and papers if so ordered, and give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

The claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such witness from testifying; but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the purposes of this investigation.

SEC. 4. That whenever, in the opinion of the President, it shall be deemed necessary to the protection of the interests and the preservation of the security of the United States, in respect of its lien, mortgage, or other interest in any of the property of any or all of the several companies upon which a lien, mortgage, or other incumbrance paramount to the right, title, or interest of the United States for the same property, or any part of the same, may exist and be then lawfully liable to be enforced, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, under the direction of the President, redeem or otherwise clear off such paramount lien, mortgage, or other incumbrance by paying the sums lawfully due in respect thereof out of the Treasury; and the United States shall thereupon become and be subrogated to all rights and securities theretofore pertaining to the debt, mortgage, lien, or other incumbrance in respect of which such payment shall have been made. It shall be the duty of the Attorney-General, under the direction of the President, to take all such steps and proceedings, in the courts and otherwise, as shall be needful to redeem such lien, mortgage, or other incumbrance, and to protect and defend the rights and interests of the United States in respect of the matters in this section mentioned, and to take steps to foreclose any mortgages or liens of the United States on any such railroad property.

SEC. 5. That from and after the first day of July, 1887, there shall be charged to and collected from the Central Pacific Railroad Company, the Union Pacific Railway or Railroad Company, by whichever description it may be lawfully known, the Central Branch Union Pacific Railway Company, the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company, and the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, as all the same are described and known in the acts of Congress providing for issuing bonds in aid of the same, or acts in addition thereto, their successors and assigns respectively, 40 per cent. of their respective annual net earnings, to be ascertained as provided in section 1 of the act of May 7, 1878, in lieu of the 25 per cent. provided for in said act, so far as the same respects the companies mentioned in said act, and as to the others herein mentioned absolutely; and to that end the said act of May 7, 1878, and any and all amendments or modifications thereof, be, and the same are hereby, extended to the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, to the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company, and to the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company; and said act, and all amendments thereto or modifications thereof, shall henceforth apply to the said respective corporations herein last named, as well as to the corporations named in said act.

SEC. 6. The sinking-funds which are or may be held in the Treasury for the security of the indebtedness of either or all of said railroad companies may, in addition to the investment now authorized by law, be invested in any bonds of the United States heretofore issued for the benefit of either or all of said companies, or in any of the first-mortgage bonds of either of said companies which have been issued under the authority of any law of the United States and secured by mortgages of their roads and franchises, which by any law of the United States have been made prior and paramount to the mortgage, lien, or other security of the United States in respect of its advances to either of said companies as provided by law.

Amend the title so as to read; "An act authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of railroads which have received aid from the United States, and for other purposes."

Mr. MCPHERSON. Do I understand that objection has been made to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection has been made to its present consideration, and it goes over and will be placed upon the Calendar.

HOURS OF SITTING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], which comes over under objection. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That, for the remainder of the session, the Senate will convene at 11 o'clock a. m., and, with a recess of one hour, will continue in session until 9 p. m.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that resolution will not be adopted. I do not think the public business requires——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator move to refer it?

Mr. ALLISON. I move to refer it to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa to refer the resolution to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

THE MACKEREL FISHERY.

Mr. PALMER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1833, being the bill (H. R. 5538) relating to the importing and landing of mackerel caught during the spawning season.

Mr. MILLER. I hope the Senator will not insist on that now. I shall necessarily leave the Chamber within a very short time, and I can not be here for the remainder of the day. I trust that bill will be allowed to go over. It is set apart as a special order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. PALMER. I would state that this bill was passed last session by the House of Representatives and was acted upon by the Senate Committee on Fisheries, but, on account of the unavoidable absence of myself first, and of the Senator from New York secondly, action has been deferred at this session. I should like to grant the courtesy that the Senator from New York asks, and if he will not ask it to too great an extent I shall be willing to defer the consideration of the bill at present. If he can state a time when I can call it up, I should like to have him do so.

Mr. MILLER. I shall be prepared on my part to take up this bill next Tuesday without fail, and perhaps on Monday, but I am not positive that I can be here on Monday. I certainly shall be here on Tuesday and will make no objection to taking it up then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan withdraw his motion?

Mr. MILLER. If I am not here on Tuesday I shall make no objection.

Mr. PALMER. I withdraw the motion.

TERM OF COURTS AT TEXARKANA.

Mr. BERRY. I move to take up Order of Business 2071, being House bill 9116. It is a local matter that will not take five minutes.

Mr. CULLOM. Regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9116) to provide for holding terms of United States courts at Texarkana, Ark., and for other purposes.

Mr. BERRY. It will not take five minutes. The reading of the bill will be sufficient.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the circuit judge of the United States for the circuit in which the eastern district of Arkansas is situated may, in his discretion, whenever in his opinion the public interest shall require it, order special terms, not exceeding two in each year, of said circuit court, to be held at the city of Texarkana, in said district. Notice of the time of holding such special terms shall be publicly given by such advertisement in two newspapers printed in said district as said circuit judge shall think proper, which notice shall be published at least twenty days before the day fixed for holding such term.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BERRY. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and ask a conference with the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. EDMUNDS, Mr. WILSON of Iowa, and Mr. COKE were appointed.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LAND.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following order from the House of Representatives:

Ordered, That the Clerk be directed to make a duplicate engrossed copy of the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes, indorsing thereon the action of the House in requesting a conference with the Senate on said amendment, and after indorsing on the duplicate engrossed copy of said bill furnished by the Senate in compliance with the request of the House the action of the House on said bill, he deliver all of said papers to the Senate, and request that body to have indorsed on the duplicate engrossed copy of the amendment of the House the action of the Senate on said amendment in agreeing to a conference, and request the Senate to return all of said papers to the House of Representatives.

Mr. DOLPH. I offer the following order, to comply with the request of the House:

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to indorse the action of the Senate agreeing to the conference asked by the House on the amendment of House to the bill S. 2172 on the duplicate engrossed copy of the said amendment, and return the papers to the House of Representatives agreeably to its request.

The order was agreed to.

REFUNDING OF DIRECT TAX.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 995.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. DAWES. I do not like to interrupt the Senator, but I desire to call up the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. MORRILL. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 995) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861.

The bill was read.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order. It is absolutely impossible to hear where I sit the Chief Clerk reading from the desk, the disorder in the Senate is so great.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The business of the Senate will be suspended until order is resumed. Conversation among Senators should cease.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report on the bill?

Mr. HOAR. Will the Chief Clerk read again the bill which he has just read? It is short.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say that the Committee on Finance propose to amend the proposition in the bill which would pay 15 per cent. where the States promptly paid the tax. In other words, the bill only proposes to pay back to the several States that have paid the direct tax the exact amount that has been paid.

I presume that this subject is well understood by nearly all Senators; that the major part of the States have paid the tax in full, whereas several of them have not. Some have paid a part, and some perhaps none at all. The documents in relation to this matter are very voluminous, and in order to present the case as it would be presented by a report, I will ask the Secretary to read the statement of the case by Secretary Folger, and I presume it will be understood by all, that there is no method by which this matter can be actually and finally settled and made just and equitable to the several States except by collecting from those States that have not paid the balance that may be due from them, or restoring to all those who have paid the full amount so paid.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator state what the aggregate amount will be?

Mr. MORRILL. About $15,000,000, less 15 per cent.

Mr. CULLOM. Does the report show the amount which each State would be entitled to under the bill?

Mr. MORRILL. That it is impossible to state with entire accuracy, because the register's office would not, perhaps, agree with the accounts of the Treasury Department. Some States have paid something, and where claims of theirs have been allowed to the States the amount has been credited to them, and that may not appear in the accounts kept in relation to the direct tax. I ask the Secretary to read what I have marked on the margin of the paper which I send to him, from Secretary Folger.

Mr. SHERMAN (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). Before that statement is read I think a few words, if I can get the attention of the Senate for a moment, will inform them as to the condition of this very important bill. I only wish to recall facts known to every Senator.

This bill has been several times recommended by the Treasury Department, partly because it is an act of justice to the States that paid the money, but chiefly as a relief from legal complications and many lawsuits in which the United States are likely to be and are now involved with the Southern States, or the States lately in rebellion. It is only necessary to state a few historical facts to bring the whole case before the Senate.

During the war a tax of $20,000,000 was levied upon all the States, North and South alike. The proposition was made that if any State would pay its share of the tax it would be allowed a discount of 15 per cent., and under that provision almost all the States not in rebellion paid the tax to the General Government. Some did not because they had not the means to do it, and it was gradually collected or paid by them subsequently. Practically, I think, all the States, with one or two exceptions, that were not in rebellion paid the tax.

This amount was charged to the States formerly in rebellion, and was collected in some of those States from private individuals, as in the State of South Carolina, where a greater amount was collected from private individuals by the sale of lands than the tax levied against South Carolina.

Under the law as it now stands, whenever any money becomes due to a State it is placed to the credit of the State; but as this charge stands on the books of the Treasury against eleven or twelve or thirteen States of the Union, and has not been paid, there has been a constant state of irritation between the Treasury Department and the Southern States in regard to their claims as shown upon the books of the Treasury Department. Occasionally the First Comptroller will give a credit to a State, the State of Georgia for instance. A bill passed Congress allowing Georgia a certain sum of money, which the Secretary of the Treasury at once placed to the credit of Georgia, but did not pay over the money because under the plain language of the law he was forbidden to pay over to any State any money accruing to it in the course of business until it had settled its various dues and accounts with the Government.

The result is that the United States are now in litigation with several of the Southern States and have some controversies with several of the Northern States that did not pay up the amount of their direct tax promptly. Under the circumstances three or four Secretaries of the Treasury have recommended that out of the overflowing money in the Treasury there be paid back to the States that paid this tax the actual amount they paid of the direct tax, and that there be credited to the States that did not pay the money their quota of the tax, so as to practically equalize and restore things to the condition in which they were before the tax was levied. It is manifestly just. It has been uniformly recommended by the Department of late years, and it is now recommended, I know, by the Committee on Finance unanimously after a full examination.

There are voluminous documents and reports here without number, giving the details and showing the amount due to each State.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] desires me to incorporate, and I will make it part of my remarks, a table which shows the exact state of the account with each State, and whether it paid the tax or not. I will make that a part of my remarks.

Statement of the condition of the direct-tax accounts of the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, under acts of August 5, 1861, and June 7, 1862, as appears from the books of the Register of the Treasury to date.

¶ Balance due State.

ROS. A. FISH,
Assistant Register.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Register's Office, March 22, 1886.

Mr. HALE. What is the aggregate as shown by that which was collected from the States which did pay?

Mr. SHERMAN. Between fourteen and fifteen million dollars, but they got a discount of 15 per cent. and that we do not allow. We give them back the exact amount they paid.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow the table showing the amount each State is to receive to be read by the Secretary now so that we may understand what it is?

Mr. SHERMAN. It would be quite a complicated thing. It can be printed in the RECORD and the Senator can read it there.

Mr. CULLOM. But if we are now to vote on the bill, I should like to know what it is.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator can see the table. He can not understand it from the reading at the desk because the table is made up on the condition that 15 per cent. is remitted, and also on the condition that it is not remitted, and also the various other conditions. However, the amount is stated in the table.

Mr. MORRILL. Illinois gets over $1,100,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. Illinois will receive, in one view of the case, that is if the 15 per cent. is allowed, $1,146,000. Without the 15 per cent. it gets $974,000. The whole amount is stated here.

Mr. VAN WYCK. What is the aggregate?

Mr. SHERMAN. The aggregate of the refund I think is about fourteen or fifteen million dollars, and the balance is credited to the several States that did not pay, so that they are relieved from any further claim for payment of the direct tax.

I have made this statement simply that the Senate may understand the importance of this question and the fact that the bill has been maturely and fully considered, and I believe it is a measure that will be highly acceptable to all the States of the Union at this time.

Mr. MORRILL. After the statement of the Senator from Ohio I do not know that it is necessary to read the report of Secretary Folger on this subject, but I ask to have it appended to my remarks.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read also.

Mr. VAN WYCK. This is an important bill, and I think the statement should be read.

Mr. MORRILL. Let the portion I have marked be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 14, 1884.

SIR: I have the honor of acknowledging the receipt from you of the bill (H. R. 110) entitled "A bill to adjust certain accounts between the United States and the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia."

This bill relates to the direct tax of $20,000,000 annually laid upon the United States, and apportioned to the States, the Territories, and the District of Columbia under the act of Congress passed August 5, 1861 (12 Stat. at Large, page 294). The purpose of the bill is to relieve and discharge from further liability for that tax those States and Territories which have not paid the portion thereof apportioned to them respectively; and to repay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to those States and Territories which have paid any portion the sums by them respectively paid. Though by the act above cited this tax was made an annual one, an attempt to collect it for more than one year has never been made. By that attempt there were collected about $15,000,000, principally from the States which did not seek to go out of the Union, and there were left uncollected about $5,000,000, principally in the States which did seek to go out of the Union. The sum uncollected remains a charge against those States, and for the purposes of this letter it may be assumed that it is a valid and enforceable charge. It is plain, however, that no legislator at this day would propose to raise revenue by a tax of that kind. There is no need of resorting to such method.

The revenues of the Government, from sources not so extraordinary, and collectible by means and appliances not so objectional as those involved therein, are ample for its purposes. They are, indeed, superabundant, and the concern of statesmen is rather how they may be reduced than how they may be increased. The Government, then, needs not the money to be got by enforcing this tax. At the same time it is plain that to enforce it would put a grievous burden upon the people of the States which are in default in payment. It needs no array of facts to show this. Congress in one, if not both branches, has this session considered the proposition of large pecuniary aid to these people to help them place and keep up common schools, and the Senate has passed a bill therefor. If there be need for that succor, there would be harm in enforcing this charge. It is to be considered, too, that while taxes are seldom looked upon with favor, this would be specially objectionable. The purpose for which it was laid can but be remembered with distaste. It can scarcely be expected that there would be cheerful aid from the State authorities in the enforcement of it. It may be doubted whether there would be any. Indeed it would, without further legislation, have to be enforced by the machinery provided by the act under which it was laid. This would call for the appointment of numerous Federal officials who would go among the people as obnoxious exactors. I think it must be conceded that there is, and ever will be, great reluctance to ever setting about the collection of this tax. That it never had great favor is shown by that it was never put in force but one year. In practical effect, then, the law for it is obsolete. Why, then, should there remain this unenforced liability, a menace to the people, the enforcement of which is called for by no public need nor by any public opinion?

In my judgment the people and the property of the States in default should be relieved and discharged from it.

But to give such relief and discharge would be to put an inequality of burden upon the States which paid unless they in turn were in some way relieved. This the bill proposes to do by repaying to them the sums received from them. Assuming that the tax was lawful, and the collection as far as made was warranted, this, apart from the circumstances, would be a proposition to donate to the States surplus moneys of the United States, a proposition which I should not favor. But as connected with the proposition to discharge from onerous and needless liability one portion of the people, it takes on a different character; it is presented as an adjustment between different bodies of the people, and is worthy of acceptation. Indeed, it would be unjust to the people of the loyal States to release the people of the once insurrectionary States from their liability without refunding to the former the sums paid by them, and there are analogies in the legislation of Congress.

Acts have been passed, refunding to States moneys raised by them for the raising, arming, and equipping of troops for the Army of the United States in the civil war; and for making other refunds of like character. The purpose of laying this direct tax was to aid in the ultimate payment of the extraordinary expenses of the Government caused by the civil war. The raising, arming, and equipping of troops by the States served to keep down those expenses for the time. It was a voluntary act upon the part of the States. There is no violation of principle or fundamental law in repaying to the States from the funds of the United States the cost thereof. The purpose and effect of this bill is not so unlike in nature to that as not also to be freed from the objections to a bald distribution among the States of what are called the surplus revenues of the United States.

Under the peculiar facts of the case, and as it is not likely to become a precedent for other disposals of Federal moneys, my judgment is that the proposed measure is a good one. It is true that exactly equal justice can not be done in carrying out the proposition of the bill. Thus, in some of the Southern States, the tax was to some extent enforced. Tax sales were made of pieces of real estate, in instances, for less than the value of them. Only the surplus of purchase money over the tax and charges has been available to the owners, and they have lost the difference between that and the total of the purchase money and between the purchase money and the real value. On the other hand, in most, if not all, of the Northern States the payment to the United States of the tax was assumed by the State government, which collected the amount of its own people in its own tax levy. Of course, in the changes of citizenship and of ownership of taxable property, while a repayment into the State treasury will tend to reduce the amount of State tax, it will not inure to the benefit of some of those who, in 1861, were tax-payers. But these failures of full and general compensation in dealing with transactions so long past must ensue, and are not to be potentially urged against proposed measures which, in the main, do work equal benefit.

I also inclose herewith a communication to me from the First Comptroller of the Treasury, which presents views in accord with some of those expressed by me, and gives tables of value, and a draught of a bill; and to this communication I ask attention.

Very respectfully, CHAS. J. FOLGER, Secretary.

Hon. A. J. WARNER,
Chairman Subcommittee of Committee on Claims,
House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I think the amendment has not been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 8, after the word "thereto," the committee propose to strike out the words "with an additional sum of 15 per cent. upon all amounts so collected where such States or Territories or the District of Columbia have collected the same without cost to the United States;" so as to make the section read:

That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to credit to each State and Territory of the United States, and the District of Columbia, a sum equal to all collections made from said States and Territories and the District of Columbia under the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861, and the amendatory acts thereto.

Mr. BECK. In section 3, line 6, after the word "same," I suggest to add "the governor of the State." All I want is that the money shall be paid to the authorities of the State, either the treasurer or governor.

Mr. TELLER. I think it should be paid to the treasurer.

Mr. BUTLER. Say, "paid on the warrant of the governor."

Mr. BECK. What I desire is that the money shall go directly to the State, and if any agent or anybody has any claim let him make it to the State.

Mr. CULLOM. Warrants are always issued to the governor of a State, at any rate.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Illinois has been a governor and knows exactly the language which is necessary.

Mr. CULLOM. It ought to be paid directly to the governor of a State.

Mr. TELLER. I submit to the superior knowledge of the late governor of Illinois.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 6, after the word "same" it is proposed to insert "to the governor of the State;" so as to read:

SEC. 3. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to reimburse each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia for all money found due to them under the provisions of this act; and the Treasurer of the United States is hereby directed to pay the same to the governor of the State.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that his amendment does not provide for payments to the Territories and the District of Columbia. It merely provides for the States. The Territories and District of Columbia are also interested.

Mr. BECK. Add the words "and Territories." The amendment was proposed in such a hurry that I did not have time to put it in proper shape. I move to insert the words:

To the governors of the States and Territories and to the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WYCK. From the statement that this bill receives the entire approbation of the Finance Committee, it would seem probably useless to say a word in opposition to the proposition.

From the report of the Secretary of the Treasury it appears that the embarrassment arises from the difficulty of collecting from the Southern States the quota of this tax which was due from them. That is one distinct proposition which can readily be understood. If there be any reason, at this length of time from the war, which caused the necessity of this tax, why those States should be exempt from the payment which is due to the Government from them, that is one question which might call for the attention of Congress and the country. But when it is proposed to take from fifteen to twenty million dollars out of the Treasury and pay it to the States which paid it in, it seems to be establishing a precedent which may come back to curse Congress if they should feel themselves bound to follow the precedent.

We have many claims arising from the war which are not paid, claims that are honest, preferred by citizens whose property was taken. We have been told repeatedly that persons who suffered by the loss of their property by the ravages of war must regard that loss as an incident of war, and if we commenced to pay debts of that kind there never would be any end, and therefore the Treasury would be depleted by paying an honest debt to an honest citizen. Is there any reason why, because a Union man's buildings lay in the pathway of war and were subject to its havoc and destruction, he should not be compensated when he has been impoverished, upon the pretext that it was a consequence of war, unfortunate for him but too great for the Government to attempt to liquidate?

Now, we propose what? To take from fifteen to twenty million dollars out of the Treasury which was put there in response to the law and by its act. Since then there have been changed conditions in the country. Could we have received it one day and have paid it the next day there would be no injustice in making this voluntary gift; but injustice will be done to some sections of the country because there have been changes in population, and those who contributed in New York and in Pennsylvania, and other great States, will receive a large portion of this donation, of this gift, of this charity—for it is nothing else—on the part of the Government. The population has gone out from those older and richer States, and the men who have gone from them are now citizens of the younger States, that receive none of this bounty. If it is well to distribute fifteen or twenty million dollars as charity, or as a gift, why should it not be distributed on the basis of population among, if you please, the loyal States? The States of the South which were in rebellion contributed not their share; and if the loyal States were the only ones which contributed, then why not apportion this fifteen or twenty million dollars from the Treasury among those States in proportion to their population. By that measure the younger, the poorer, the most heavily-taxed portion of this Republic would receive some of the benefits of this great munificence, instead of pouring it into the laps of States already overgrown in wealth, like New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, and Ohio. The States in the Northwest contributed then, and are contributing to-day, in proportion to their wealth, more than the Eastern States; contributing more of their labor than these wealthy States; and why should they not receive a share of this bounty?

The money has gone into the Treasury. It will go out to repay New York, where it was raised how? Not by direct taxation. The wealth of New York did not contribute; but the poverty of the Northwest contributed, if I may use that term, and only in contradistinction with the great wealth of the East. They contribute by the charges which they pay in tariff duties, by the charges which they pay upon sugar, for instance. The humble settler in any of the Northwestern States pays precisely the same into the National Treasury in the duty upon sugar as the millionaire in New York or Pennsylvania.

Mr. SAULSBURY. How about whisky?

Mr. VAN WYCK. They pay the same on whisky, and I will say to my friend who asks about whisky, that they may pay a little more than the Eastern States, because there is more population belonging to that potential political family to which my friend [Mr. SAULSBURY] belongs.

Therefore it is that there seems to be no sort of justice in this proposition. Is there any reason why New York should be paid nearly $3,000,000 because she contributed near $3,000,000 to carry on the war. Then the individual citizen of the State, then the municipalities and counties which impoverished themselves by raising money to pay bounties to soldiers who went to the war ought to be repaid.

If this is unanimously reported from the Finance Committee, it seems to be in the spirit which is manifested very much prevalent at this time, to deplete the Treasury, to empty it, when the difficulty with the people of this Republic to-day is that there are surplus millions in the Treasury. The people are demanding to-day that the sources of taxation, that the sources from which these millions are drawn, shall be stopped; not that you shall open one end of the Treasury and let it run out and hunt for avenues in which it may escape, but that you may stop the drain on the people which draws taxes from them and fills the Treasury full. There is the point with the people; not that the money is there; and when one and another attempt is made to drain this money from the Treasury and not stop the sources of supply from which this money is taken, there arises objection in the public mind.

We can not escape our duty in that direction. It is to reduce the excessive duties imposed by our tariff laws; but those are perhaps to be continued. You empty this fifteen or twenty million dollars into the treasuries of the various States of the Republic, but you do not seek to take fifteen or twenty million dollars of burden off the people who are required to pay the money. They who use sugar in the East and in the West, in the North and the South, are still required to pay their 2 cents upon the pound of sugar; and you have an equality in the collection. There is no difference between the laborer and the millionaire; each pays his 2 cents per pound upon the sugar he uses. You have equality there, but in the distribution of this gift, of this bounty, the equality ceases.

I desired merely to make this suggestion more in the nature of a protest, because there is evidently power enough. There are strong, powerful States sufficient to pass this bill into a law; and when it is done, the next we shall hear if there be a few more such measures, and we can not stop, will be that we can not ask for a reduction of tariff duties because we must have money in the Treasury.

It has been said here by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee and other distinguished gentlemen that it is extremely doubtful whether in the future there will be any surplus in the Treasury. Then, had we not better pause? There is no need of haste about this. These great States, these wealthy States have paid this tax, a debt which they owed to the United States. They have received full consideration for it. Then, let the money remain in the Treasury to be appropriated in some other way besides paying it back to those who paid it. Let us see whether there will be an objectionable surplus in the revenue, and then direct our attention to the stoppage of taxation, which is the only matter of which the people complain.

It may be deemed necessary in order to strengthen the arguments of the high protectionists, it may be necessary in order to strengthen the arguments of those who think that internal-revenue taxation should be continued, to show an apparent necessity for their continuance by pointing to a diminution of the amount in the Treasury; but I ask, of course without any expectation of its being complied with, that this money at least shall be equally distributed, because, as I have said, there is more justice in giving to the humble citizen who has lost his all and been beggared, there is more justice in paying a portion of his honest claim against the government that despoiled him on the ground of the necessities of war, than in paying three millions into the treasury of the State of New York, two millions into the treasury of Pennsylvania, and nearly two millions into the treasury of the State of Ohio. You may do this because you have the power, but it will be only upon that ground.

If the Southern States, as I have said before, are unable to pay their quota, forgive them the debt, if you please; but do not in connection with that, in the way of magnanimity or generosity, couple with it a proposition unjust as I think this proposition to be. Therefore it is that I have a right to state, and I do state and believe, that this is only one of kindred propositions to deplete the Treasury so that there may be no apparent excuse for granting what the people ask—a reduction of taxation and a reduction of duties which weigh heavily upon the people of this nation.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President——

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Vermont before he goes on.

This bill disposes, as I understand, of something like $18,000,000 of assets, which are in the form partly of charges against certain States and partly in the form of cash paid into the Treasury. I should be glad to know what the total is on the books, and how much of that total is to be restored to the States in cash, and how much is to be accounted for simply by settling the accounts on the books by forgiving the debts.

Mr. MORRILL. The nearest approach to accuracy on the subject that I have been able to arrive at is that a trifle over twelve millions of money will go out of the Treasury, and about five millions of unpaid tax will be relinquished.

I will say, Mr. President, that I think it is unnecessary to continue the debate after the very lucid speech of the Senator from Nebraska. We have the money on hand; we are not about to tax anybody for money to pay this debt, and it is the nearest approach to justice that it is possible to devise from all the information we can obtain on the subject from the Treasury Department, from documents, and from other sources.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Now one word as to that proposition that we have the money on hand, as an excuse for taking $18,000,000 out of the Treasury that we have the $18,000,000 there. If we take $18,000,000 out of the Treasury we must continue our excessive duties and taxes and put $18,000,000 more there again to provide for the expenses of this Government. It is a fallacious argument that we have the money there. Certainly we have it there. We could have no government without money there. But the fact is that $18,000,000 has been paid there when it has been required to be paid by the laws of this nation. It is there, and I say to my friend, and I desire to say to the people of this country that when that $18,000,000 is taken out $18,000,000 more will be drawn by taxation from the people to supply its place, and it necessarily must be so.

But this and other projects like this are to be the excuse for continuing to draw from the pockets of the people this unjust and, as I think, altogether oppressive burdens of taxation. Keep your eighteen million; do not give three million to New York which she does not need; she received consideration for what she gave. Give pensions to soldiers who are wasting out their lives in poor-houses, and then we can talk about the eighteen million being in the Treasury to pay the States. I have seen growing, and so have the people of this nation, this desire, this determination at every conceivable opportunity to deplete the Treasury of the United States so as to prevent any reduction in taxation by the tariff and other things which the people of this nation feel to be oppressive and unjust.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think there ought to appear somewhere upon the record a statement of this account. The Senator from Vermont did not quite complete it, but the Chair has kindly furnished me something upon the subject. The total amount is about $20,000,000 to be repaid, less 15 per cent., or $17,000,000, which, roughly, is cash $12,000,000 to be taken out of the Treasury, and a reduction of the surplus to that amount and a credit of $5,000,000. That is to say, $17,000,000 are disposed of by this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The occupant of the chair handed to the Reporter the precise statement giving the amount to be repaid to each State under the operation of the bill, but it was not read.

Mr. HAWLEY. But it will appear in the RECORD, then.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understand the necessity for this bill is in order to adjust the accounts between the Treasury and the several States of this Union. Personally I would prefer to have forgiven the debt due by the Southern States that were out of the Union when the tax was imposed so that the money could not be collected from them. I would have preferred myself that the committee should have proposed, in order to adjust the accounts of the Treasury, to forgive those delinquent States all their debt and let the money that had been paid in twenty-odd years ago remain in the Treasury. I remember when it was collected in my State. Being a direct tax, of course it had to be levied on all the States then recognized as being in the Union, the Southern States as well as the others. But the Southern States were not in a condition for the Government to collect it, and nobody at that time expected that it would be collected out of the Southern States. But the States that were in the Union and could be reached by the Federal collectors were compelled to pay it. I know in my own State we assumed the debt and levied the tax upon the holders of real estate in the State and raised the money and paid it into the Treasury. I suppose that was done in most of the States. Now, you can not return it to the men who paid it; you return it to the State governments.

As I before remarked, if the committee could have prepared a bill by geheral acquiescence providing that the delinquent States should be forgiven their debt I would have preferred that to any other arrangement. The bill seems to be equitable on the principle upon which it is proposed; that is, to return to the States which did pay the amount which they paid and forgive the others. Personally I would have preferred the absolute gift to the States that were then Confederate States and out of the Union, for at that time there was not a single member of Congress who ever expected one dollar of the tax levied on these States to be collected; but being a direct tax, and the Constitution requiring that all direct taxes should be equally laid, Congress had of course to apportion a part of it to the Southern States.

Mr. VAN WYCK. This is a matter of importance. Perhaps people generally may have given the matter some consideration, but I think there are Senators who have not had opportunity, certainly I have not had, to give it that thought which its importance deserves. I ask the Senator from Kentucky whether there was objection in the committee, or has there been in the Senate, to releasing the defaulting States from their obligation by reason of this tax, without imposing the onerous condition of distributing the money actually collected back to the States that paid?

Mr. BECK. I had the honor to serve for, I believe, six years upon the Committee of Ways and Means of the House and eight years in this body, and this has been a bone of contention and annoyance ever since I first came to Congress, and I see no other equitable way to settle it unless the way we now propose. We are able to do it. We shall never do it in any other way. It has been a contention all the time. Any attempt to give up what is charged to the Southern States when the others have paid the tax would be utterly impracticable, and such a proposition never could approach success. We can not do it in any other way than this. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] knows that when he was chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means in the House, and I served under him, we had the subject before us, and at last, I believe, there is no way to do it but this.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If the Southern States had directly paid their quota under this law, does the Senator think there would ever have been a proposition to repay the other States what they paid?

Mr. BECK. I think not. I think there would have been no necessity for it in that contingency.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Precisely; that is the point I desire to impress on the Senate. Had all these defaulting States paid promptly, the Senator admits, as I presume the whole committee will admit, that there never would have been an attempt to divide this money among the States of the Union. Then they were embarrassed by this one question, how they should deal with the defaulting States. I fail to see in a proposition presented to Congress to relieve the defaulting States from the payment of their debt which by reason of certain circumstances it may be magnanimous or even just, perhaps because of their poverty after the war, and I think the people generally will fail to see any reason why in doing that act of justice we should couple with it another act which has not the character of justice at all. The other States have paid their debt to the Government. They have only paid what they were obliged to pay—New York nearly $3,000,000, Pennsylvania nearly $2,000,000. They only paid what was their due; and now because there are other debtors who have not paid theirs, is that any reason, any pretense even, why we should pay back to the debtors who did pay and received consideration for their money, because there are poor defaulting debtors who can not pay?

I see no propriety in that, Mr. President, and I only want to stop long enough to protest, because I think all I may say will amount to nothing. This thing is all fixed and settled, undoubtedly. New York must vote for it for the $3,000,000 that comes back to her treasury; Ohio must because there is a million and a half to go into her treasury, and she can not forego the opportunity to take a million and a half out of the Treasury of the United States. Pennsylvania gets nearly $2,000,000, and of course her statesmen must not hesitate a moment if they can put their hands in far enough and strong enough to take out $2,000,000 from the Treasury of the United States and put it into the treasury of the State.

So the bill will go through. Why? Under what pretence? There are claims against you that you can pay with this $18,000,000. Can you, sir, stand before the people of Ohio and say it is just? There is no justice in taking $3,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States and putting it in the treasury of the State of New York. No New York Senator can make an argument that will induce the citizens of New York to believe there is anything just in that. There is no reason for it. We have claims on us, we have honest debts against this Government, we have citizens without number who have been impoverished by reason of the war, by having their property taken from them, as I said before, and they receive no consideration at the hands of a Senate which is willing to take $18,000,000 out of the Treasury and pay it where it does not belong, where there is no pretense of a claim for it, not the least; and you turn impoverished men from your doors and you refuse to give what the ordinary principles of justice require. You turn them out of the doors of your Senate Chamber when you acknowledge the justice and equity of their claims, and content yourselves with saying that to pay them would establish a precedent that would cost us millions of dollars.

Look at it just for a moment. These wealthy States with no claim against this Government are to receive this money, and you turn out of doors the beggared man who lost all in the track of war; you turn him out and tell him his claim is just and equitable, but there is danger that the Treasury may give out before such honest claims are paid.

Mr. GEORGE. It is well, Mr. President, for the Senate to understand the true attitude of this case, so far as the Southern States are concerned. It has been stated on the floor that this question has been distinctly presented in the case of a debt due to the State of Georgia by the United States. What is the act under which the tax was apportioned among the States, and what is the Constitution on that point? But I especially now call atttention to the act. There was no attempt on the part of Congress to assess the tax against the State in its corporate capacity; that is, to create a debt against the State as a State debt and a State obligation. The whole effect of the law of 1861 apportioning the tax among the several States was to authorize the tax-collectors of the United States to collect from the tax-payers in each State up to the amount apportioned to the State; and the result of all that legislation was simply that when the tax was assessed the separate share of each tax-payer became a legal debt to the United States, and unless the State by act of its Legislature assumed the debt, as that act provided it might do, then there was no debt against the State. And so far now as the rebel States are concerned the tax stands in this attitude exactly: there is no claim against the State governments; none whatever. The claim which the United States have is against the tax-payers, and not against the tax-payers of 1887, but against the tax-payers of 1861.

It is an obligation which the tax-payers who then existed owed, each for his separate share of the tax. That is exactly the legal attitude of this case; and that view of it, I want to state to the Senate, has received the unanimous sanction of the Judiciary Committee of this body, who in the Georgia case directed the report of a bill to pay to the State that which the Treasury officials had detained from the State, which was her acknowledged right against the United States on account of this debt. The Judiciary Committee all agreed that it was such a set-off as could not be enforced against the State, because there was no legal obligation on the part of the State to pay it; and so it is with all the other States.

I want the Senate to exactly understand the condition of the case. You may go into Mississippi and Georgia and collect as much of this tax as you can, but you must find the tax-payer of 1861; you must assess it upon him for the amount which he owed at that time.

I wish the Senate to understand another proposition in this matter. The tax was no lien upon the land beyond two years; so that if a man in 1861 had 10,000 acres of land in Mississippi, and on that account owed $5,000 for taxes, and to-day he is insolvent, and his land belongs to somebody else, you can not collect that at all.

The equity of the bill, however, so far as the Southern States are concerned, is this, and I believe I shall vote for it upon that equity: The United States Treasury officials, by a ruling of the Treasury Department which is now acknowledged—not only now, but was under the last administration—to be erroneous, have charged on the books of the Treasury Department against each of the Southern States, for instance, Mississippi, the amount due by the tax-payers of that State of 1861 under the act of 1861. They have charged it against the State as a State debt; and whenever anything is due from the United States to the State of Mississippi or the State of Georgia, or any other Southern State, the Treasury officials, without warrant of law, acting, as they concede they are acting, in violation of law and in violation of the decision of the Judiciary Committee of this body, instead of paying the debt to the State, undertake to credit the State upon this charge which they have put on the books of the Treasury against the State without authority of law. In that way about $100,000 due the State of Mississippi by the Government has been kept on the books of the Treasury Department against this supposed and illegal charge made by the Treasury Department against the State of Mississippi.

Mr. VAN WYCK. May I ask a question?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Your proposition, as I understand it, is that it was unjust to the State of Mississippi that the United States should credit money due her as against this debt, that the tax was not a debt against the State, and therefore you consider it equitable, so far as Mississippi is concerned, to discharge the amount of the tax. Now, before you sit down will you please go on and show how you consider it equitable when New York State paid nearly $3,000,000 into the Treasury to pay back to New York the $3,000,000?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not care anything about this bill. I think they ought not to charge the State of Mississippi with this amount; but I see they are going to do it; I see they have been doing it all along; I see that the present administration will not change the rule on that subject; and there is some sort of equity, I suppose, in the idea that as these Northern States paid their money to whip us fellows down there, and we did not pay our share of the cost of the whipping, now after the whipping is all over we ought to return to them the money which they paid for whipping us.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. MAHONE. I wish to ask if the bill covers the penalty imposed by the law of 1862 on individuals?

Mr. MORRILL. It does not.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAWES. I think the hour of 2 o'clock has arrived.

Mr. MORRILL and others. Let the roll-call proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll-call has commenced.

The Secretary resumed and continued the calling of the roll.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER]. If I were not paired I should vote "yea."

Mr. COKE (when Mr. MAXEY'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. MAXEY] is absent. If present he would vote "yea."

Mr. HAWLEY (when Mr. PLATT'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. PLATT] is absent by reason of indisposition in his family. If he were here I think he would vote "yea."

Mr. RANSOM (when Mr. VANCE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. VANCE] has just been called from the Senate. He is paired on party questions with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER], but this is not a question of that character. If my colleague were here he would vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BERRY. I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. KENNA. I announced my pair with the Senator from New York, but I am assured he would vote for this proposition if present, and so I vote "yea."

Mr. WHITTHORNE. My colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is absent. I understand he is generally paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. It is unnecessary to say that if he were present my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. DAWES. I understand that the absent Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY], with whom I am paired, would vote "yea" if present, and therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. FRYE. My colleague [Mr. HALE] is necessarily detained from the Senate. If present he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 53, nay 1; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (S. 269) for the relief of W. H. Powell.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7508) granting the right of way to the Annapolis and Baltimore Short-Line Railroad Company across the Government farm connected with the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md.; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 3d instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 9) to fix the day for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President and the decision of questions arising thereon; and

An act (S. 2589) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at Saint Louis, Mo.

AMENDMENT TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

RAILROAD ATTORNEYS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being Senate bill 2578.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, obtained the floor.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. For what purpose?

Mr. DAWES. I was going to ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside informally, so that I might call up the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I shall occupy the attention of the Senate but a short time, and I prefer to say now what I wish to say on this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, the bill we are now considering was reported by the Committee on the Judiciary with a recommendation in favor of its passage. It is true that the original bill as introduced by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] was not approved by the committee, and that the report presents a substitute for that measure. But it is also true that the substitute approves the principle upon which the original bill is based. Hence the report of the committee by necessary implication affirms the constitutional power of Congress to pass either the original bill or the substitute. A report in favor of the passage of a measure which it presents conveys to the Senate, by implication at least, the judgment of the committee that the thing which it approves is not obnoxious to any constitutional objection.

The bill introduced by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] is as follows:

That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress to accept employment as attorney-at-law, or payment for services of any kind, or any gratuity whatever from any railroad company, or any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States; and any person who violates this provision shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000, and imprisoned not more than one year, in the discretion of the court.

This bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for its consideration. After due deliberation the committee reported it back to the Senate with an amendment in the nature of a substitute in form as follows:

That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress to accept employment as attorney-at-law, or payment for services of any kind, in opposition to the United States, in any case to which the United States may be a party or in which its interests may be concerned; or from or against any railroad company which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States, when measures specially affecting the interests of such railroad are pending before Congress; or from or against any bank or corporation or other officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter or any pecuniary aid from the United States; or from or against any corporation or company, its officer or agent, engaged in the business of interstate commerce by land or water, or in the business of any interstate transportation, or in the transportation of the United States mails; or from or against any corporation, company, firm, or person, or officer or agent thereof, engaged in the production, manufacture, or sale in the United States, or in the business of importing into the United States from any foreign country, any article whatsoever upon the importation of which any customs duty is now levied, or shall at any time hereafter be levied; or from or against any manufacturer of any article on which an excise tax is now levied, or shall at any time hereafter be levied, by any act of Congress.

SEC. 2. That any person who violates the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be punished by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by fine not exceeding $500, or by both, in the discretion of the court.

This amendment received the support of a majority of the committee. A minority of the committee reported an amendment in the following language and form, namely:

That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress, or any civil officer of the United States, to accept employment as attorney-at-law, or payment for services of any kind, or any gratuity whatever from any railroad company, or any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States; and any person who violates this provision shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000, and imprisoned not more than one year, in the discretion of the court.

This amendment incorporates into the original bill the words "or any civil officer of the United States."

In no other respect does it propose to change the form or text of the original bill.

It will be apparent to every Senator that if these proposed amendments are within the constitutional power of Congress, then the original bill does not exceed that power.

This was admitted by the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] when, in the course of the remarks which he made to the Senate on yesterday, he said:

The Senator from Kentucky asked me how the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary had improved the bill's denunciation of lawyers. It has not improved his bill at all, but it has admitted the logic of his bill and applied it discreetly and decorously and logically to other employments, and that wound that the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary has given to the bill has troubled the Senator from Kentucky. It has taken his logic and reduced it to an absurdity. The Senator denounced it as bringing ridicule and contempt on the profession. He even questioned the good taste of the members of the Judiciary Committee. Now you may read every clause here, and I defy him and challenge him to say that there is a clause here which is not according to the logic of his bill. I do not think any distinction can be made in regard to some of the matters, nothing can be drawn in the way of distinction between the principle of the measure as it came from the hands of the Senator from Kentucky except that you say there is not any such occasion and is not any complaint, any restless apprehension about the other classes named in the amendment. I challenge the Senator to show the difference between any one of the clauses the Judiciary Committee has appended to that first clause to distinguish it from the operation of the first one except that there is some fear that somebody may think we may go too far in the ramifications of the principle of the Senator's bill.

This is a very forceful affirmation of the constitutionality of the original bill when considered in connection with the action of the Committee on the Judiciary in respect of the two several amendments to that measure which it reported to the Senate. Surely nothing in this respect has come from that committee, of which the Senator from New York is a member, with the stamp of its approval accompanied by a denunciation of unconstitutionality. No one will pretend that this is so. We are not dealing with any such ridiculous predicament as this. The bill is before the Senate with its constitutionality declared by the Committee on the Judiciary. From this judgment I did not and do not now dissent. On the contrary I concur in the opinion held by the other members of the committee that it is within the constitutional competency of Congress to enact the bill of the Senator from Kentucky, or to substitute therefor either of the proposed amendments. The constitutional question being out of the way there still remains one of another character to be answered. Is there any sufficient reason to be found in considerations affecting public policy that demands or will justify the passage of this bill? The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] in his remarks on the bill during the session of Friday last said:

No bill of particulars, no specification of the facts which show a public necessity for the public criminal law we are asked to enact here, has been stated; and I think it is due to the Senate of the United States before it shall act upon a matter of this kind, of this grave importance, that somebody should arise on the floor of the Senate and specify that at least some Senator had been guilty of some conduct of a character that was not reached by law in the present state of the law, which required that our criminal laws should be amended by the introduction of this statute into them for its punishment. But nothing of that kind seems to have occurred; at all events it has not been named.

If it could be shown here that some Senator had cast a corrupt vote for a land-grant railroad corporation there would be no difficulty in the exercise of the conceded constitutional right of the Senate to expel him from this body, for that right is expressly found in the Constitution, two-thirds of the Senate concurring therein. If there was anything more than an outside suspicion to agitate the mind of this body to make an inquiry and an enactment of this kind based upon that inquiry it ought to be stated, so that the Senate would have a chance to expurgate itself by the ordinary methods known to parliamentary bodies, by the method secured in the Constitution of the United States, and not by going outside of this body and asking a court of justice in the District of Columbia, or wherever it may be, to impose penalties upon that Senator, penalties which may be exactly contrary to his duties in this body.

Evidently that Senator had not discovered such a reason as the question I have stated suggests. But it seems to me that his view of the case, as presented in the quotation I have made from his remarks, is superficial. To wait until the things which he suggests shall have been done before applying to them the denunciation of law would not be, it seems to me, the best way to conserve the public welfare. It is not the usual mode of action in matters of this kind. Communities do not wait until things which tend to their hurt have transpired before declaring against them the prohibition of affirmative law, and I am glad to be able to say that the vote which I intend to cast for the enactment in proper form of the principle of this bill will not be induced by a belief that the things which the Senator from Alabama seems to think should precede the enactment of the proposed legislation do now exist. I have no sufficient reason for believing that such things do now exist. I place my support of the bill on a different ground. I believe that the bill presents a question of political ethics rather than of present criminal conduct. I believe that the ethical principle that it presents is a sound one, and that its recognition by affirmative law will be promotive of the public good. Holding to this view of the case I can not vote against the principle and purpose of this bill, and I shall derive more satisfaction from the fact of voting to affirm a correct canon of political ethics than I possibly could from a conviction of the present existence of results which it aims to prevent and which the Senator from Alabama affirms should precede its enactment.

Mr. President, I am not unmindful of the often-asserted charges and frequently-expressed suspicions which come to us in the public press, and in other ways, and through a multitude of channels indicating a pretty widespread demand for some such legislation as this bill proposes. I can not but believe that this demand does very great injustice to this body. If called upon to name a member of this Senate who could be knowingly swerved from the conscientious discharge of legislative duty by reason of professional employment, I could not do it. I do not believe that the case exists. Still I shall vote for the affirmation of the doctrine of this bill, without thereby expressing in the slightest degree even a suspicion, not to say belief, that any present member of this body by accepting professional employment of kind and character prohibited by its terms would thereby surrender himself to influences from which that unknown quantity called bias is evolved, and I make this statement without any intention of entering upon a discussion of the subjects to be found in that interesting field of mental phenomena which in all ages have appeared as the results of the subtle force of intellectual operations inappreciable to the persons affected, but nevertheless affirmative in the matter of inducing effects.

It is in this field of inquiry that the reasons for the suspicions and beliefs which may have found lodgment in the public mind in respect of the propriety of such legislative action as this bill suggests can be found; and the fact that so many people are inclined to enter upon that field of inquiry and therein formulate suspicions and beliefs is a forceful suggestion, as it seems to me, why we should declare by law the correct principle of political ethics upon which this measure rests. If it does no more than serve as a protection to the good name of the branch of the public service to which it relates, it will not wholly fail in the office to which it is assigned. It is best on all accounts that no encouragement be given to the people to have other than a good opinion of the public service and of all connected therewith.

I recognize it as a part of my public duty to do whatsoever I rightfully may to protect the good name of the branch of the public service to which I belong. But I do not expect all others to agree with me in all that I may do to effect that end. I can only act for myself as the light which I have may point the way. The debate on this bill has disclosed sharp divergences of opinion, and they will be affirmed by the final vote when it shall have been cast. It seems to me a duty to vote for its passage in such form as will most tend to effect its declared purpose. It is, doubtless, quite as clear to others that the principle of the bill is all wrong. But however we may differ here, Iam quite sure that an affirmative declaration of the doctrine of this bill will be approved by the thoughtful people of this country. And this approval will, in my judgment, be given—not because of a belief that the members of this body are corrupted by the methods suggested by the bill, but for that other and better reason that it will be regarded as a marked recognition of a correct principle of political ethics, as well as a resolute affirmation of sound public policy.

Mr. DAWES. I move to lay aside this business and take up the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. BECK. I do not like to antagonize appropriation bills, but I know the Indian appropriation bill passes almost on the reading of it, and this bill will perhaps take less than half the time to finish it, if it is disposed of now, that it will take if it be postponed for a day or two.

Mr. DAWES. If no other Senator desires to speak on it——

Mr. BECK. I do not know of any; but I think we can more readily dispose of it now than if it is postponed, and the Indian bill is a very simple one.

Mr. DAWES. I will not interpose if the bill can be disposed of during the next hour; but it is very important, considering that the Post-Office appropriation bill is expected to be brought up to-morrow, that the Indian bill be finished to-day, but I will wait a little while.

Mr. FRYE. Let us come to a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to perfect the text of the bill. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "kind," in line 5 of the original bill, it is proposed to strike out down to and including the word "court," in line 11, in the following words:

From any railroad company, or any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States; and any person who violates this provision shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000, and imprisonment not more than one year, in the discretion of the court.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

In opposition to the United States, in any case to which the United States may be a party, or in which its interests may be concerned, or from any railroad company which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States, if such member shall have reasonable cause to believe that measures specially affecting the interests of such railroad are pending before Congress, or are about to be so pending during his term of office. Any person who violates the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be punished by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by a fine not exceeding $500, or by both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to inquire what the amendment just read is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Committee on the Judiciary reported a substitute for the original bill, and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] moves to perfect the text of the bill.

Mr. DOLPH. Does the proposed amendment, just read, take the place of the amendment reported by the committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not entirely.

Mr. FRYE. Very largely.

Mr. DOLPH. I call for the reading of the amendment, then, as it would stand if the amendment to the bill were adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill as it would stand, if amended, will be read.

The Secretary read, as follows:

That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress to accept employment as attorney-at-law, or payment for services of any kind, in opposition to the United States, in any case to which the United States may be a party or in which its interests may be concerned, or from any railroad company which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States, if such member shall have reasonable cause to believe that measures specially affecting the interests of such railroad are pending before Congress, or are about to be so pending during his term of office. Any person who violates the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be punished by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by fine not exceeding $500, or by both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to make one remark on that amendment. It is a very difficult question to be determined by a jury whether the member of Congress had reasonable ground to believe so and so. With that provision in, it would be almost impossible to convict any party who should say that he was ignorant that anything affecting the interests of a railroad would come before Congress. For that reason alone the amendment ought to be voted down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. COKE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire if this amendment should be voted in, would it be in order to propose the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], which I think is a better amendment than this? Will it be in order after this is adopted, if it should be, to move that amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is a motion to perfect the original text. After that is perfected the proper question will be the amendment proposed by the committee. Then it will be in order to amend the amendment of the committee.

Mr. GEORGE. Are we voting on the substitute of the committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, sir.

Mr. FRYE. The amendment of the Senator from Delaware is a substitute for the original bill. Therefore the Chair is entirely right in saying that this is to be voted on first. Then that will be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is one to perfect the original bill introduced by the Senator from Kentucky. After that has been perfected, then the next proper question will be on the amendment proposed by the Judiciary Committee, which is subject to amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Would it be in order now to offer my amendment, which is in the nature of a substitute for the whole bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in order now.

The yeas and nays were taken.

Mr. DAWES (after having voted in the affirmative). It did not occur to me when I voted that I was paired with the absent Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY]. I withdraw my vote. If he were present, I should vote for the amendment.

Mr. COKE. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. MAXEY] if present would vote "nay."

Mr. KENNA. I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER]. If not paired, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. The Senator from Tennessee requested me to announce the pair and to say that he would vote against all these amendments. If present, he would vote "nay" on this amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I am paired on this question with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired for the day with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], who is necessarily detained at home in consequence of the indisposition of his family. I understand if present that he would vote "nay," and therefore I will let my vote "nay" stand.

Mr. EDMUNDS (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote. I am reminded of what I did not observe before, that my friend from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], with whom I am paired on this bill and everything else, is not here. So I withdraw my vote.

Mr. PALMER. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON], but I have transferred the pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], so that those two Senators are now paired.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Allison,	Evarts,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Blair,	Farwell,	Mahone,	Sherman,
Bowen,	Frye,	Morrill,	Spooner,
Call,	Hale,	Payne,	Teller,
Cheney,	Hawley,	Pugh,	Williams.
Conger,	Hoar,	Riddleberger,
Cullom,	Jones of Nevada,	Sawyer,

NAYS—21.

Aldrich,	Coke,	McPherson,	Whitthorne,
Beck,	Dolph,	Manderson,	Wilson of Iowa,
Berry,	Fair,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Wilson of Md.
Blackburn,	George,	Saulsbury,
Butler,	Gorman,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Jones of Arkansas,	Walthall,

ABSENT—29.

Brown,	Gibson,	Maxey,	Sabin,
Camden,	Gray,	Miller,	Stanford,
Cameron,	Hampton,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Vance,
Chace,	Harris,	Morgan,	Van Wyck,
Colquitt,	Harrison,	Palmer,	Vest.
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Platt,
Edmunds,	Jones of Florida,	Plumb,
Eustis,	Kenna,	Ransom,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], which will be read, it being to perfect the amendment reported by the committee.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 11 of the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary, after the word "Congress," it is proposed to strike out all down to the end of section 2, as follows:

Or from or against any bank or corporation, or other officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter or any pecuniary aid from the United States; or from or against any corporation or company, its officer or agent, engaged in the business of interstate commerce by land or water, or in the business of any interstate transportation, or in the transportation of United States mails; or from or against any corporation, company, firm, or person, or officer or agent thereof, engaged in the production, manufacture, or sale in the United States, or in the business of importing into the United States from any foreign country, any article whatsoever upon the importation of which any customs duty is now levied, or shall at any time hereafter be levied; or from or against any manufacturer of any article on which an excise-tax is now levied, or shall at any time hereafter be levied, by any act of Congress.

SEC. 2. That any person who violates the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be punished by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by fine not exceeding $500, or by both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. BECK. Is that the amendment of the Judiciary Committee? There is so much noise we can not hear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment just read is an amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida to the amendment proposed by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. BECK. I have endeavored to get every amendment, but I have not seen that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BECK called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to know before I vote on that amendment whether the last vote substituted the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] for the original bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It did substitute the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts for the original bill so far as it went. The Chair will state to the Senator from Mississippi that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts was not an entire substitute, but a substitute for the greater portion of the text of the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. The print I have reads, "Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following." That was offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. FRYE. That was not the amendment voted on.

Mr. GEORGE. It reads, "Strike out all after the enacting clause."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts was not to strike out all after the enacting clause, but after the word "kind" in line 5, and insert what the Senate has already agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the attention of the Senator from Kentucky. I suggest to him that he allow this bill to be laid aside informally and that we take up the Indian appropriation bill. ["Oh, no."] Let the Senate come to understand where it stands on this bill.

Mr. BECK. I hope that will not be done. A postponement of this bill now will involve a good deal more debate. I believe we have all agreed not to debate it any more. If the bill goes over another day there may be extended debate. I am willing to go on now and have it disposed of. The Indian appropriation bill, as the Senator knows, can pass in an hour any day, as the House and Senate committees have not disagreed at all on any matter of principle.

Mr. HOAR. We can finish this bill in a few minutes.

Mr. BECK. Let us have it disposed of.

Several SENATORS. Go on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] to the amendment of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CALL. That amendment will leave the committee's bill to read:

That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress to accept employment as attorney-at-law, or payment for services of any kind, in opposition to the United States, in any case to which the United States may be a party or in which its interests may be concerned; or from or against any railroad company which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States, when measures specially affecting the interests of such railroad are pending before Congress.

Mr. BECK. The motion of the Senator, I understand, is to strike out all that part of the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary after the word "Congress," in line 11?

Mr. CALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CULLOM. I suppose the Senator from Florida does not propose to strike out all the rest of the bill, but simply the rest of that section?

Mr. BECK. The rest of that section.

Mr. CALL. I propose only to go to the end of that section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified. The yeas and nays have been ordered on this amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER]. I would vote for this amendment if I were not paired.

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). On all questions pertaining to this bill I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. I do not know how he would vote on this particular proposition; so I withhold my vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. EDMUNDS] is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] on all questions relating to this bill.

Mr. PALMER (after having voted in the negative). I had forgotten when my name was called that I was paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. I now announce the pair again, and on all further votes on this bill I shall not announce it. I withdraw my vote on this amendment.

Mr. COLQUITT. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—25.

Beck,	Cullom,	Hale,	Voorhees,
Berry,	Eustis,	Hampton,	Walthall,
Blackburn,	Fair,	Jones of Arkansas,	Whitthorne,

Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Palmer,
Edmunds,	Kenna,	Platt,
Gibson,	McMillan,	Plumb,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire now, if it is in order, to offer an amendment as a substitute for the whole bill as amended. Is that in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in order now, in the opinion of the Chair. The amendment would be in order as a substitute for the amendment reported by the committee, but a substitute for the whole bill is not now in order in the opinion of the Chair. The Chair will state to the Senator from Delaware that the pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Judiciary Committee. To that, if the Senator from Delaware desires, he can offer a substitute.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then I will offer my amendment as a substitute for the amendment of the Judiciary Committee. That is in order.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask for information. Does not the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. PLATT], similarly in the nature of a substitute, precede the amendment of the Senator from Delaware?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not been advised of any such amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask that the clerks may inform the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator's colleague has not been formally offered, the Chair is advised.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] gave notice that he would offer it at the proper time.

Mr. HAWLEY. I give notice that I shall offer it at the first opportunity. I thought he had offered it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been offered.

Mr. HAWLEY. It has been printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], intended as a substitute for the amendment reported from the Judiciary Committee, will be stated.

Mr. DOLPH. First let the amendment of the committee as it now stands be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Judiciary Committee will be read.

Several SENATORS. It has not been amended.

Mr. DOLPH. If it has not been amended I do not care to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been amended. The amendment proposed to it was voted down.

Mr. BECK. Do I understand the Chair to say that it has not been amended?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The only amendment to it that has been offered since the present occupant of the chair has been in the chair was the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], which was voted down by a majority of 1 vote.

Mr. BECK. I understood that the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] was adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Kentucky that that was not an amendment to the amendment of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. BECK. What was it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was an amendment to the original text, and was agreed to. The amendment now proposed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Committee on the Judiciary, it is moved to insert:

That it shall be unlawful for any member of Congress to accept employment as general counsel or attorney, or receive payment for services as such general counsel or attorney, from any railroad company, or from any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter or any grant of land or pecuniary aid from the United States: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to prevent members of either House of Congress from appearing as counsel in suits by or against such railroad companies in the State or Federal courts, when the United States is not a party or interested in the result of said suits, or where the subject-matter of any such suit is pending before Congress, or such member of Congress has reasonable ground to believe the subject will come before Congress for its action.

Mr. HALE. I should like the Senator from Delaware to explain to the Senate what he believes to be the legal effect or purport of the words "general counsel?"

Mr. SAULSBURY. My understanding is that railroad companies are in the habit of employing and retaining counsel as their general counsel to serve them in such capacities as the interests of the railroad companies may require, at a fixed salary. That is the case at least in the section of the country in which I live, and I understand that it is the system pursued by railroad companies generally. I believe that relation to be inconsistent with the position of a member of Congress, but I do not believe that it is inconsistent with the duties which we owe as members of Congress to the Government for a Senator to appear in the courts in special cases where the Government is not interested, in private suits between parties, and I have sought to draw that distinction.

There are general counsel engaged by roads who retain that position, and it is that relation which I believe to be inconsistent with the duties of a member of Congress, because, naturally, being employed for the purpose of looking out for the general interests of the corporation which has retained him, he may come in conflict with the duties which he owes here in questions that come before Congress relating to the particular road which had thus retained him.

Mr. HALE. I think I see clearly now what the Senator has in view; but does not the proviso of the Senator's amendment in the terms take care of all cases where railroads or corporations have suits in the courts with private parties in which the United States is not interested, and would it not be very easy under the term "general counsel" to evade the effect of the amendment and take away what the Senator desires?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The relation of general counsel is inhibited by my amendment.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly; but it goes no further.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It goes no further.

Mr. HALE. It does not prevent railroads which have received Government benefactions from employing counsel outside of the courts, where they have private litigation for a certain time or for a specified object even, although the Government may be interested. As I understand it it only applies to the relation where a counsel is engaged, for instance, by the year at a regular salary, but it would not prevent a company from employing a member of Congress as an attorney for a specific purpose, even if that purpose involved him in relations to the Government or in the relation of defending the railroad where it had a suit with the Government.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understand the amendment to prohibit a member of Congress first from assuming the relation of general counsel. I understand that the amendment further would prohibit any member of Congress from acting as special counsel in any particular case where the Government of the United States was a party to the suit or interested in the result of the suit. That is my understanding of the amendment.

Mr. HALE. Where does the Senator find that provision? It is not in the printed amendment as I have it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The first clause in the substitute which I have offered is an inhibition against the employment of a member of Congress as general counsel or attorney for railroads of a particular class. The proviso as printed reads:

That this act shall not be construed to prevent members of either House of Congress from appearing as counsel in suits by or against such railroad companies in the State or Federal courts when the United States is not a party or interested in the result of said suits.

Mr. HALE. That takes care of the private litigation of companies, and allows the attorney to appear. Where in the amendment as printed is the provision which prohibits members of Congress from appearing as attorneys and counsel for railroad companies in special cases where the Government is interested, unless the amendment of the Senator contains something more than there is in the printed text?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have added an additional clause, which is in manuscript:

Or where the subject-matter of any such suit is pending before Congress, or such member of Congress has reasonable ground to believe the subject will come before Congress for its action.

Mr. HALE. I do not find that in the printed amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. No; I added it at the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] after the amendment was printed.

I wish to state in reference to the amendment that the inhibition of the employment of general counsel differs from the original bill or from any amendment which has been offered to the bill in this particular, that it does not undertake to define the crime; it does not undertake to prescribe any punishment, but follows the course which was pursued in reference to appearances before the Court of Claims, and is a mere inhibition of such employment. It does not undertake to provide any punishment for the crime; it leaves that to be dealt with, on the idea that members of Congress, being law-makers, would faithfully observe a statute which they had themselves enacted.

There is nothing degrading to the Senate in such a proposition, and I have no doubt that if my amendment should become the law no member of Congress would assume the relation of general counsel for railroads in any case or would appear in any case in a court where the interests of the Government were involved in any way. It would be in harmony with the action that was had with reference to appearances in the Court of Claims, where there was a simple inhibition against members of Congress appearing in the court; and I believe that that is all the legislation we need.

Mr. HALE. If it is in order, I move to strike out in lines 4 and 5 the word "general" before "counsel," where it occurs in both lines. That would leave the first part of the amendment with a clear inhibition against members of Congress accepting employment as attorneys from railroad companies. That of itself would be so complete that without the proviso following no member of Congress could be employed at all by these corporations, but with the proviso which follows, "That this act shall not be construed to prevent members of either House of Congress from appearing as counsel in suits by or against such railroad companies in the State or Federal courts, when the United States is not a party or interested in the result of said suits," the sweeping clause of the first part of the amendment will be so modified that members of Congress can appear in all that great domain of suits where the United States is not interested; and with this amendment I believe the object that should be sought for will be accomplished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Maine that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware is already an amendment in the second degree.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I accept the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is accepted.

Mr. BECK. Let the amendment be read as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Delaware proposed as a substitute for the amendment reported from the Judiciary Committee will be read as modified on the suggestion of the Senator from Maine.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 4 and in line 5, of the matter proposed to be inserted, strike out the word "general;" so as to read:

That it shall be unlawful for any member of Congress to accept employment as counsel or attorney, or receive payment for services as such counsel or attorney, from any railroad company, or from any officer or agent thereof which obtained its charter or any grant of land or pecuniary aid from the United States: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to prevent members of either House of Congress from appearing as counsel in suits by or against such railroad companies in the State or Federal courts, when the United States is not a party or interested in the result of said suits, or where the subject-matter of any such suit is pending before Congress, or such member of Congress has reasonable ground to believe the subject will come before Congress for its action.

Mr. HALE. I suggest to the Senator from Delaware that he modify his amendment further by leaving out the words which are in manuscript and not in the printed text. It seems to me it is very clear and pithy as left in the printed text as now amended, and covers every ground that it should be sought to cover.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That is my own impression. I put in those words at the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware further modify his amendment?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will omit the part in manuscript from the amendment.

Mr. COKE. How does the amendment now stand?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware as now modified will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. From the matter proposed to be inserted strike out the words:

Or where the subject-matter of any such suit is pending before Congress, or such member of Congress has reasonable ground to believe the subject will come before Congress for its action.

Mr. HALE. I understand the Senator from Delaware withdraws that part of the amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes; the manuscript part which has just been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Delaware to the amendment of the Judiciary Committee will be so modified.

Mr. HOAR. There seems to be still a misunderstanding in the Chamber among some Senators with whom I have conversed, regarding the parliamentary position of this question. I desire to ask the Chair if this be the position of the question: The Senator from Kentucky moved as an original bill A, to which the Committee on the Judiciary proposed a substitute B. The original bill A was amended by the amendment which I reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HOAR. Then to the substitute B, the Senator from Delaware moves his amendment as a substitute by striking out and inserting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the situation.

Mr. HOAR. If the amendment of the Senator from Delaware be adopted, then the further question will be whether the substitute B (which is the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, if that be adopted) shall be substituted for the original bill as it has been amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. HALE. Now, let us have the amendment of the Senator from Delaware fixed as he desires it before we vote upon it. I understand that he modifies it by striking out the last clause, which is in written words and not in print.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware will advise the Secretary as to the precise character of his amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The precise character of my amendment is now as it was printed, except as it was modified on the suggestion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], by striking out the word "general" before "counsel," in lines 4 and 5.

Mr. HALE. That is it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute proposed by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to know whether the proposition of the Senator from Delaware is not still amendable?

Mr. RANSOM. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. My only doubt is whether the amendment I propose to offer would be an amendment in the third degree. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the amendment submitted by my colleague [Mr. PLATT], which has been printed, and is, I suppose, upon Senators' tables. I suggest that we strike out all after the words "member of," in the third line of the pending amendment—

That it shall be unlawful for any member of—

And insert my colleague's amendment; so as to read:

That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress to accept employment as attorney-at-law, or receive compensation for services rendered, in opposition to the interests of the United States, in any suit, action, or other matter in the result of which the United States is directly or indirectly interested, or in respect of which any question is pending before Congress, or in respect of which such member has reasonable cause to believe legislation by Congress may be asked.

SEC. 2. That any person who violates the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be punished by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by fine not exceeding $500, or by both, in the discretion of the court.

The essence of the amendment proposed by my colleague is this: It makes no reference to land-grant roads or any other roads, but forbids a member of either House of Congress to be retained in opposition to the interests of the United States in any matter of controversy before the courts of the United States. It covers the whole question once for all, and ends the discussion. I move that as an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. SAULSBURY. In the first place, I am opposed to that amendment, and perhaps I can afford, as well as any other member of the Senate, to oppose it. I have never been retained by a railroad company in any suit which such company have ever had. It has been my fortune to fight the railroad companies in my own State, not only in the State courts but in the circuit court of the United States and in the Supreme Court of the United States. So I can afford now, never having been employed as a railroad attorney, to say that I believe the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut would do great injustice to the profession by excluding them from legitimate practice.

I am opposed to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut on another ground. It undertakes, as the original bill does, and as every amendment which has been offered does, except my own, to define, and to punish as a crime, employment of members by railroad companies. To that I am opposed. The mere inhibition, without designating that it shall be either a misdemeanor or a felony, or without prescribing a penalty of imprisonment or a fine, will be more consistent, as I think, with the character of legislators dealing with themselves, who will obey an inhibition of law just as readily as they would if the penalty of the penitentiary, of the jail, or of a fine, was imposed upon them.

I am opposed to it on all these grounds.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator's objection goes only to the second section of the amendment proposed by my colleague, the punitive section. Suppose we omit that. Omitting that, the prohibition in the first section the Senator does not criticise at all. It simply forbids members of Congress from being employed against the United States, in opposition to the interests of the United States, in any legal matter. As to whether the punitive clause should be there or not, that I consider, as the Senator from Delaware does, a matter of indifference. That is to say, it is quite as well it should be omitted. I agree with him that the prohibition is sufficient, but I think the general prohibition against employment in opposition to the interests of the United States is a just one.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Delaware to two things, which are mere matters of phraseology and not of intent. In the first place, he prohibits the employment as counsel or attorney by general language. Then he provides that the act shall not be construed to prevent members of either House of Congress from appearing as counsel in suits in the State or Federal courts; but he does not, I suppose, mean to prohibit them from giving opinions, drawing instruments, and to be consulted as chamber counsel in matters in which the United States has no interest.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It is applied to a distinctive class of counsel; that is, to the general attorneys who are conferred with in reference to everything connected with the interests of the company.

Mr. HOAR. But my friend does not take my point. I am not criticising his object, assuming that to be all right, but I am asking whether his language effects his object. The Senator prohibits all employment in the beginning. Then he makes an exception of what he considers innocent or harmless, but he has only excepted from the general prohibition the appearing as counsel in suits in court. He ought to add to his exception the right to be employed not in court; that is, in giving opinions or drawing instruments where it does not affect the United States at all.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think I would prefer my amendment in the form it is in.

Mr. HOAR. Let me call my friend's attention to another point. He has prohibited the accepting of compensation in all cases. He has come in and said, "You may act as counsel in a certain case," but he does not allow the counsel to be compensated for that service. I think the Senator will see that the last part of his amendment will have to be redrawn a little to carry out what he desires.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not think so.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator mean to allow the person only to appear without compensation?

Mr. SAULSBURY. No, sir.

Mr. HOAR. That is what the Senator says by his amendment. He says the attorney who is a member of Congress shall not have any compensation for anything, but he may appear in a suit in a State court.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not think that construction can be put upon it.

Mr. HOAR. That is what you say by the amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not think that is a fair construction of it.

Mr. HOAR. Then why not make it right? The Senator provides that they shall not be employed as counsel at all. Then he makes his exception for the appearing in court in suits. Why shall not Mr. Thurman, of Ohio, being a member of the Senate, give an opinion to a railroad company as to the effect of a certain lease with another railroad company, and be paid $50 or $100 for it, in vacation; or why shall not Mr. Thurman, of Ohio, being a member of the Senate, draw a lease or a contract between two railroad companies, with which the United States has nothing to do? The Senator prohibits that.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I did that designedly, because whatever we may think about it there is, perhaps, a prejudice in the popular mind that the Congress of the United States is being filled up to a certain extent by gentlemen connected with the large railroad corporations. That may be true, or it may not be true; but, admitting that it is not true in fact, nevertheless that opinion is extant in the land, and we owe it to ourselves to extricate ourselves from any supposed influences of that kind. An honest prejudice, although it may be only a prejudice, is entitled to respect; and, while I may not at all times yield to such a prejudice when we can so far adjust ourselves to the prejudice as to wipe out any stigma upon Congress, I believe we owe it to ourselves to do it.

My object in the amendment was that the only service which a member of Congress should perform for a railroad company should be to go into the courts openly and above board, to argue the questions in litigation in open court, because if you permit them to sit in their offices and act as private counsel you have no restraint over them whatever; but when they are exposed to public view, and their services are known to the public, then it will be understood.

I think the amendment suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts would virtually annul all the previous provisions of the amendment I propose. Therefore, for myself, I prefer to abide by that amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to make an inquiry.

Mr. HOAR. Allow me to move an amendment. After the word "courts," in line 11 of the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, I propose to insert "and receiving compensation for the same." That would make the proviso read:

That this act shall not be construed to prevent members of either House of Congress from appearing as counsel in suits by or against such railroad companies in the State or Federal courts, and receiving compensation for the same, when the United States is not a party or interested in the result of said suits.

That makes it clear.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will accept that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware accepts the modification. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware as modified.

Mr. HAWLEY. I beg pardon; the question is on the amendment which I offered.

Mr. CULLOM. That is exactly what I desired to inquire.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to move an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware. I desire to perfect the Senator's amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I shall withdraw my colleague's amendment for the present.

Mr. HOAR. I propose to substitute for the word "appearing," in line 10 of the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, the word "acting," and to strike out the words:

In suits by or against such railroad companies in the State or Federal courts;

So as to read:

From acting as counsel and receiving compensation for the same when the United States is not a party or interested in the result.

I will say "in the subject-matter"— of said suits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware accept the amendment suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The effect of that modification would be to permit every member of Congress who is a lawyer to sit in his office and to act as counsel and to give opinions outside of the courts. There is not any business for the railroad companies——

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will allow me, I shall not press the amendment against his judgment. He has framed his amendment to suit himself, and I shall not embarrass action upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware is withdrawn.

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw the last amendment. The first one the Senator from Delaware accepts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware as modified.

Mr. BECK. Let it be read as it has been patched up.

Mr. CULLOM. I suppose the first vote will be on the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut withdrew his amendment. The amendment as finally submitted by the Senator from Delaware will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Committee on the Judiciary, it is moved to insert:

That it shall be unlawful for any member of Congress to accept employment as counsel or attorney, or receive payment for services as such counsel or attorney, from any railroad company, or from any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter or any grant of land or pecuniary aid from the United States: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to prevent members of either House of Congress from appearing as counsel in suits by or against such railroad companies in the State or Federal courts, and receiving compensation for the same, when the United States is not a party or interested in the result of said suits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment moved by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] which has just been read, and which is proposed as a substitute for the amendment reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I do not propose to inflict a speech upon the Senate. The amendment of the Senator from Delaware, if it should finally become a law, would be a little bit better than nothing; but it is so near nothing that it is hardly worth while for the Senate to take time about it. It allows any Senator or Representative in Congress to be counsel in all the great suits of the railroad companies. They may sit here with $100,000 of the money of the Union Pacific, the Central Pacific, the Northern Pacific, or any of the great land-grant roads of the country, in their pockets, and because they have received no fee in a particular matter which Congress is considering, notwithstanding they have received fees and have been employed for the purpose (without their knowledge and consent perhaps) of standing by as the counsel for the company in every other case, they are to be regarded as disinterested men! That is the meaning of the amendment.

When I introduced the bill first, I meant to strike at a great evil, and I limited it carefully so as not to interfere with the general employment of lawyers beyond their employment by those corporations and persons who had great and important interests before the Congress of the United States. The language of my bill was as follows:

That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress to accept employment as attorney-at-law, or payment for services of any kind, from any railroad company, or any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States.

And then a penalty was affixed for members so doing. I showed that the reason why I desired such a law to pass was that we have over $100,000,000 to-day in controversy with the great Pacific roads for money that we advanced to them to aid them. Empires of land are in controversy now between the people of the United States and those companies; and we are dealing with them in Congress. The Judiciary Committee were sitting yesterday all day, I understand, seeking to devise ways and means as to how we could best settle with these great railroad companies in regard to the moneys which we have advanced to them, and to-morrow that question may be precipitated upon us.

Again, the great railroad companies agreed to carry our mails upon such terms as we might prescribe. They agreed to carry our soldiers and our munitions of war upon terms that Congress should prescribe, or to carry them free, according to my construction of the law. The object of the bill I introduced was to say to members of Congress who were in their employ on any pretext whatever, whether they had been sought for because they were members of Congress, either in the other House or the Senate, and employed in suits with other railroad companies or other people, and paid fees ten times out of proportion to what their services were expected to be in order to secure their friendship here, that they should not take those fees or occupy such relations with those railroads when great controversies were pending between the people of the United States and the railroad companies.

Now with a great show of fairness the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], as fair a man as there is in the Senate, has been induced to believe that it is a hardship upon lawyers serving in Congress to prevent them from taking fees from such corporations except in cases where they are in controversy with the United States in particular suits; and every enemy of my bill, every man who is seeking to defeat it by direct or indirect means, is amending and adding to and supplementing and lauding the position taken by the Senator from Delaware, who is himself, I believe, friendly to the purpose I have in view; but he has been made to believe that the measure was too harsh. I say he is apparently friendly to the bill, and I mean it with perfect respect. He has given the highest evidence that he is friendly to it. When the bill was first introduced and laid upon the tables of Senators for a week, and the question came on its reference to the Judiciary Committee, and then again on its final passage, a bill of five lines, that no man could misunderstand, on the yeas and nays one of the 37 votes for the bill was that of the Senator from Delaware. I desire to have that record of last year read again and made part of the RECORD of to-day's proceedings, with the yeas and nays, so as to show how gentlemen are changing now from their position then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The matter sent to the desk by the Senator from Kentucky will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

RAILROAD ATTORNEYS.

Mr. BECK. I gave notice on Monday that after the close of the morning business to-day I should ask the Senate to take a vote upon Senate bill 2578. I move to take it up for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MAHONE. I hope it will be the pleasure of the Senate to take up the agricultural appropriation bill at or before 2 o'clock.

Mr. BECK. The bill I have called up will take but a moment, I hope. I have not a word to say about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

"Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress to accept employment as attorney-at-law, or payment for services of any kind, from any railroad company, or any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States; and any person who violates this provision shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000, and imprisonment not more than one year, in the discretion of the court."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has that bill ever been referred?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been referred.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BECK. I think it had better be voted down than go there. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I withdraw that motion and move to refer the bill to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BECK. A reference to any committee amounts to a defeat of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then we will take it on the motion to refer to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BECK called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. KENNA. I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—21.

Allison,	Edmunds,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Blair,	Evarts,	Mahone,	Sherman,
Cameron,	Frye,	Miller,	Teller.
Chace.	Hale,	Mitchell of Oreg.,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Morrill,

So the motion to refer was not agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. HALE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when Mr. ALDRICH's name was called). I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. MAXEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] on political questions, but as I presume he would vote for this bill if here, I vote "yea."

Mr. MILLER (when his name was called). I have just been asked to pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

M. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

M. BUTLER. I am quite sure my colleague [Mr. HAMPTON], if he were present, would vote "yea" on this question. So if the Senator from New York desires to vote, he can cast his vote.

Mr. MILLER. Then I vote "yea."

Mr. KENNA. I announce again that I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BECK. My colleague [Mr. BLACKBURN] is absent, paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], who is also absent, both under the orders of the Senate. My colleague, if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN. My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is absent from the city and is sick. If he were present, my impression is that he would vote "yea."

Mr. KENNA. On that statement I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 11; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, before the final death of this bill, because the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusests destroyed it—we all understand that—and the amendment of the Senator from Delaware is only intended to lay it a little bit more decently in the grave, I desire to say that I am content with the record made at the last session of Congress.

Mr. KENNA. Before the election?

Mr. BECK. I know nothing about before or after the election, but I am willing to stand upon the record then made by gentlemen who underetood fairly the purpose of the bill. I leave it to them to satisfy themselves why they should now be willing to license every man in both Houses of Congress to be acting as an attorney for these great railroad corporations when on the first impulse the common instinct of almost the whole Senate went out in the expression that it was not a proper thing to allow men to be in either body when they had the money of the corporations with whom they were dealing, as Congressmen, in their pockets under any pretense whatever.

My bill was taken away, however, on a motion to reconsider, and was sent to the Committee on the Judiciary. The distinguished gentlemen of that committee conceded by their action that the subject-matter was a proper one for us to consider, and that the bill was constitutional; and they reported what? They reported the following substitute for the bill which I had introduced, and which was referred to them:

That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress to accept employment as attorney-at-law, or payment for services of any kind, in opposition to the United States, in any case to which the United States may be a party or in which its interests may be concerned; or from or against any railroad company which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States, when measures specially affecting the interests of such railroad are pending before Congress; or from or against any bank or corporation or other officer or agent thereof which obtained its charter or any pecuniary aid from the United States; or from or against any corporation or company, its officer or agent, engaged in the business of interstate commerce by land or water, or in the business of any interstate transportation, or in the transportation of United States mails; or from or against any corporation, company, firm, or person, or officer or agent thereof, engaged in the production, manufacture, or sale in the United States, or in the business of importing into the United States from any foreign country any article whatsoever upon the importation of which any customs duty is now levied, or shall at any time hereafter be levied; or from or against any manufacturer of any article on which an excise tax is now levied, or shall at any time hereafter be levied, by any act of Congress.

SEC. 2. That any person who violates the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be punished by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by fine not exceeding $500, or by both, in the discretion of the court.

That was the deliberate act of the Judiciary Committee of this body.

Mr. COKE. Of a majority of that committee.

Mr. BECK. Of course the minority dissented; but a majority constitutes a committee, parliamentarily speaking, and the distinguished gentlemen who are now talking about the bill that I introduced being unconstitutional, themselves, when required by a vote of the Senate to perfect the bill and to present a proper measure for its consideration, agreed not only that all which I had proposed was right in itself, but they added provision after provision to it and submitted to the Senate for approval as their substitute for it, what I have just read. To-day, when the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] moved an amendment to strike out all after the word "Congress," in line 11 of the substitute, excluding from its provisions all those features which but for the high authority of the Judiciary Committee we should almost be led to believe were intended as a burlesque on legislation, on a call of the yeas and nays those distinguished gentlemen voted down the proposed amendment of the Senator from Florida, and by their vote on the call of the yeas and nays within the last half hour they tell the Senate and tell the world that they believe that all I have read is not only legitimate, but good and proper legislation, better than anything that I proposed, and they offer it to us as a substitute, and on the yeas and nays stand by it. I am willing to go before the country on the record of my bill and the substitute of the Judiciary Committee, and on the yeas and nays called to-day on the refusal to strike out the portions of it which I regard as a burlesque on all decent legislation, when the question was fairly presented on the amendment of the Senator from Florida, himself an opponent of the original measure.

Mr. President, there is no disguising the fact that a portion of the Senate, of whom I am one, believes, and believes in earnest, that when men become members of either House of Congress they should sever any relations they may have with the great land-grant railroads of this country who hold empires of our land and over one hundred millions of our money, who are under obligations to us in regard to our mails and the transportation of our troops and munitions of war. These gentlemen can not serve two masters; and when they take $5,000 a year to serve the people of the United States they must relinquish the fees they are getting, under any pretense whatever, from the great corporations that have heretofore employed them.

The amendment reported by the Senator from Massachusetts and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware leave the door wide open for every member of either House of Congress who happens to be a lawyer (and I am told that there are sixty-five out of seventy-six Senators who are lawyers) to have his pockets full of the money of these great railroad corporations under the pretense that members of Congress have been employed in suits with other roads, or suits with other people, or under any pretense whatever, so that they were not in direct litigation with the United States. I want to do something or to do nothing. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts has been already voted in, and the amendment of the Senator from Delaware means nothing and will deceive nobody, however honest some Senators may be in believing that it does something. No intelligent man in the country will believe that it does, or that it can do anything; and some will be malicious enough to think that it was not intended that it should do anything.

The amendment now offered by the Senator from Delaware being, as I regard it, absolutely worthless, I am willing to stand on the issue with the amendment of the Judiciary Committee, and I propose to vote against the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, which does no real good, so as to see whether the Judiciary Committee itself will vote for its own substitute. I desire the members of the majority of that committee to have an opportunity by a yea-and-nay vote to tell the country that that is good legislation, and I do not propose, as far as I can help it, by voting for a mild bread-pill, apparently an improvement upon theirs, especially as they refused to strike out the worst parts of it when the Senator from Florida moved to have it done, and stand by it all. I shall vote against the substitute of the Senator from Delaware, and if it is voted down we shall then see whether the distinguished gentlemen of the Judiciary Committee will vote for their own substitute when the chance is given them.

I do not propose to argue this question elaborately. I want to come to a vote. I showed, when I argued this case before, that there was nothing new in this proposed legislation. The Judiciary Committee admit, all the amendments admit, that it is a subject about which we can legislate. When I introduced the bill it was not, as has been intimated, to make a charge against anybody. I do not legislate in that way; nor do I make personal attacks upon men; but I have heard in the Senate language used by Senators to each other which makes it important that we should take some steps to prevent that sort of crimination and recrimination, which tends to bring us into disrepute before the country.

On the 28th of last May, within a day or two of the time when I introduced the original bill, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], in speaking of the efforts that were made to forfeit parts of the land grant of the Northern Pacific road, said:

> I wish to speak to the pending bill as illustrating the bill that has just passed away from the consideration of the Senate. I wish to call the attention of my brother Senators to the circumstance that a bill considered by a committee and reported by that committee, by a majority (I do not know whether it was unanimous or not, probably not), which proposes to forfeit 200 miles or more of a land grant in the rich valley of the Columbia, in respect to which probably all Senators would agree that it ought to be forfeited—has been by a yea-and-nay vote (if I may use such a phrase now) bedeviled, as if we were all employed by a railroad company to bedevil it, and do nothing at all by the propositions of amendments, and insisting upon considering them, that raise open and difficult and disturbing questions, which our former experience has shown are not likely to be decided in the six weeks that are probably yet left for the action of Congress at this session.

A colloquy, as I gave it before, occurred between my friend from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] of the same general character. The Senator from Mississippi said:

> I am willing to yield to any reasonable length, but I can not give way to hear all the apologies and all the reasonings, and everything of that sort of a railroad company.
>
> Mr. DOLPH. It is simply a question whether the Senator yields for me to finish my statement.
>
> Mr. GEORGE. I believe I will not. You can reply to me.
>
> The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi declines to yield.
> Mr. GEORGE. I have no doubt the Senator from Oregon as a lawyer has had a great deal of experience in reference to railroad companies which would interest the people of this country, but as I am just now going on with the people's side of the case I ask him to wait until I get through.

So I have speeches made by other Senators intimating, twitting each other, perhaps not intending anything offensive, but suggesting to the country that we were acting in the interest of railroads; and every once in a while when a Legislature sends a man here the press of the country and the people of the country believe that he is sent by railroad or other great influences to represent them and not to represent the people. What I desire is, as long as I am in this body, to have it understood that no member can be interested for those great land-grant railroads in any way by taking fees from them in suits that they may have with anybody, or by taking their money on any pretense whatever when we are dealing with them, and that he must come here free from all embarrassment when he is acting on the question of land forfeitures, or what to do with the great amount of money we have loaned the railroads, or when we are arranging to carry our mails, our troops, or our munitions of war, and that he shall be able to say to any slanderer anywhere, "If you think I am an interested man go to the courts and prove it; I hold myself ready to answer your charges."

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to say that in the extract which the Senator from Kentucky quoted from the speech which I made last session I did not intend to impute to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] anything improper or any improper relation with any railroad company whatever.

Mr. BECK. I had no idea that the Senator from Mississippi was making any charges; but he will readily see that when the Senator from Vermont, the distinguished leader of this body and chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and the distinguished Senator from Mississippi and others are talking in that way, it is better for us that we should have a law prohibiting us from having any connection with these railroad companies.

I have read twice during this debate the acts of Congress declaring that no member of either House shall prosecute any suit in the Court of Claims even for his most deserving constituent. Why? Because it is inconsistent with the duty of a member of either House to take any part in a case in which the United States is concerned. I read laws showing that he can not even take money from a man to obtain a contract or a place, or to appear before a court-martial or any other tribunal, because it is inconsistent with his position. In every contract that is made with the United States there has to be a clause inserted that no member of either House is interested in it, and there is a whole line of legislation in the same direction as that now proposed.

Mr. President, if this case had not been argued so well by other Senators I might be tempted to go on. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] argued it the other day in a way that commended his speech to the country. I have not his speech before me; but the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON] followed him, and in his speech, which no man has answered, and which no man can answer, he not only showed the policy, the propriety, but the absolute necessity of legislation such as the bill I had the honor to offer proposes.

If I heard correctly amidst the confusion the statement of the Senator from Delaware in the argument he made, he seemed willing that even no penalty should be attached for a violation of the proposed law. I believe I am correct in that; at least the Senator does not seem to dispute it. A law without a penalty, leaving it to the honor of men, has never been recognized in any of the legislation of this country. All the laws I quoted, in regard to contracts, in regard to the Court of Claims, &c., have their appropriate penalties, and some of them much heavier than those I propose.

But I was about to say that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON], in the speech which he made the other day, came up to my ideas of what ought to be done, and the reasons he gave were so conclusive to my mind that I do not care to repeat them, except by reading a few extracts from his speech which I will adopt as my own. The Senator, after showing how we ought to preserve the purity of legislation, said:

> It would be an invitation to a general system of robbery, peculation, fraud, and inefficiency if Congress had not the power to impose penalties upon its agents and fiduciaries commensurate with its powers and duties, and necessary to insure the right performance of the varied functions of government. And it would indeed be a strange anomaly if the legislative power could embrace all other repositories of the functions of government within its range of criminal legislation, but should be nerveless to take any step to repress grave offenses among its own constituent members—if it were armed with full energy to keep pure every streamlet of governmental agency, but were powerless to pass any act to protect from pollution the great fountain of political life right here in its own bodies. Nothing can be found in the language of the Constitution to warrant so remarkable an assumption, and certainly there is nothing in the nature or reason of things to justify it.

Again the distinguished Senator said:

> Momentous questions, involving the forfeiture back to the people of unearned grants of many millions of acres of land, and the claim of the Government for most valuable services which these corporations, by the terms of their charters, undertook to render to the Government, and also the settlement of immense sums of money claimed to be due from them to our Treasury, are either of chronic standing or perpetually arising.
>
> Gentlemen may refine as they will, and wax eloquent over the dignity of the legal profession, and denounce the attempt to invade the rights of the citizen to pursue his calling free from governmental control; but the people have deep and abiding convictions that no member of Congress has any right to place himself in any such indelicate or compromising position.

The Senator from Maryland is right. The voice of the country will respond to the honest impulses he has there given utterance to. As to not imposing any penalty as is suggested by the Senator from Delaware, the Senator from Maryland answered that position very well a little further on. He said:

> The Constitution even contemplates that the hightest may fall, and has organized a court of impeachment which can strip the ermine from the shoulders of your Chief-Justice or drive a President from the White House. There is no reason, either in the principles of human nature or in the light of our own or of any other people's experience, why we should assume (much less grow indignant at the contrary supposition) that members of Congress, even if they be lawyers, like the rest of mankind, may not be successfully assailed by temptation. It is extremely right and judicious, then, to provide all reasonable safeguards against the possible lapse of legislators from the path of duty. To do this does not involve a charge against any man in either House of Congress. It is only an assertion of a truth, which no one will deny, that to err is human and that human nature requires all the props attainable to keep it from falling.

Further on the Senator from Maryland said:

> It has been further strenuously argued that Congress has no power to pass this bill, because it would be an assertion of a power to regulate the right of an attorney of a State court to practice law in such court—the power to impose such restrictions upon a practitioner in a United States court being conceded, so far as this particular view is concerned. Some supporters of the general scope and purpose of this bill, as it originally stood, recognize this distinction, and would limit the bill to lawyers practicing in Federal courts. With all deference to the views of these eminent lawyers, I have no difficulty in going to the full extent of the legislation originally proposed by the Senator from Kentucky. I hold that we are not claiming the power to regulate or control State laws on this subject. We are simply regulating the conduct of members of Congress in reference to the discharge of their duties as such. When a man comes here, if he be a lawyer, in everything relating to or bearing upon the discharge of his duty on this floor his character as a lawyer is or should be merged in his character as a Senator. His duties to the public are or should be paramount to any duties owed to a citizen or to a corporation.

* * * * * * *

And right here, sir, appears to rest the full and complete answer to the amendment proposed by the Judiciary Committee, which seeks to discredit the bill before us by professing to carry it out to its logical consequences. Because it might be childish to attempt to prevent a member of Congress from allowing himself to be retained by a man or a corporation with some much less important interest opposed to the Government, it is highly illogical to argue that no case can arise in which interests can be so powerful, so aggressive, and so seductive as not only to render it unseemly and impolitic, but actually dangerous to legislative rectitude, to allow members of Congress to be retained as attorneys in their behalf. The science of government is not only the science of the attainable, but also of the expedient. Legislation in one class of the cases supposed may well be highly expedient and necessary, while in the other its utter needlessness would only render it ridiculous. Of the one class is the wholesome legislation proposed by the Senator from Kentucky in this bill as it originally stood; of the other, with all due respect to the committee, is their amendment.

* * * * * * *

Surely, these great corporations can find multitudes of able counsel to prosecute their claims against the Government without seeking to impress into their service members of Congress, who were sent here, above all things, to protect the rights of the people, and whose employment by such corporations will be surely suspected to have been often sought simply because they do sustain that very relation to the States or to the people. If, then, members of Congress do not desire such employment, and do not intend to accept it, and if the moral sense of the people demands that they should not do so, and if to accept it would tend to bring Congress into disrepute, why not pass the law as originally proposed, satisfy the public demand, and dispel any cloud of suspicion which a contrary course will be sure to gather around us?

* * * * * * *

That profession, we must remember, is the only one whose members hold themselves out to the world as prepared to undertake the business of clients for pecuniary considerations, and who bind themselves by oaths to faithfully prosecute such business when intrusted to them. Let us recall another fact developed by this discussion, that, out of seventy-six members of this body, sixty-five are lawyers. If the outcome of this debate should be an approval of the position that it is becoming and proper for a Senator who is a lawyer to become a retained counsel for a land-grant railroad, each one of these sixty-five lawyers will be at liberty, with the expressed approval of the Senate, to accept a retainer by these railroads.

Thus, 85 per cent. of the Senate's members might, with the Senate's approval, be subject to whatever bias such retainer might generate when here called upon to decide questions of the highest importance (though in precisely opposite directions) both to their clients and to the people.

So I might read other extracts as conclusively in favor of the proposition that I maintain.

Now, Mr. President, all I have to say is, let us take a fair vote on the bill as presented, as voted upon once by the Senate, as passed on a call of the yeas and nays by a vote of 37 to 11. Do not let us have any evasion upon that question or any doubt as to where we stand. If Senators have changed their minds and desire to vote against it now, let them do so, but do not let us go before the country and assume that we are doing something that is equivalent to it, or that we are making some substitute that will answer every purpose and reach every evil, when the fact is that every substitute proposed and every suggestion made in the direction of a substitute, whether by the Judiciary Committee or by any amendment offered, meant either to make the bill so ridiculous that nobody could vote for it, or to leave untouched all the evils which the bill sought to remedy.

These evils will not be remedied so long as members of both Houses of Congress can be attorneys for the railroads in all their suits, so long as they can be employed under all sorts of pretenses, and receive heavy fees, whether the railroads want their services or not, or whether they employ them merely because they think it best to keep them as their agents and under their control, or from whatever motive the railroad companies act. There are a thousand ways in which they can make a man believe that they need his services when they want him as their friend in the Congress of the United States, not paying for what he does in Congress, not bribing him directly for his vote, but keeping him in their employ for everything else. All the amendments allow that to be done, and as long as that is allowed we might as well have no law at all seeking to control or curtail the relations which exist between the great land-grant railroads and members of Congress whom they desire to keep under their control.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I had not intended to say anything in advocacy of the amendment I offered, but to content myself simply with an explanation of the provision I proposed as a substitute for the bill of the Senator from Kentucky, and to answer such inquiries as were made of me in reference to what was the import of the measure. But I can not now let the remarks which have just been made by the Senator from Kentucky in denunciation of the amendment which I have proposed and in advocacy of the bill which he himself proposed, pass unnoticed.

I am willing to concede to the Senator from Kentucky a monopoly of all the talent and all the virtue that there is in this body, for he certainly assumes it himself, and I shall not controvert his position with him; but I think it a little ungenerous that that Senator should rise in his place and denounce other gentlemen who see proper to differ with him in reference to a question pending in the Senate. The tendency of his remarks was to show that because we had upon an impulse of the moment voted for his bill, any change of view which any of us might express was a change of view that was not an honest one.

Mr. BECK. Oh, I can not submit to that. I have neither so claimed nor have I charged any member, nor have I suggested that as the reason for any change of view. I deny it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator from Kentucky said in reference to my amendment that the Senator from Delaware had voted for his bill but had been induced—"induced"—to change his opinion. I should like to know what is the meaning of the word "induced," as applied by the Senator from Kentucky. If that Senator——

Mr. BECK. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. SAULSBURY. If he attempts to cast any imputation upon the action of myself——

Mr. BECK. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. SAULSBURY. Or any other Senator——

Mr. BECK. Allow me to ask, does not the Senator from Delaware know that I said there was no man whose integrity was higher or who was more above suspicion than he?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then I caution the Senator to be more guarded in expressions which he uses in debate when referring to myself.

Mr. BECK. I will let my remarks go into the RECORD without looking at them, and if the Senator finds a word in them that looks as though any improper motives were attributed to him or to any other gentleman here, by a remark I made in the Senate, I shall rise to-morrow when I see it and apologize for it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not ask the Senator to apologize for anything he said. I know he used the expression that I had been induced to offer this amendment. Such imputations, conveyed in language of that kind, I resent here or anywhere else, whenever the Senator from Kentucky may feel disposed to call me to account for anything I say in reply to him. Such an imputation was unworthy of the Senator; it was unworthy of the Senate; and I stand here now and say that whatever may be his virtue, whatever may be his purity, he is not the superior of other Senators in this body in those regards. I have followed that Senator frequently, but I can not sit here, and simply because an honest difference of opinion exists between him and myself or between him and other Senators, tolerate expressions calculated to cast reflection upon men as honorable and as worthy as he is himself.

I did not vote for the Senator's bill. I believed at the time that it was right. Subsequent reflection convinced me that it went too far. Subsequent reflection convinced me, in the first place, that the provision which made the employment of members of Congress by railroads a misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment was wrong; and in turning to the act which inhibited the employment of members of Congress in the Court of Claims I found that no such penalty was attached, that it was simply an inhibition. In drawing my amendment I followed that provision which is simply an inhibition against the employment of members of Congress in the Court of Claims. That was one provision which I thought was wrong.

Another provision which I thought was wrong in his bill proposed to inhibit the employment of members of Congress as counsel in open court where the Government of the United States was not concerned. So far as my amendment goes, no member of Congress can take employment and give advice even in reference to any matter which is not pending in court. His services for a railroad company must be such that they must be open before the world. It prohibits him from being attorney or counsel except as is provided for in the amendment, that he may appear in suits in court and receive compensation for such services.

I had not intended to say anything in advocacy of my amendment. I believe it is right, and I believe it goes as far as any provision of law ought to go. It prohibits a member of Congress from acting as attorney or counsel for railroads that have received a land grant or aid of any character from the Government, with the exception contained in the proviso that in suits in courts where the United States is not interested he may appear and receive compensation. I hold that under the provisions of that amendment no member of Congress can give advice and receive compensation for it upon any subject except in connection with the suits pending in courts. In all other respects he is excluded from appearing for these land-grant railroads or from rendering them any assistance whatever.

But I was not in favor of the provision which denounced it as a misdemeanor and punishable with fine and imprisonment because, in the first place, that is unnecessary. Whenever such a law is passed here I have no doubt that it will be observed by every member of Congress, just as the provision in respect to practicing in the Court of Claims has been faithfully observed ever since it was enacted, although without a single provision designating it a crime or providing any punishment for a disobedience of the law. I understand that to be the case with reference to practicing in the Court of Claims.

This is all I desire to say, and I am very sorry that the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky have caused me to say this much, but I could not sit by and hear motives impugned, and especially hear language imputed, that conveys to the world the idea that a Senator has been approached by some person with a view to tender him a fee for his services in connection with this bill.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I do not propose to answer the ill-natured and unjust remarks of the Senator from Delaware. The RECORD will show that he has raised a storm about nothing, and that is a mild way to put it. I have only to say that I am willing when he tells me that I am not the peer of other Senators——

Mr. SAULSBURY. I beg pardon; it was a lapsus linguæ if I said so.

Mr. BECK. When he tells me that I am not the peer of other Senators here, I will leave it to the country either on the record or anywhere else.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I want to say to the Senator that it was a lapsus linguæ if I used that word. I did not intend to say that he was not the peer, but that he was not the superior, as he——

Mr. BECK. I never claimed to be superior to any other Senator, but I am the peer of the Senator from Delaware or anybody else in this Chamber.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware. It is simply a renewal of the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. I desire to test the sense of the Senate upon the proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island offers an amendment to the pending amendment. It will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "member," in the third line of the amendment now pending, and to insert:

Of either House of Congress to accept employment as attorney-at-law, or receive compensation for services rendered, in opposition to the interests of the United States, in any suit, action, or other matter in the result of which the United States is directly or indirectly interested, or in respect of which any question is pending before Congress, or in respect of which such member has reasonable cause to believe legislation by Congress may be asked.

SEC. 2. That any person who violates the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be punished by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by a fine not exceeding $500, or by both, in the discretion of the court.

So as to read:

That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress to accept employment, &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on this amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will strike out the penalty clause, and let that come in subsequently. I modify the amendment by striking out the second section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 3 of the pending amendment it is proposed to strike out all after the word "member," and to insert in lieu thereof:

Of either House of Congress to accept employment as attorney-at-law, or receive compensation for services rendered, in opposition to the interests of the United States, in any suit, action, or other matter in the result of which the United States is directly or indirectly interested, or in respect of which any question is pending before Congress, or in respect of which such member has reasonable cause to believe legislation by Congress may be asked.

Mr. GEORGE I should like to have read the language that is stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Delaware is the original text. It will be read.

Mr. GEORGE. I want only the part stricken out read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island strikes out substantially the whole of the amendment of the Senator from Delaware and inserts what has been read. Does the Senator from Mississippi desire the amendment of the Senator from Delaware to be read?

Mr. GEORGE. No, sir; I have it here now.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Is this the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER. There is so much confusion that it is impossible to hear what is going on in the Senate Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will cause business to be suspended until order is restored, and have read both the amendment of the Senator from Delaware and the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island, which is offered substantially as a substitute.

The amendments were read.

Mr. HAWLEY. Senators will understand that this is substantially the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. PLATT], which was printed and laid on the desks of Senators.

Mr. HOAR. Does the phrase "in opposition to the interests of the United States" run all through the amendment?

Mr. ALDRICH. I understand it so.

Mr. HOAR. What does the Senator mean by the phrase prohibiting the acting as counsel in any case in regard to which legislation may possibly be asked? It is hardly to be conceived that counsel can ever act in a matter in which the interpretation or construction of a national statute is involved, or in which the law as administered in the national courts is to be administered, in regard to which there may not hereafter be legislation invoked.

Mr. ALDRICH. It seems to me very clearly that the words "in opposition to the interests of the United States" apply to and limit the whole clause.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll-call will be resumed.

Mr. GEORGE. Before the roll-call, I should like to ask whether the word "general" has been stricken out before "counsel" in the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]?

Several SENATORS. Yes, that word is stricken out.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask whether if this amendment as amended be adopted, it will be a substitute for the amendment reported by the Judiciary Committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware. If this amendment be adopted, it will take the place of the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, and the question will then recur on the adoption of that amendment.

Mr. HALE. If this amendment is rejected, the question will then be on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes. The roll-call will proceed.

The Secretary resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. DAWES (when his name was called). I am paired with the absent Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). My colleague [Mr. EDMUNDS] is paired on this question and all others in relation to this bill with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. If he were here I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. RANSOM. I desire the attention of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER], who is paired with my colleague [Mr. VANCE] on this bill. My colleague instructs me to say that he would vote all the time with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], and I observed that the Senator from Michigan said he would vote "yea." My colleague would vote "yea" if he were here.

Mr. PALMER. I did not know how the Senator's colleague would vote. I thought it incumbent on me to announce the pair.

Mr. PLUMB. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. KENNA. I am paired, as I have already announced, on all questions with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER]. If not paired, on this proposition I should vote "yea."

Mr. COKE. My colleague [Mr. MAXEY] is paired on all questions with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES]. If he were here, my colleague would vote "yea" on this amendment.

Mr. KENNA. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD].

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired for the evening with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. I believe this is his amendment. I understand it is the same as the one offered by him.

Mr. ALDRICH and Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will, therefore, for him, vote "yea."

Mr. MCPHERSON. I am paired with my colleague [Mr. SEWELL]. I do not know how he would vote on this amendment, and, therefore, I shall withhold my vote. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. PALMER. I did not at the time comprehend the tenor of the remarks made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] in respect to his colleague [Mr. VANCE]. He says that his colleague would vote "yea" if he were here. If he takes the responsibility, I shall vote "yea."

Mr. RANSOM. Yes, sir; that is all right.

Mr. COLQUITT. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]. I understand he would vote for the amendment if present. I therefore vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Aldrich,	Conger,	Hawley,	Spooner,
Allison,	Cullom,	Hoar,	Van Wyck,
Beck,	Dolph,	Manderson,	Voorhees,
Blair,	Eustis,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Walthall,
Cheney,	Farwell,	Morrill,	Whitthorne,
Cockrell,	George,	Palmer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Colquitt,	Gorman,	Sawyer,

NAYS—27.

Berry,	Evarts,	Jones of Nevada,	Saulsbury,
Blackburn,	Fair,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Bowen,	Frye,	Mahone,	Teller,
Butler,	Gray,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Vest,
Call,	Hale,	Payne,	Williams,
Cameron,	Hampton,	Pugh,	Wilson of Md.
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Ransom,

ABSENT—22.

Brown,	Harris,	Maxey,	Sabin,
Camden,	Harrison,	Miller,	Sewell,
Chace,	Ingalls,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Platt,	Vance.
Edmunds,	Kenna,	Plumb,
Gibson,	McPherson,	Riddleberger,

So the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. DOLPH. Let the amendment be read as it now stands.

Mr. BECK. There is so much confusion that it is difficult to understand what is being said. This is a substitute for the committee's substitute, and if this is adopted we do not have a vote on the committee's substitute at all, as I understand.

Mr. HOAR. What is the matter to be amended by the proposition now pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is to the substitute reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, the original text having already been amended on motion of the Senator from Massachusetts. The question will finally recur on the adoption of the amendment to that proposition as amended.

Mr. BECK. But if this is voted in, there will be no vote on the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary will be superseded by the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. CULLOM. But there will be a vote on the Senator's original bill as amended.

Mr. BECK. No, sir; oh, no. I desire a fair vote on the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary. I do not want any avoidance of that if I can help it.

Mr. CULLOM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Even if this amendment of the Senator from Delaware is adopted, shall we not finally have an opportunity of voting upon the original bill of the Senator from Kentucky as amended by the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to-day?

Several SENATORS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BECK. Of course, but there is nothing left of the original bill. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with my colleague [Mr. SEWELL]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PALMER. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. I understand he would vote "nay" if he were here, and I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Allison,	Gray,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Saulsbury,
Bowen,	Hale,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Sawyer,
Butler,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Sherman,
Call,	Hoar,	Payne,	Teller,
Cameron,	Jones of Nevada,	Pugh,	Williams,
Evarts,	McMillan,	Ransom,
Frye,	Mahone,	Riddleberger,

NAYS—27.

Aldrich,	Colquitt,	George,	Vest,
Beck,	Conger,	Gorman,	Voorhees,
Berry,	Cullom,	Hampton,	Walthall,
Blackburn,	Dolph,	Jones of Arkansas,	Whitthorne,
Blair,	Eustis,	Manderson,	Wilson of Iowa,
Cheney,	Fair,	Spooner,	Wilson of Md.
Coke,	Farwell,	Van Wyck,

ABSENT—23.

Brown,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Plumb,
Camden,	Harris,	Maxey,	Sabin,
Chace,	Harrison,	Miller,	Sewell,
Cockrell,	Ingalls,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Palmer,	Vance.
Edmunds,	Kenna,	Platt,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary as a substitute for the original bill as amended on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to inquire whether, if that is voted down, we shall then have a vote on the text of the original bill as amended by the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I ask whether when the bill gets into the Senate it will then be in order for me to offer the amendment which I offered in Committee of the Whole as a substitute for the whole bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unquestionably.

Mr. GEORGE. If this amendment is voted down, will it be in order then to offer a substitute in place of the bill as amended?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will in the Senate. The question is on the amendment reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BECK called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). If the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] were here I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. RANSOM. If my colleague [Mr. VANCE] were here he would vote "nay."

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], as before announced. If he were present he would vote "nay;" and I, therefore, vote "nay."

Mr. MCPHERSON. I am paired with my colleague [Mr. SEWELL]; but I am informed that if present he would vote "nay;" and therefore I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 0, nays 55; as follows:

YEAS—0.

NAYS—55.

Aldrich,	Conger,	Hawley,	Saulsbury,
Allison,	Cullom,	Hoar,	Sawyer,
Beck,	Dawes,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sherman,
Berry,	Dolph,	McMillan,	Spooner,
Blackburn,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Teller,
Blair,	Evarts,	Mahone,	Van Wyck,
Bowen,	Fair,	Manderson,	Vest,
Butler,	Farwell,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Voorhees,
Call,	Frye,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Walthall,
Cameron,	George,	Morrill,	Whitthorne,
Cheney,	Gorman,	Payne,	Williams,
Cockrell,	Gray,	Pugh,	Wilson of Iowa,
Coke,	Hale,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.
Colquitt,	Hampton,	Riddleberger,

ABSENT—21.

Brown,	Harrison,	Miller,	Sewell,
Camden,	Ingalls,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Chace,	Jones of Florida,	Palmer,	Vance.
Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,
Gibson,	Kenna,	Plumb,
Harris,	Maxey,	Sabin,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COKE. The Senate has just taken a vote upon the amendment reported by the majority of the Judiciary Committee, and it transpires that not a single vote is recorded in favor of the report.

Mr. BECK. That is a good record.

Mr. COKE. Not a single vote is recorded in favor of the majority report of the Judiciary Committee upon this bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator permit me to ask him if that distinguished committee made a written report?

Mr. COKE. It did not.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear the report read if the committee made one.

Mr. COKE. There were two reports made from that committee, one by the majority and the other by the minority.

Mr. GEORGE. Who are the minority?

Mr. COKE. The minority of that committee instructed me to report the following as a substitute for the committee's bill. I offer it now as a substitute for the original bill as amended, if it is in order to do so; and I will remark that this substitute differs from the bill as originally introduced by the Senator from Kentucky only in this: in line 4, after the words "either House of Congress," is inserted "or any civil officer of the United States;" so as to make it read:

That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress, or any civil officer of the United States, to accept employment, &c.

I ask that the amendment I offer be read, and that it be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas submits an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress, or any civil officer of the United States, to accept employment as attorney-at-law, or payment for services of any kind, or any gratuity whatever, from any railroad company, or any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States; and any person who violates this provision shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000, and imprisoned not more than one year, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. HALE. Now let us have read the original proposition as amended by the Senator from Massachusetts, which is antagonized by this.

Mr. HOAR. Is it in order to move to amend this proposed substitute before the vote is taken on it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that it is, because it embraces other things.

Mr. HOAR. Then I move to add to it the following:

No member of either House of Congress shall, after the expiration of six months from the passage of this bill, own or be interested in any real estate in the District of Columbia, except such as he may occupy for his own residence. Any violation of this provision shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000 and imprisonment not exceeding one year.

Mr. BECK. Let us have the yeas and nays on that.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly; let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. I do not know how he would vote if he were present.

Mr. HAWLEY. He would vote "nay."

Mr. COCKRELL. I should vote "yea" if at liberty. He would not vote as I would.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri is not understood. Does he vote?

Mr. COCKRELL. No; I say I would vote "yea" if I were not paired with the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. DAWES (when his name was called). I am paired with the absent Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. KENNA. I have already announced that I am paired on all questions with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER]. On this particular question, if not paired, I should vote "nay."

I believe also the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] has announced his pair with my colleague [Mr. CAMDEN].

The result was announced—yeas 6, nays 46; as follows:

YEAS—6.

Butler,	Hoar,	Pugh,	Teller.
Hale,	Payne,

NAYS—46.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sherman,
Allison,	Dolph,	Jones of Nevada,	Spooner,
Beck,	Eustis,	McMillan,	Van Wyck,
Berry,	Evarts,	McPherson,	Vest,
Blackburn,	Fair,	Manderson,	Voorhees,
Blair,	Farwell,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Walthall,
Call,	Frye,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Whitthorne,
Cameron,	George,	Morrill,	Williams,
Cheney,	Gorman,	Ransom,	Wilson of Iowa.
Coke,	Gray,	Riddleberger,	Wilson of Md.
Colquitt,	Hampton,	Saulsbury,
Conger,	Hawley,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—24.

Bowen,	Edmunds,	Kenna,	Platt,
Brown,	Gibson,	Mahone,	Plumb,
Camden,	Harris,	Maxey,	Sabin,
Chace,	Harrison,	Miller,	Sewell,
Cockrell,	Ingalls,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Palmer,	Vance.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE].

Mr. COKE. I was asked a question by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] when I was up before, which, inadvertently, I did not answer, as to who constituted the minority of the Judiciary Committee. I will state now that minority was composed of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], and myself.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend the amendment just offered by striking out all after the words "attorney-at-law," in line 3, and inserting what follows the words "attorney-at-law" in line 4 of the amendment which I formerly proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts submits an amendment, which will be read.

Mr. BUTLER. Pending the consideration of that amendment I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. ["No!" "No!"]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after "attorney-at-law," in line 5 of the amendment, and in lieu of the words stricken out to insert:

> Or payment for services of any kind, in opposition to the United States, in any case to which the United States may be a party or in which its interests may be concerned, or from any railroad company which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States, if such member shall have reasonable cause to believe that measures specially affecting the interests of such railroad are pending before Congress, or are about to be so pending during his term of office.
> Any person who violates the provision of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be punished by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by fine not exceeding $500, or by both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. HOAR. That is in substance what the Senate has already adopted by a decided majority on a call of the yeas and nays.

Mr. COKE. I hope that amendment will not be agreed to. It has been sought in vain here to get a direct, square vote upon the leading proposition in the bill of the Senator from Kentucky. This amendment contains that proposition. Every time that it has been sought to get a vote on that proposition it has been defeated by amendments, by substitutes, and by all the devices and tactics of parliamentary law.

The people demand just such a bill as the Senator from Kentucky introduced; the country clamors for it, and this Senate is standing in the way of its enactment. The people believe that the enactment of such a law is necessary to protect the purity of their National Legislature; they believe that the great power of the railroad corporations is sapping and mining the purity of this Government, and especially of its legislative branch. They have asked in every mode in which they can give expression to their opinions, through the public press, through their Representatives, in every way, that legislation be enacted which shall prevent their representatives, sent here to represent them, from being corrupted and lured away to the support of schemes not approved by them.

We ask no advantage; we seek nothing but a direct, square vote upon the proposition. If we are beaten on that we are done. But we have tried every way to get a vote upon the proposition, and every time when it seems we are about to get a vote some gentleman gets up and offers an amendment which diverts the attention of the Senate to something else than a vote on the direct question. I hope the amendment will be voted down, so that we may have a vote on the main question presented by the bill of the minority.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, there never was a bill of any importance passed in Congress in which the Senate did not, if it saw fit, exercise its privilege of amendment. The Senator demands one method of dealing with this question, a gross, unconstitutional, awkward, crude, ill-drawn, ill-considered, ill-conceived scheme, which is not only an insult to the Senate, but is an insult to the American people who elect the Senate, who honor the Senate, who know the individual men who are the members of this body, and know that to their purity and sense of honor and character the country may safely look. That bill is not the outcome of any popular or public demand. It comes from the fears of men who think their characters are not strong enough to stand up against the anonymous articles put by blackmailers and stock-jobbers in irresponsible newspapers.

That is what the Senator from Texas calls "the people." The will of the people of the United States is found enacted in its Constitution, which the fathers framed and which the sons observe and honor. The will of the people of the United States in matters of legislation is found in the laws which its Representatives and its Senators and its President write upon its statute-books. And that man knows very little of the Constitution who talks about any other will of the people than that which the people in the constitutional method enact into law.

It is a very strange claim for Senators to get up here and undertake to cast dishonor upon the body to which they belong and to claim that they have a right which belongs to no other member of the body, that the measures which they draught and propose shall be voted on without amendment, without the opportunity to amend. If the Senate like better the proposition which I have drawn, which enacts that if any member of either House shall hereafter act as the counsel for any railroad in opposition to the interests of the United States, or shall hereafter act as counsel for any railroad which expects legislation, or concerning whose interests there is likely to be legislation, or concerning whose interests there is legislation pending, he shall be punished, it will vote for my amendment.

Any member of the Senate who is of opinion that a member of the House of Representatives in a Western State may in the vacation lawfully and honorably practice his profession, and in the practice of that profession may draw a lease between two railroads, or may give an opinion as to their right to cross the street of a city, or to a patent in a Pullman car, without being dishonored and disgraced, that Senator will vote for my proposition. But any Senator who thinks such things ought to be branded as crimes will vote with the Senator from Texas.

That Senator's speech comes with singular grace from a neighborhood which refuses to strike at the practice of speculating in real estate in the District of Columbia, and of enriching men by acquiring property whose value is enhanced speedily by its relief from taxes by Congressional legislation, by laying out sewers and streets. That is the one thing, if there is a danger in this country to the purity of the Senate and the House of Representatives, in which the danger lies. In my judgment, against that we are safe by the integrity of the individual Senators.

Mr. COKE. Does the Senator mean to charge me with being interested in real estate in this District?

Mr. HOAR. I do not. I made no charge against anybody.

Mr. COKE. I have no interest in real estate here.

Mr. HOAR. But I say if we were to legislate in this direction that is the first legislation to which we should resort. I have heard about enough of this arrogant, insulting, domineering style of an attempt to frighten Senators from what they consider their duty, their sense of honor, and what they consider is demanded by respect for themselves and regard for the interests of the country.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not want to scare anybody, and I do not suppose I could if I were to try [laughter], and I do not want to be scared myself if I can help it; but I want to make one remark about this amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The Senator from Texas moved as a substitute for the bill as amended on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts the report of the minority of the Judiciary Committee, and we have this very extraordinary parliamentary proceeding, that the very thing to which the Senator from Texas offered his amendment as a substitute is brought out and offered as a substitute to the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas. He moved to amend the bill as amended on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, and his motion is met by a motion to amend his amendment by substituting the very thing complained of and to which it is offered. Now, sir, that is a very extraordinary spectacle, I think. I do not know that it is subject to a point of order; but at least we stand in relation to that in this way. The Senator from Texas moves to strike out——

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator pardon me? Is not the Senator's amendment exactly that thing?

Mr. GEORGE. No, sir.

Mr. HOAR. The Senate has practically substituted my amendment for the original bill, and that will be the proposition when we go into the Senate. The original bill is modified by my amendment. Then the Senator from Texas comes in and takes the original bill with a mere trifling and verbal alteration, and moves to amend it by that. Then I do to him exactly what he did to us; nothing more, nothing less.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Massachusetts is in error, and in very serious error, in relation to the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas. It is not a mere verbal amendment. It is a very important amendment, and an amendment which the minority of the Judiciary Committee instructed him to offer.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, the Senator from Texas advocated his amendment by saying that he did it because he wanted to get a square vote on the original bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Well, sir, what he did was this: The original bill offered by the Senator from Kentucky applied only to members of Congress. The substitute offered by the Senator from Texas applies to every civil officer in the United States. The proposition of the Senator from Kentucky prohibited only the receiving of fees from railroad companies. The amendment offered by the Senator from Texas prohibits not only that, but the receiving of any gratuity whatever from railroad companies—a very important amendment.

Mr. HOAR. Will my honorable friend allow me to put him a question?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly I will.

Mr. HOAR. If he is right, then what earthly reason is there that that should not be amended like anything else, if the Senate choose to do so?

Mr. GEORGE. The point I make is this, that when the Senator from Texas offers this substitute in place of the original bill as amended on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, he is met by a sort of cross-action; he is met by a motion to substitute the original bill as amended by the Senator from Massachusetts for the substitute offered by the Senator from Texas. The only effect—I want that distinctly understood—in changing the mode of voting is to prevent that which the Senator from Texas said ought to be done, to prevent a square, fair vote on the proposition submitted by the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, if a vote is to be taken which is to advance toward the stage of final enactment the bill as proposed by the Senator from Texas in the name of the minority of the Judiciary Committee, we shall now at this late stage of this transaction be for the first time considering and voting on the question whether every civil officer of the United States of America all over this country shall be precluded from practicing law in the current and every-day business of his profession.

The motive here is that it corrupts legislation to permit attorneys to practice if they are members of these Houses. What becomes of the proposition of precluding every civil officer of the United States having nothing to do with legislation and nothing to do with corruption, from practicing law in his own neighborhood? At this last stage we are for the first time to throw into ridicule the whole proposition of the matter which has rested on this danger of corruption in the two Houses of Congress, and now it is transferred with one swoop, without a word of debate, over the common and every-day pursuits of every civil officer in his neighborhood and in matters that do not corrupt him, or his office, or the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. GEORGE. Now, Mr. President, the answer to that is this: The original proposition submitted by the Senator from Kentucky is retained in this substitute offered by the Senator from Texas. It only goes further. It does not prohibit, however, as the Senator from New York says, every civil officer of the United States from practicing law; it only prohibits him, a servant of the Government, receiving a salary from the Treasury of the Government, from turning his services in favor of railroads who have an interest adverse to the Government in the legislation of the country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], upon which the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his named was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. SEWELL]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. STANFORD (when his name was called). My pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] has been transferred to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. I therefore vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MCMILLAN. My colleague [Mr. SABIN] has been called from the chamber for this afternoon, and is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. DAWES. I am paired on this vote with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY], or I should vote "yea."

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], who, if present, would vote "yea;" and I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Jones of Nevada,	Riddleberger,
Allison,	Evarts,	McMillan,	Saulsbury,
Blair,	Farwell,	Mahone,	Sawyer,

Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Palmer,

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment as amended.

Mr. BECK. Is this now the substitute, as amended?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. COKE. Let the bill be read as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length as amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress, or any civil officer of the United States, to accept employment as attorney-at-law, or payment for services of any kind in opposition to the United States, in any case to which the United States may be a party or in which its interests may be concerned, or from any railroad company which obtained its charter or any grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States, if such member shall have reasonable cause to believe that measures specially affecting the interests of such railroad are pending before Congress or are about to be so pending during his term of office.

Any person who violates the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be punished by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by fine not exceeding $500, or by both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. HOAR. I move further to amend by striking out the words "or any civil officer of the United States."

Mr. BUTLER. Is the bill in the Senate or in Committee of the Whole?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the Senate. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to amend the amendment by striking out, in line 4, the words:

Or any civil officer of the United States.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. I offer an amendment as a substitute for the bill as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That it shall be unlawful for any member of Congress to accept employment as general counsel or attorney, or receive payment for services as such general counsel or attorney, from any railroad company, or from any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter or any grant of land or pecuniary aid from the United States: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to prevent members of either House of Congress from appearing as counsel in suits by or against such railroad companies in the State or Federal courts when the United States is not a party or interested in the result of said suits.

Mr. BUTLER. Before that is submitted I will strike out the word "general" in line 4 and also in line 5.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can so modify his amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. On the amendment as modified I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BECK. I move to amend the substitute by striking out all after the first five words, "That it shall be unlawful," and inserting the original bill, leaving out the five words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore The Senator from Kentucky moves an amendment to the amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "unlawful," in line 3, and to insert:

For any member of either House of Congress to accept employment as attorney-at-law, or payment for services of any kind, from any railroad company, or any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States; and any person who violates this provision shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000, and imprisoned not more than one year, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. BECK. I demand the yeas and nays on that amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order. That, I understand, is the original bill. The original bill is still the question before the Senate. The Committee of the Whole has merely reported a proposed amendment. It is not in order to move to amend that proposed amendment by substituting the thing which it is proposed as an amendment to. I avoided that difficulty in the amendment I offered a little while ago by beginning half-a-dozen lines down and inserting only a part of the proposed amendment. This is clearly out of order. What the Senator moves, in other words, is the question pending before the Senate, "Shall the bill pass?" On that question a certain amendment is proposed. Then the Senator moves to substitute the bill for the amendment. It is simply turning around the very question which is before the Senate already.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the original bill has been reported to the Senate with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. HOAR. Proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A proposed amendment in the nature of a substitute. That amendment is amendable in the second degree, and the proposition standing by itself is open to amendment. The Chair, therefore, with due deference to the Senator from Massachusetts, is of the opinion that the Senator from South Carolina having proposed an amendment, that amendment is amendable. Either the original bill or the amendment proposed can be amended. The Chair, therefore, thinks the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky is in order.

Mr. HOAR. I think the Chair does not get my point. My point is not that it is not amendable in a degree, but it is not amendable by simply proposing to substitute for it the original bill. The action of the Committee of the Whole, if the Chair will pardon me, has had no effect as yet on the original bill. It is nothing more than a proposition of the Judiciary Committee or any other committee of the Senate. It proposes amendments for the Senate. The bill is pending in the Senate, and the Committee of the Whole has proposed an amendment to it which has got to be acted upon, as the Chair sees. Now, the Senator from Kentucky proposes to substitute for that amendment the original bill in totidem verbis. My proposition is, not that the amendment is not amendable, for I concede that it is, but that it is not in order to move to amend it by precisely the same bill which it is an amendment to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the point of order, and will ask the Senator from Kentucky whether the amendment proposed by him is in the same words as the original bill?

Mr. BECK. I desire to modify the amendment I offered by striking out "five thousand" in line 10, and inserting "three thousand," and striking out "one year" and inserting "six months."

Mr. HOAR. That answers my proposition. I withdraw my point of order on that modification.

Mr. BECK. I am not very sure that the first four words are the same, but I now modify it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BERRY and Mr. BECK called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Chair please state what is the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is substantially the original bill, with slight variations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is enough.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. EDMUNDS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. If he were present, I should vote with immeasurable contempt both against the amendment and the bill itself.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when Mr. SABIN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I am paired with my colleague [Mr. SEWELL]. If present, he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], who is absent on account of illness in his family. If present, he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Beck,	Eustis,	Van Wyck,	Wilson of Iowa,
Berry,	Fair,	Vest,	Wilson of Md.
Blackburn,	George,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Gorman,	Walthall,

Colquitt,	Ingalls,	Morgan,	Vance.
Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Palmer,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to strike out all after the word "member," in the third line, and to insert the words:

Of either House of Congress to accept employment as attorney-at-law, or receive compensation for services rendered, in opposition to the interests of the United States, in any suit, action, or other matter in the result of which the United States is directly or indirectly interested, or in respect of which any question is pending before Congress, or in respect of which such member has reasonable cause to believe legislation by Congress may be asked.

Mr. DAWES. I suppose it would be proper to defend a poor fellow indicted by the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Senator can not have paid proper attention to the reading of the amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I think a trial under indictment would be a "proceeding."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. ALDRICH. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. I do not know which way he would vote, and I do not know which way I should vote myself if at liberty to do so.

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 39; as follows:

YEAS—10.

Aldrich,	Fair,	Jones of Nevada,	Wilson of Md.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That it shall be unlawful for any member of Congress to accept employment as counsel or attorney, or receive payment for services as such counsel or attorney, from any railroad company, or from any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter or any grant of land or pecuniary aid from the United States: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to prevent members of either House of Congress from appearing as counsel in suits by or against such railroad companies in the State or Federal courts, when the United States is not a party or interested in the result of said suits.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to hear the original for which this is a substitute read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert——

Mr. DAWES. I want to know what this is a substitute for.

Mr. BUTLER. That is going to be read now.

Mr. DAWES. Now I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HAMPTON (when Mr. COLQUITT'S name was called). The Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. DAWES (when his name was called). I am paired with the absent Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY]. I do not know how he would vote if present, and I do not know exactly what the question is myself, and I will withhold my vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. SEWELL].

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

The roll-call was concluded and the result announced—yeas 22, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—22.

So the amendment of Mr. BUTLER was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DOLPH. I have an amendment to offer that I understand is acceptable to the Senator from Massachusetts. If the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is now open to amendment before it is voted upon in the Senate, I move to strike out the words I have marked on the print I send to the desk, and I will briefly state my reasons.

The prohibition contained in the last clause proceeds upon the proposition that it would be improper for a member of Congress to accept a retainer from a company when there was legislation pending in Congress or likely to be brought into Congress affecting the company. If that is the case, there is no reason why that should be confined to railroad companies that received pecuniary aid from the Government. It ought to be general.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Oregon will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lines 8 and 9 it is proposed to strike out the words "which obtained its charter, or any grant of land, or pecuniary aid from the United States;" so as to read:

Or from any railroad company, if such member shall have reasonable cause to believe that measures specially affecting the interests of such railroad are pending before Congress or are about to be so pending during his term of office.

Mr. DOLPH. Then I will ask to insert the word "company" instead of "railroad."

Mr. HOAR. I do not know but that I was incautious in saying I would accept that. Many members of the Senate suggest to me that this discussion relates to our relation to the land-grant roads, and it is better to confine the legislation to that subject.

Mr. DOLPH. I am glad of that suggestion. I have maintained my peace through the entire debate, but the bill, as I understand, is on a wrong theory. The words "which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States," embraces every railroad in every public land State. The act of March 3, 1875, grants to every railroad company organized under any State or Territory of the United States a right of way over the public lands of the United States, and the right to take materials from adjacent land for the construction of its road, simply by filing its articles of incorporation and a statement of the organization of the company and a map of its location with the Secretary of the Interior. So then this language embraces every railroad in every public land State of the Union, but excepts every railroad in every other State of the Union. In other words, the Senator from Massachusetts, and the Senator from Vermont, and the Senator from New York, may appear under this bill for every railroad company in their States, for great railroad corporations having an interest in the question of interstate commerce, but the smallest road in any Western State or Territory of the Union is cut out by this provision.

If it is right to say that a member of Congress shall not appear for a railroad company simply because there is legislation pending in regard to it, or there is likely to be such legislation, why does not that principle apply to every railroad company? Is it a sound proposition to say we will confine it to railroad companies that received a right of way from the Government, and will not apply it to other railroad companies that may have some actual positive interest in legislation? The companies which received merely the right of way have no interest in legislation. The country will never undertake to forfeit or to deprive them of the right of way which has been granted under a general act.

No question affecting the right of way can ever come before Congress, and still they are included here, and great railroad companies having great and important interests in other matters of general legislation are excepted. Why is it not a proper thing to say that a member of Congress shall not take a retainer from any railroad company that has a matter pending, like the interstate-commerce bill, in Congress, or when that member supposes there is going to be such a question pending in Congress? That is the reason I offer this amendment. It ought to be broader than it is, but I am seeking to enlarge the scope of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HOAR. I make no objection to it.

Mr. DOLPH. I understand the Senator withdraws his objection, and it may be made by general consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. Now I ask that the word "railroad," in line 11, be changed to "company."

Mr. FRYE and others. No objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that change will be made. The question recurs on the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole as amended.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I do not intend to vote for this bill, and I do not intend to keep the Senate here any length of time while I express my contempt of this proceeding.

I have been a member of the United States Senate seven years, and I think I can appeal to every man who is present in this Chamber to bear me out in the statement I make that a more disgraceful scene has never occurred in the American Senate than I have seen here to-day. I have heard recriminations and condemnations heretofore, but I have never heard anything to compare with what I have heard here to-day—charges not directly made against members of this body, but charges made by innuendo in an unjustifiable manner.

We are told by the Senator from Kentucky that we who are opposed to this class legislation are dishonest.

Mr. BECK. That is not true; I state that distinctly. It is absolutely untrue.

Mr. TELLER. In substance we are told that we want members of the Senate to have their pockets full of the money of the great corporations that come here for legislation; that we want Senators to have that money in their pockets, to corrupt and destroy their judgment.

Mr. President, I have opposed this bill. I have opposed it openly without any personal interest in it. I have opposed it, and I stated on the floor of the Senate that I was not the attorney of any railroad in the world. I stated on the floor of the Senate that I had never been interested for any railroad in any question that could come before Congress, unless the question of interstate commerce might be considered. I have never been the attorney of any railroad touching any matter that has come to Congress concerning their land grants. If I have ever been the attorney of a railroad company I have been the attorney simply for the transaction of an attorney's business in the courts, such as the trial of an assumpsit, or an ejectment, or a trespass case on the part of the railroad company.

The honorable Senator says that what I state is untrue. I do not state that the honorable Senator said in words that we were dishonest. The honorable Senator's statement that this legislation was resisted because some Senators wanted to come into this body having the money in their pockets which was to control their judgment——

Mr. BECK. That is equally untrue. I never said that.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator did not say it, my ears are of but little value, and I could have heard but imperfectly what he said to-day on that subject just before he was replied to by the Senator from Delaware.

No, Mr. President, I do not think it is becoming in any member of this Senate to taunt his associates with a less degree of honesty than he himself has. I for myself claim, as the Senator does, to be in moral worth his peer. He says no man is his superior. I claim that no man on this floor is my superior in that particular. I do not need any legislation to keep me honest.

I do not need any legislation that shall keep me from doing that which the people whom I represent will believe affects my judgment. I rely upon my conscience and my sense of propriety to do that, and I have refrained since I have been a public officer from taking any fees from the class of people who could come here for legislation, not only the railroad companies but all other classes of people who might have legislation here, where it might be said that it might bias my judgment. I have done this for the reason I stated here the other day, that in my judgment it is as essential that the people shall have faith in their representatives as to their honesty as it is that they shall be honest; and I do not propose myself by silence to have anybody say that I am resisting a public demand or a public clamor. I only reply to the Senator from Texas, who says there is a public clamor for this kind of a law, that if there is it is because the people believe that their representatives are dishonest. Where is the remedy? Not in legislation; not in this kind of a movement; for the man who would take a fee from a railroad company for the purpose of doing its business and come into this Senate and be governed by that would take a bribe from that company, and the company would much more readily approach him with a direct bribe than they would in that indirect way.

I alluded the other day to the fact that the attacks made upon this Senate arose mainly from the assaults made in this Chamber, and I repeat it again. The Senator from Kentucky, whether he so intended or not, did arraign the whole opposition to this bill in terms more severe than I have heard used before in this body, and more severe, I think, than the ethics of the body justify. The Senator was perhaps in heat, but the heat goes out to the country. He alluded to the fact that on a former occasion a Senator had said we had juggled with the bill, and we juggled with the bill in such a manner as to make it appear that we were the attorneys of the railroad companies. That goes out to the country. He did not say that when that charge was made it was made against the very men who had been voting in favor of the forfeiting of a railroad grant. He voted as I did upon that occasion, and as a majority of this Senate did, properly as I thought, properly as he thought, and yet he takes occasion to read it here to-day to go out to the country to be a charge against the Senate and against every member of this body who votes against this bill.

I do not propose to be intimidated in this body or anywhere else with reference to my votes. I vote according to my judgment, leaving the responsibility where it belongs, and I am not amenable or answerable to the Senator from Kentucky or anybody else for my vote. As high regard as I have for him I will not yield upon a question of that kind to his judgment or to that of any other man.

Mr. President, the bill has never been called for or demanded. Its introduction here was a mistake, in my judgment. It came in here in a hurry. The Senator has alluded over and over again to the fact that it had 37 votes. It did not have mine; it will not get it now; and if I vote solitary and alone, I will not be here to say that anybody who sits in this Chamber with me needs legislation of this character.

Why, Mr. President, there is not 5 per cent. of the members of this Senate that has ever been the attorneys of land-grant railroads in any shape or manner. There is not 5 per cent. of them, if everything that has been said is true, who are so lacking in moral stamina that a fee in their pockets to do something entirely disconnected with the legislation pending would lead them to vote improperly. And yet the whole Senate is arraigned, not only before the American people, but before the world, as guilty of offenses that would consign a man under the common law of all the States to the penitentiary, and ought to preclude him from all decent society.

It is to be supposed that an American Senator is a gentleman. It is to be supposed that he is a man of moral worth. It is to be supposed that he is a man of intellectual character to some extent at least, and that he does know, too, that he will enforce here the principles of honesty, morality, and justice. And I do not believe there has ever been any cry anywhere by the people, nor even a vague fear, as the Senator from Arkansas said, as to the influence of these corporations upon the lawyers of this Senate. If I believed it, I should no longer regard a seat in this body as the highest acme of American ambition. I should say to every young man everywhere, "Keep within the humbler spheres of life; walk lowly and not in high places," if the American people believe of their chief representatives in the greatest parliament-house in the world that they are a body of conspirators who need a law to hold them to the decencies of life.

Mr. EVARTS. The matter which we are now to vote upon is, I suppose, to take the place of the bill that is to be passed upon and adopted or defeated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It has taken the place. The question is on passing the bill to a third reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute has already been adopted.

Mr. EVARTS. Then the question is on the passage of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. EVARTS. As it now reads, we have departed from the particular occasion or danger of the land-grant, or the incorporated property from the United States, in reference to the interests that were pending or to be pending; and as it now reads it is to provide thus, so far as that is concerned, to accept employment as attorney at law from any railroad company, if such member shall have reasonable cause to fear that measures specially affecting the interests of such company are pending before Congress, or about to be so pending during his term of office.

In a certain sense this amendment does relieve the legislation from the invidious distinction that was made, but it brings us in front of the very question whether we are to pass legislation that does make any discrimination at all when it observes the rules which are universally prevalent in the conscience and in the habit of the members of the Senate.

I desire to point out that by the particular amendment now made we are brought back to a general consideration whether, so far as railroad companies are concerned, we should accept relations with matters in which there is or may be an interest. I should not desire to have the bill carry an implication that members of Congress were at liberty to enter into such relations in regard to banks and other corporations. I now make protest, and I should say all persons must make it, before they vote for such a bill as this.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. BECK. Let it be read first. We do not know what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress to accept employment as attorney-at-law, or payment for services of any kind, in opposition to the United States in any case to which the United States may be a party, or in which its interest may be concerned, or from any railroad company, if such member shall have reasonable cause to believe that measures specially affecting the interests of such company are pending before Congress, or are about to be so pending, during his term of office.

Any person who violates the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be punished by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by fine not exceeding $500, or by both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it intended by the bill as it now stands to change the existing law, which does not now permit, as the Attorney-General of the United States long ago reported to the President, a member of Congress, either a Senator or Representative, to accept a retainer from the United States? The fair implication of it is that it does; and I call attention to it because I have declined a good many retainers in favor of the United States lest I should be under the influence of the Departments, and I want to have it understood that this language, as it clearly does, repeals the law that now makes it improper for me to engage for the United States, and gives me leave to do so. It is the only favorable feature that I see in the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I do not understand, from the Senator's own statement, that it is the law now existing that makes it improper for him to accept retainers from the United States, because he said his only reason for declining a great many was that he should be placed under the influence of the Departments——

Mr. EDMUNDS. That was my motive.

Mr. HOAR. Whether there was a statute or not——

Mr. EDMUNDS. The law provides that no member of Congress shall have any contract——

Mr. HOAR. I thought I had the floor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg the Senator's pardon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. HOAR. I will yield to the Senator with great pleasure.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I thought you were asking me a question.

Mr. HOAR. No, I did not. I thought you sat down. Certainly this bill does not affect, by any possibility of implication, the law which the Senator has alluded to, being a law on the statute-book as expounded by the law officer of the Government, which prohibits taking retainers for the United States. Now comes in a law in addition to the existing law and says you shall not take retainers against it in certain cases not prohibited before.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ought to reply to the Senator from Massachusetts. The present state of the law, aside from the question of prosecuting claims against the United States, and so on, is that no member of Congress shall have any contract with the United States. A great many years ago, and under administrations which were much purer, if I am to suppose that my friend from Kentucky is right, than this one is, and at times when Senators and Representatives were much purer than they are now, if I am to suppose his statement to be correct, a member of Congress was invited by a Department to defend the interests of the United States in a cause pending in the State of Ohio, and the question whether he could be employed was referred to the then Attorney-General of the United States. He reported upon it, and said: "Here is this statute which says that no member of Congress shall be interested in any contract with the United States. Your retainer as an attorney for the United States to prosecute a crime against it in your district is a contract; you can not do it." So it has been followed ever since with one or two exceptions, which were rare. Now we come in with a law which, by implication, as I think, repeals that. I do not object to it, because I am not in favor of this measure at all. It is a disgrace to the Senate, as I think, but the present form really improves, so far as self-interest goes, the status of the bar.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BECK. I desire to have the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill. There is now nothing in the bill that I care about much, but the House of Representatives may put something in it, and I want to give them a chance by sending it to them.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAWES (when his name was called). Understanding that the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY], who is absent, and with whom I am paired, would vote "yea," I shall vote "yea."

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I should vote "yea," but I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I understand from the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] that if his colleague [Mr. VANCE] were here he would vote "yea." I have been paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] throughout the day on this question. I therefore vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PLUMB. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. COKE. My colleague [Mr. MAXEY] is absent and is paired generally with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES]. My colleague would vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. If he were present, he would vote "yea," and I should also vote "yea." I therefore vote.

Mr. MCMILLAN. My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is absent from the city, and is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—39.

Aldrich,	Conger,	Hawley,	Spooner,
Allison,	Cullom,	Hoar,	Van Wyck,
Beck,	Dawes,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vest,
Berry,	Dolph,	Jones of Nevada,	Voorhees,

Camden,	Harris,	Maxey,	Saulsbury,
Chace,	Harrison,	Miller,	Sewell,
Colquitt,	Ingalls,	Morgan,	Vance.
Edmunds,	Jones of Florida,	Platt,

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies in certain cases."

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC SHIP-RAILWAY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the special order.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2288) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 5, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 4, 1887.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D., of Washington city.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

VETO MESSAGE—ALEXANDER FALCONER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill numbered 6443, entitled "An act granting a pension to Alexander Falconer."

This claimant filed his application for pension in 1879, alleging that in 1837, being then an enlisted man in the United States Army, he received a gunshot wound in his right leg below the knee, at the battle of Okeechobee Lake, Florida.

The records disclose the fact that this soldier enlisted in 1834, and was almost continuously in the service and attached to the same company until 1846.

It further appears that he is reported sick during the month in which the battle was fought. The list of casualties does not contain his name among the wounded.

He re-enlisted in 1846 and again in 1847, and was finally discharged in 1848. These latter enlistments were for service in the Mexican war.

His claim for pension was denied in 1885, on the ground that no disability existed in a pensionable degree from the alleged gunshot wound in his leg.

It is perfectly clear that the only pretexts for giving this claimant a pension are military service, old age, and poverty.

Inasmuch as he was a soldier in the Mexican war, his case is undoubtedly provided for by a general law approved within the last few days.

Under this bill the amount to be paid him is fixed, while if the bill herewith returned were approved, the sum to be paid him would depend upon the determination of the Pension Bureau as to the extent of his disability as the result of his wound. As that bureau has quite lately determined that there was no disability it is evident that this old soldier can better rely upon the general law referred to.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 3, 1887.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move that this veto message, with the accompanying bill, be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM LYNCH.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without approval House bill numbered 6132, entitled "An act granting a pension to William Lynch."

The claimant mentioned in this bill enlisted in the Fifth Regiment United States Infantry in 1849, and was discharged after a re-enlistment September 8, 1859.

He filed a claim for pension more than twenty-four years afterward, in April, 1884, claiming that he contracted rheumatism of the right hip and leg in the winter of 1857–'58, while serving in Utah. He admitted that he was not under treatment while in the service, and that he never consulted a physician in regard to his disability until he commenced proceedings for a pension.

The evidence disclosed to me falls far short of establishing this claim for pension upon its merits.

The application made to the Pension Bureau is still pending and awaiting answer to inquiries made by the bureau in January, 1886.

I do not understand that the Congress intends to pass special acts in cases thus situated.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 3, 1887.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move that this message, with the accompanying bill, be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

STATUE OF LIBERTY LIGHT STATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Light-House Board, and recommending the passage of an act providing for a permanent plant for lighting the Statue of Liberty light station, Bedloe's Island, New York; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MILEAGE OF ARMY OFFICERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of War of a deficiency in the appropriation for mileage of officers for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN H. WEEKS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact by that court in the case of John H. Weeks against the United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES G. FIELD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact by that court in the case of James G. Field, administrator, &c., against the United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REFERENCE OF BILLS, ETC.

The SPEAKER laid before the House, under the rules, a bill of the House with Senate amendments, and Senate bills and a concurrent resolution; which were referred as follows, namely:

The bill (H. R. 5097) to regulate the use of the grounds of the Washington National Monument, known as Public Reservation No. 3, in the city of Washington, D. C.—to the Committee on the Public Lands;

The bill (S. 2877) to promote the efficiency of the General Land Office—to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department;

The bill (S. 3157) to authorize the removal of the quarantine station from Ship Island, Mississippi—to the Committee on Commerce;

The bill (S. 2896) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the cities of Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Commerce; and

The concurrent resolution of the Senate providing for the compilation and printing of the veto messages of the Presidents of the United States—to the Committee on Printing.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FLEEGER, for six days, an account of important business.

To Mr. DINGLEY, for the remainder of the week, on account of illness.

To Mr. TOWNSHEND, for ten days.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. TOWNSHEND to print remarks in the RECORD on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9379) for the relief of John Heflebower, and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. SPRINGER and Mr. COWLES demanded the reading of the report.

The report was read at length.

Mr. SPRINGER. I shall have to object to that, for the present at least.

Mr. McCOMAS. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his objection. This case has been before the Court of Claims.

Mr. SPRINGER. I know; but there are certain facts ascertained by the court, and there are items connected with the claim that in my opinion come within the rule heretofore laid down by the committee, and I think it should have a further examination.

Mr. McCOMAS. Let it be considered now, and the gentleman can state his objections to any particular point.

Mr. SPRINGER. I must insist upon the objection at this time.

Mr. BYNUM. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 569) appropriating $45,000 for the improvement of the post-office building in the city of Indianapolis, Ind., and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ELY. I object.

Mr. FELTON. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2428) to grant certain seal rocks to the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, in trust for the people of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. STORM. Let me ask if this has been recommended by any committee of the House?

Mr. FELTON. Yes, sir; by both committees unanimously.

Mr. STORM. By the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. STRAIT. The Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. FELTON. Not by the Committee on Commerce. It has been reported unanimously by both committees, that of the House and of the Senate, on the public lands.

Mr. STORM. What is the extent of the grant?

Mr. FELTON. It is not a grant, but simply gives to the city of San Francisco the control of these islands until the Government chooses to take possession of them.

Mr. OATES. Does it impose any restrictions upon the public with reference to the use of these islands?

Mr. FELTON. None whatever. It simply gives to the city of San Francisco control of the islands, and the Government can take possession of them at any time that it thinks proper for any purpose.

Mr. SPRINGER. Are these the little seal islands right off the mouth of the Golden Gate?

Mr. BLOUNT. Let the report in this case be read before the right to object is waived.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ELY. I object.

GOVERNMENT FARM, ANNAPOLIS, MD.

Mr. FINDLAY. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7508) granting the right of way to the Annapolis and Baltimore Short-Line Railroad Company across the Government farm connected with the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the right of way through the northwest corner of the lands belonging to the United States Government, lying and being in Anne Arundel County, in the State of Maryland, known as the Government farm, be, and hereby is, granted to the Annapolis and Baltimore Short-Line Railroad Company, for the construction of a railroad between the cities of Annapolis and Baltimore, to be located to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy; and the said right of way hereby granted shall be to the extent of 66 feet in width, with such additional width as may be required for slopes at cuttings and embankments, said line to be located northwest of the hospital buildings, and at least 50 feet from the out-buildings thereof.

SEC. 2. That the right of way and other privileges granted herein under the provisions contained in this act shall become inoperative and null and void unless the said company shall, within the term of two years from the 1st day of June, 188-, have so far advanced the construction of said road as to satisfy the Navy Department that said company is lawfully and successfully established, and that said road will be completed as proposed within a reasonable time.

The committee recommend the following amendment:

Insert, after the word "time," in the ninth line of section 2, the following:

And also unless the said railroad company shall cause to be erected and maintained suitable bridges where roads are crossed, and fences erected and maintained on either side of said railroad.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I think some one should state how much of the Government farm this right of way covers.

Mr. FINDLAY. I will say, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois, that it takes but a very small portion, a very insignificant part of the farm, just sufficient width for the road.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. That is sufficient.

Mr. FINDLAY. And I will say, in the first place, that the Government farm is not used, and that this right of way is granted in accordance with the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy; and it also comes as a unanimous report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I observe that there is a blank in the bill which has not been filled.

Mr. FINDLAY. I move to insert, in the fifth line of the printed bill, second section, after the words "eighteen hundred and eighty," the word "eight;" so as to fix the date 1888.

The SPEAKER. The first question will be on the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment of Mr. FINDLAY was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FINDLAY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONSIDERATION OF BILL FOR REDEMPTION OF TRADE-DOLLAR.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to make a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 199) entitled "An act for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar," and that Saturday, February 5, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of the same in the House, no other business to be transacted until the consideration of said bill is concluded.

Mr. RANDALL. Upon that resolution I call for the previous question.

Mr. LANHAM. Before the previous question is ordered I desire to be heard for a moment.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw the call for the previous question that I may hear the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. LANHAM. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he will not so modify the resolution as to allow the bill to be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, furthermore, if he will not agree to postpone its consideration until to-morrow week. I make this request in view of the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], who has gone home in consequence of sickness in his family. I know he takes great interest in this measure, and is especially anxious to be present when it is considered.

Mr. RANDALL. The latter request of the gentleman from Texas, it occurs to me, is a reasonable one, and while I have no authority from the Committee on Rules to accept the amendment, yet my individual inclination is to do so; and if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], members of the Committee on Rules, acquiesce in this suggestion as to the later day, I will accept that amendment.

Mr. MORRISON. I think it is not an unreasonable request, and that it ought to be granted.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I accept the amendment as to the change of day, and will modify the resolution accordingly.

Mr. LANHAM. I know the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures desires that the bill shall be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to include that also in his modification of the resolution.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for the reading of the resolution again. There is no purpose to limit fair debate or to restrict amendments.

Mr. LANHAM. So far as I am concerned and so far as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] is concerned, we are both in favor of redeeming and recoining the trade-dollar. I have heretofore expressed myself as to that in as strong terms as I know how to employ. But there is a minority report, or at least leave was obtained for a minority report to be filed, which differs from the majority of the committee as to the manner of redemption and recoinage, and I think it is better that the bill should be considered in the way I suggest.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I ask that the resolution be again read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is this a privileged matter?

The SPEAKER. It is. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. RANDALL. I have accepted the suggestion that the day assigned for the consideration of the bill be the 12th February instead of the 5th, and I modify the resolution in that way.

Mr. LANHAM. That being agreed to, I move to strike out so much of the resolution as provides for discharging the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not yield for that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the effect of a resolution making the consideration of a bill a special order, unless the contrary is stated in the resolution, is to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and to bring the bill into the House.

Mr. CRISP. Is it competent for a majority to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the consideration of a bill?

The SPEAKER. It is, on a report of the Committee on Rules. It is a change of the rules to that extent; and there is no rule of the House requiring more than a majority to change a rule.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. But the consideration in the House does not cut off the power of amendment? I presume that is not the object.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think the object is to cut off fair debate or amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. I would like to understand what is the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]. I want to know whether he proposes, in addition to postponing the consideration to the 12th, to have the bill considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas and accepted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania was simply to postpone the consideration of the bill till Saturday, the 12th.

Mr. SCOTT. And to have the bill considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas proposed that amendment, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania declined to yield.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question on the resolution as modified.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he will allow me to have printed in the RECORD an amendment substantially embodying the judgment of the minority of the committee, which we propose to offer to the Senate bill?

Mr. RANDALL. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that I am not here as the spokesman of the bill at all. I have merely offered the pending resolution as a member of the Committee on Rules to give an opportunity for the consideration of the bill. After that has been provided for the control of this bill passes from me; but I give assurance, so far as I am concerned, the gentleman will have opportunity of amendment, and that I have no objection to the insertion in the RECORD of the amendment he has indicated.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD the following amendment in the nature of a substitute for the Senate bill, which I send to the desk, and expect to offer at the proper time.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the resolution as modified was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The following is the proposed amendment, which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

Senate bill 199. Amendment.

Strike out all after the enacting clause in sections 1 and 2, and insert:

"That for a period of six months after the passage hereof, United States trade-dollars, if not defaced, mutilated, or stamped, shall be received at their face value in payment of all dues to the United States, and shall not be again paid out or in any other manner issued.

"SEC. 2. That the holder of any such trade-dollars, during the period aforesaid, on presentation of the same at the office of the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States, if said coins be not defaced, mutilated, or stamped, may receive in exchange therefor a like amount and value, dollar for dollar, in standard silver dollars, or in subsidiary coins of the United States, at the option of the holder.

"SEC. 3. That the trade-dollars received by, paid to, or deposited with the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer, or national depositary of the United States, shall not be paid out, or in any other manner issued, but at the expense of the United States shall be transmitted to the coinage mints and recoined into standard silver dollars, or subsidiary coin, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury."

Strike out the words "section 3," in Senate bill, and insert section 4.

WIDOW OF W. R. CRANNA.

Mr. SPRINGER. Regular order.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The report was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 1, 1887.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to the widow of William R. Cranna, deceased, late an employé of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to his salary for six months; and that the Clerk be further directed to pay out of the contingent fund the expenses connected with the illness and funeral of the said Cranna; said expenses not to exceed $250.

The Committee on Accounts, having considered the accompanying resolutions, finds that Cranna was an old employé of the House and was on the roll at the time of his death. The allowance called for is the usual one, and is for the benefit of the widow and children of deceased.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this employé left a widow and young children. They are very poor. This resolution is the usual one in such cases, and as I presume that no discussion is desired, I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN R. M'KINNIE.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, reported favorably a bill (H. R. 11030) for the relief of John R. McKinnie, administrator; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SIMON WITKOUSKI.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported favorably a bill (H. R. 11031) for the relief of Simon Witkouski; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN R. M'DOWELL.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported favorably a bill (H. R. 11032) for the relief of John R. McDowell, administrator of the estate of John McDowell, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

S. H. BRODNAX.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported favorably a bill (H. R. 11033) for the relief of S. H. Brodnax, executor of George T. Taylor; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM H. COOK, SR.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported favorably a bill (H. R. 11034) for the relief of William H. Cook, sr.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ANN MOREAU.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported favorably a bill (H. R. 11035) for the relief of Ann Moreau; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN LOAGUE.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported favorably a bill (H. R. 11036) for the relief of John Loague, administrator; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the House made the bill (H. R. 10666) to provide for the payment of what are known as the 4th of July claims, a special order for this day. Some of the friends of the measure have asked me to agree that it go over till to-morrow immediately after the reading of the journal, with the understanding that it shall then have the same rights and privileges to which it is now entitled. If that agreement can be had I have no objection; and I now ask unanimous consent that the bill be laid over until to-morrow immediately after the reading of the journal, with the understanding that it shall lose none of its rights.

Mr. HATCH. I object.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to move the postponement of the consideration of this bill until to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It is in order. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] makes that request.

Mr. BURROWS. There are only a few Fridays left for private business. This special order was made for this day thoughtlessly, I presume, and if we devote the day to the consideration of this bill it may deprive us entirely of an opportunity to consider private business,

Mr. BRAGG. This is private business.

Mr. BURROWS. I understand; but the business is all in one bundle. I move, Mr. Speaker, to postpone the consideration of this bill until to-morrow morning immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have no objection to that if the gentleman will include in his motion that the bill shall reserve all its rights.

Mr. BLOUNT. It does seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that private bills consume a sufficient proportion of the time of this House. There are important measures of a general character that ought to be acted upon, and I think we ought not to further obstruct their consideration by giving additional time to private matters. There are several important measures which have been reported from committees of the House and are awaiting consideration.

Mr. MILLS. Regular order.

Mr. BURROWS. I demand the previous question on my motion.

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNHAM. If this bill is postponed until to-morrow will the effect be to give us the use of that day as private-bill day?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know. The House may by a majority vote dispense with the consideration of private bills.

Mr. DUNHAM. It is one step in that direction, is it not?

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. BURROWS; and there were—ayes 97, noes 32.

Mr. HATCH. I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Thirty-one have risen in the affirmative, which is more than one-fifth of the last vote. [Cries of "Count the other side!"] There are eighty in the negative. The yeas and nays, therefore, are ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 153, nays 92, not voting 73; as follows:

During the roll-call,

On motion of Mr. BURROWS, by unanimous consent the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following pairs were announced until further notice:

Mr. COX, of New York, with Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana.

Mr. BALLENTINE with Mr. JOHNSON, of New York.

Mr. MAHONEY with Mr. WAKEFIELD.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois, with Mr. NEGLEY.

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. WADE.

Mr. REAGAN with Mr. HISCOCK.

Mr. BACON with Mr. PARKER.

Mr. BLAND with Mr. DAVENPORT.

Mr. ROGERS with Mr. O'DONNELL.

Mr. BENNETT with Mr. PERKINS, until Saturday next.

Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. BRUMM, until Monday next.

Mr. CANDLER with Mr. HANBACK, for this day.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas, with Mr. FULLER, for this day.

Mr. COMSTOCK with Mr. DINGLEY, on this vote.

Mr. ELLSBERRY with Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, on this vote.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. McCREARY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following amendment; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Amend clause 2 of Rule XXIII by striking out the words "whenever a Committee of the Whole House" and insert in lieu thereof the following words, namely:

"A quorum of a Committee of the Whole shall consist of one hundred members, and whenever said committee finds itself;" so it will read:

"A quorum of a Committee of the Whole shall consist of one hundred members; and whenever said committee finds itself without a quorum the chairman shall cause the roll to be called, and thereupon the committee shall rise and the chairman shall report the names of the absentees to the House, which shall be entered on the Journal; but if on such call a quorum shall appear the committee shall thereupon resume its sitting without further order of the House."

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the call of committees for reports.

JACOB SURERENO AND WILLIAM H. BEHRENS.

Mr. LEHLBACH, from the Committee on Patents, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10041) for the relief of Jacob Surereno and William H. Behrens; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN B. WOLF.

Mr. PIDCOCK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9240) granting a pension to John B. Wolf; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

HIRAM A. DARNELL.

Mr. PIDCOCK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back the bill (H. R. 268) for the relief of Hiram A. Darnell; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

DAVID TEED.

Mr. PIDCOCK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back the bill (H. R. 5809) granting a pension to David Teed with an amendment correcting the name from Peed to Teed; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ANNA WRIGHT.

Mr. PIDCOCK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported the bill (S. 2210) granting a pension to Anna Wright; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. PIDCOCK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported adversely the bill (H. R. 7763) granting a pension to Belford E. Davis; which was laid on the table.

JOHN A. RANDALL.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7576) granting a pension to John A. Randall; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 1405) granting a pension to Andrew M. Jordon;
A bill (H. R. 6800) for the relief of Elizabeth J. Ray;
A bill (H. R. 3396) granting a pension to Jacob R. Critten;
A bill (H. R. 7538) granting a pension to Catherine Hofferman;
A bill (H. R. 6127) granting a pension to Robert Ellington; and
A bill (H. R. 5614) for the relief of John D. Jones.

CAPT. FRANK BELL.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 10050) to increase the pension of Capt. Frank Bell; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MARY A. PFEIFFER.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8251) granting a pension to Mary A. Pfeiffer; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF PETER LYLE.

On motion of Mr. SWOPE, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 701) for the relief of the legal representatives of Peter Lyle, deceased; and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

EMANUEL MASON.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 11037) for the relief of Emanuel Mason; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WINDSOR, AND SOUTH WINDSOR, CONN.

Mr. MCKENNA, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 10675) for the relief of the towns of Windsor and South Windsor, on account of damage done to Bissell's Ferry; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

HYLAND C. KIRK AND OTHERS.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the Committee on Claims made a report upon the bill (S. 2560) for the relief of Hyland C. Kirk and others, assignees of Addison C. Fletcher. I desire now to submit the views of the minority of that committee, to be printed, and to accompany the report of the majority.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the views of a minority of the Committee on Claims, submitted at this time by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], will be printed as requested.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

JAMES TRABUE AND OTHERS.

Mr. KLEINER, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (S. 311) for the relief of James Trabue, Thornton Thatcher, Michael Callahan, and the widow of John Waters; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

REAL ESTATE TITLE INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported, as a substitute for the bill (H. R. 3690), a bill (H. R. 11038) changing the name of the Real Estate Title Insurance Company of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bill (H. R. 3690) was, by unanimous consent, laid on the table.

MARY L. WILLIAMS.

Mr. WINANS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8029) granting a pension to Mary L. Williams; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The call of committees is now concluded.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. THROCKMORTON, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to print in the RECORD remarks upon the bill (H. R. 7652) to reduce tariff taxes and to modify the taxes in relation to the collection of the revenue.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4840) to confirm a certain private land claim in the Territory of New Mexico.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that this bill, together with the three bills next on the Calendar—H. R. 218, 3216, and 3235—be passed over informally.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

COLUMBIA BANK IN PENNSYLVANIA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2140) for the relief of the Columbia Bank in Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPRINGER. This bill has been reported from the Committee on War Claims adversely. I move that it be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

JAMES T. JOHNSTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1773) for the relief of James T. Johnston.

The bill and report were read.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman who reported this bill, Mr. MARTIN, of Alabama, if present, I hope will give some further explanation than that embodied in the report. It does not seem very clear from the reading of the report that this party is entitled to an extension.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The gentleman who made the report is not present this morning.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am informed by a member of the Committee on Patents that Mr. MARTIN is not present. I therefore ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside informally, retaining its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LIEUT. LOUIS F. ELLIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the joint resolution (H. Res. 60) granting a medal to Lieut. Louis F. Ellis for heroic conduct in joining the "forlorn-hope storming party" at Port Hudson, June 15, 1863.

Mr. SPRINGER. This, Mr. Chairman, is an adverse report, and I move that the joint resolution be laid aside with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

MEDALS OF HONOR TO CERTAIN PENNSYLVANIA SOLDIERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4235) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare medals of honor to be bestowed upon certain Pennsylvania volunteer soldiers of the late war.

Mr. SOWDEN. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside informally, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. CUTCHEON. This is also an adverse report.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; but the gentleman from Pennsylvania asks that it be passed over informally, retaining its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CLAIMS OF CERTAIN STEAMSHIP COMPANIES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4583) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make final adjustment of claims of certain foreign steamship companies arising from the illegal exaction of tonnage dues.

Mr. BUCHANAN. This bill has been already read in Committee of the Whole, and inasmuch as the amount involved is very considerable and the principle embodied in the bill is of great importance, I will claim the attention of the committee for a short time while I lay before the committee the facts upon which the bill is predicated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey will suspend until the bill is either read or its reading dispensed with by unanimous consent.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. At a former session of the committee.

Mr. NELSON. I would like to have the bill read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to allow and pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the North German Lloyd Steamship Company of Bremen, the Hamburg American Packet Company of Hamburg, and the Norse American Line of Sweden, interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum on such moneys as have been exacted from such companies in contravention of treaty provisions, and heretofore refunded under the act of June 19, 1878; such interest to be computed from the date of the respective payments by such companies up to the time of refunding the same under the act aforesaid: Provided, however, That such interest shall be accepted by said companies, respectively, in full settlement of all claims on account of said moneys exacted from them in contravention of treaty provisions as above stated.

Mr. BUCHANAN. As I was saying, the amount covered by the bill is very considerable, and the principles involved are of importance. I therefore take the liberty of claiming the attention of the committee for a short time, while I lay before them the facts upon which the bill is predicated.

Allow me to say, in the first place, that this bill was before the Committee on Foreign Relations in the Forty-sixth Congress, and also before the same committee in the Forty-eighth Congress, and in each instance reported favorably. It comes here with a favorable report from the Committee on Claims after, as I believe, a full and exhaustive examination. It provides:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to allow and pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the North German Lloyd Steamship Company of Bremen, the Hamburg American Packet Company of Hamburg, and the Norse American line of Sweden, interest at the rate of 5 per centum per annum on such moneys as have been exacted from such companies in contravention of treaty provisions, and heretofore refunded under the act of June 19, 1878; such interest to be computed from the date of the respective payments by such companies up to the time of refunding the same under the act aforesaid: Provided, however, That such interest shall be accepted by said companies, respectively, in full settlement of all claims on account of said moneys exacted from them in contravention of treaty provisions as above stated.

For thirty years prior to July, 1862, no tonnage duties were levied by the United States Government upon vessels of foreign countries entering our ports. At that time the United States Government, being in sore need of funds, authorized the imposition of a tonnage act. When the act imposing such duties went into operation the Secretary of the Treasury did not first examine and ascertain what countries were exempt by treaty stipulations from the imposition of tonnage taxes upon their ships, but exacted it upon the tonnage of, I believe, all nations whose vessels entered our ports. It is true that the bill contained the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be deemed in any wise to impair any rights and privileges which have been or may be acquired by any foreign nation under the laws and treaties of the United States relative to the duty on tonnage of vessels.

But, as I have said, no inquiry was made as to what tonnage was exempt, and it was levied upon all. Among the lines upon which it was levied were those named in this bill.

Under that imposition, Mr. Chairman, the North German Lloyd Steamship Company paid, at the ports of New York, Baltimore, and New Orleans, as a tonnage tax upon vessels of their lines entering these ports, the sum of $130,785; and the Hamburg-American Packet Company also paid the sum of $130,119, and the Swedish line a much smaller sum. Now the fact was that at the time of the imposition of this tonnage tax and its collection by our Government, by treaty stipulations with the countries owning these lines, that tonnage was exempt from taxation at our hands. But the money was collected by this Government and was turned into the Treasury. The matter thus continued for some time, until the countries in question called the attention of our Government to the fact that their shipping was exempt from the imposition of these duties, when this Government discontinued the collection of the tax.

June 19, 1878, Congress passed an act refunding this tax to these companies. During the consideration of that bill in the Senate, Mr. MORRILL, chairman of the Committee on Finance, addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, under date of April 8, 1878, submitting to him, among others, the following inquiry:

Again let me ask you whether, if nothing is said in the act as to the payment of interest, you would pay any?

To this the Secretary replied as follows, under date of April 15, 1878:

You further inquire whether if nothing be said in the act about payment of interest this Department would pay interest on the amounts originally exacted. I reply that the question whether interest should be paid on the original claims would depend on the obligations of the Government under the treaty stipulations referred to, as such stipulations are ordinarily construed by the law of nations.

I repeat the last phrase:

As such stipulations are ordinarily construed by the law of nations.

Thereupon the bill was passed. After the bill became a law the then Secretary of the Treasury referred the matter to the Attorney-General of the United States for his opinion: Whether, under the wording of the act, it was the duty of the Treasury Department under that act to allow the interest as well as the principal upon these claims.

To this inquiry the Attorney-General made this reply:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, July 19, 1878.

SIR: In addition to questions submitted relating to claims by citizens of the Hanseatic republics and subjects of Norway and Sweden for repayment of tonnage tax under the act of June 19, 1878, your letter of the 15th instant inquires whether by virtue of the stipulations of the treaties upon which the claims in question were based, claims for interest on the sums exacted as tonnage tax in contravention of treaty provisions from steamers of the Norse American Line and of the North German Lloyds Line should be paid by the United States, and if such claims for interest are valid and payable whether the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized under the provisions of the act of June 19, 1878, to refund interest on the amounts of tonnage tax so exacted by the United States in contravention of treaty stipulations of the steamers of the lines mentioned.

Provision for the payment of these claims is specific, namely, section 3012 of the Revised Statutes. The question whether interest is payable upon these claims is involved in the question whether such would be the usual course of administration under that section. I understand that interest is not payable, according to the ordinary course of administration, upon the refunding of duties by authority of that section which have been improperly collected. This seems to be a correct construction of the statute as a matter of law, and it being the only practical question involved in the letter, I respectfully reply that the Secretary of the Treasury is not authorized to refund interest in amounts of tonnage tax enacted by the United States in contravention of treaty stipulations.

Whether or not interest should be allowed as a matter of international justice and propriety upon these claims is not a question upon which it is necessary for me to express any opinion. If such claim exists, it must be made to Congress. The only inquiry I have to answer is purely a domestic one, namely, as to the administration of the law as it at present exists.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. DEVENS, Attorney-General.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Secretary of the Treasury.

As a result of the opinion of the Attorney-General the Secretary of the Treasury declined under this act to allow interest upon these claims. The claims were presented to the Secretary of the Treasury, with interest added at 6 per cent., amounting, in the case of the North German Lloyd Company, to $80,737.50 to August 8, 1878, and the Hamburg Packet Company, to $75,069.27 to July 1, 1878; but as I have said, under the opinion of the Attorney-General, the Secretary of the Treasury refused to allow that portion which was for interest, and the companies accepted the principal, but accepted it under protest. That it was accepted under protest is evident from a letter of Hon. William M. Evarts, then Secretary of State, to Hon. John Sherman, then Secretary of the Treasury, under date of January 31, 1879, in which he says, referring to a communication of the German minister:

The protests referred to therein are already in the possession of the Treasury Department.

That these protests were filed there can be no question.

Thereupon the German minister addressed to Hon. William M. Evarts, Secretary of State, under date of January 5, 1879, a communication calling his attention to the facts that I have recited, and again communicating to him the claim of these steamship companies for interest, together with memoranda of the separate payments of the tax upon which such claims for interest arose, and requested that interest should be paid upon those claims. The Government officials, of course acting upon the interpretation by the Attorney-General, felt themselves without power to allow this claim for interest, and thereupon these companies appealed to Congress for relief, losing no time, but coming at once and presenting their claim, the matter being transmitted to this House by Hon. John Sherman, Secretary of the Treasury, under cover of February 8, 1879.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have my facts arranged in consecutive order and I will try to state them all. If after I am through I have left anything unexplained I will be only too happy to answer any interrogatory.

The result of the appeal to Congress was, as I have stated, in each instance a favorable report by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The bill was again introduced into the present House, was examined by the Committee on Claims, as I have stated, and is reported here for examination and action by the Committee of the Whole.

In addition to what I have stated, I hold in my hands a copy of a letter addressed by the German minister to the Secretary of State, under the date of February 16, 1886, and which copy comes to me from the Department of State under cover of a communication of March 3, 1886, from that Department. This letter I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Translation.]

IMPERIAL GERMAN LEGATION,
Washington, February 16, 1886.

Mr. Secretary of State:

In obedience to instructions received from the Imperial Government, I have the honor most respectfully to ask your kind consideration in the following matter:

As you are probably aware, Mr. Secretary of State, from previous negotiations of my predecessor, Mr. Von Schlozer, with the Department of State of the United States, certain German navigation companies, namely: The North German Lloyd of Bremen, the Hamburg American Packet Stock Company, and the Adler Line, which has since been incorporated with the latter, have had refunded to them by a resolution of Congress, dated June 19, 1878, the sums of $130,785.64, $130,119.80, and $8,253.18, which sums had been collected from them as a so-called tonnage tax, in violation of the provisions of the law of December 31, 1862. The said collection was consequently illegal. This restitution, as may be seen by the proceedings of Congress at that time (Report 124, part 2, H. R. Forty-fifth Congress, second session), "refunding tonnage tax," was provided for, on the ground of the treaty concluded in the year 1827 between the United States and the Hanseatic republics, and of the most favored nation clause of said treaty, because Belgium, by her treaty with the United States concluded in 1858, had secured exemption from the tonnage tax for her steamers entering the ports of the United States.

This decision of Congress was adopted in pursuance of the unanimous opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States, of the Secretary of State, and of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the companies interested thought, when they received the moneys refunded to them, that they had a right to expect that interest thereon for the period of thirteen years would be paid them, as is usual in such cases, and as had repeatedly been asked for and obtained by the United States. They were, however, informed, in reply to their representations, that, in the opinion of the disbursing officers of the Treasury Department, the act of June 19, 1878, could, in strictness, be construed as providing for the payment of the principal only.

The Bremen and Hamburg companies thereupon received the payments under protest, declaring through their representatives that they could not forego the payment of the interest, as the tax had been collected on the basis of special instructions from the Secretary of the Treasury, who must have known that its collection was contrary to existing treaties.

Since that time the companies have repeatedly endeavored to obtain the aforesaid interest, without getting a settlement of their claims, although a report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the Forty-eighth Congress (Report of Mr. Eaton, H. R. No. 1568) had expressly declared in favor of the justice of the same, adducing in addition to numerous other precedents the presentation of the "Alabama claims," in which case the American side had insisted from the commencement upon the payment of interest.

The Imperial Government having fully informed itself of the situation of this case, I have been authorized and I have the honor, Mr. Secretary of State, to appeal to your kind mediation, so that the said affair may again be submitted to the consideration of the competent authorities.

Requesting you to kindly inform me of the results of your endeavors, I avail myself of this occasion to renew to you the assurances of my distinguished consideration.

H. v. ALVENSLEBEN.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have also here a copy of a letter from the Treasury Department, of March 4, 1886, forwarded under cover of a communication of the following day from the Secretary of State; and I will ask the Clerk to read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 4, 1886.

The honorable the Secretary of State:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 3d instant submitting for the consideration of this Department a translation of a note under date of the 16th ultimo, from the Minister of Germany at this capital, in relation to the claim of certain German steamship companies for the payment of interest on certain moneys which were exacted from said companies in contravention of treaty provisions, and heretofore refunded to them under the act of July 19, 1878.

You request the views of this Department as to the justice of the claims of the German steamship companies.

I have the honor to reply that the companies referred to in the note of the German Minister are, the North German Lloyd, the Hamburg American Packet Company, and the Eagle Line. The amounts paid to these several companies will be found tabulated in the Senate Executive Document No. 30, of the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress, a copy of which was transmitted to the Department of State in a communication from this Department of the 16th of January last, relating to claims for repayment of tonnage duties on French vessels.

I would say in this connection that a special claim for the refund of the tonnage tax paid on a steamship of the Lloyd line, with interest, was presented this Department in 1875, and was rejected solely on the ground of a lack of protest and appeal, and not on the ground that it was not a just claim. In January, 1873, these German steamships were declared exempt by order of this Department from payment of tonnage dues on account of the exaction of such dues being in contravention of treaty stipulations. The sheer inability of this Department to refund tonnage dues illegally exacted in the absence of a proper protest and appeal, led to the passage of the act of July 19, 1878. The justice of the claim to the original sum never was disputed or doubted by this Department. In a communication of the Secretary of the Treasury to the chairman of the Committee on Finance of the Senate under date of April 15, 1878, it was declared that the money (the tonnage exactions), of which refund is demanded, was taken in violation of law and in contravention of "treaty stipulations."

Congress admitted the justice of the original claims by the passage of the act of July 19, 1878. In the letter of this Department above referred to it was said, in response to the question whether interest could be paid on the original claims, that that would depend upon the obligations of this Government under its treaty stipulations with the Hanseatic towns, "as such stipulations are ordinarily construed by the law of nations." It is not for this Department to decide what usage may require in this class of cases; but it is known that this Government demanded interest in the settlement of the Alabama claims and has paid interest on claims of foreign governments when such claims had no basis in justice more clearly evident than those of these German companies. The original moneys were taken and have been long held from the original claimants, simply because the power of this Department to cut off interest was so restricted by the law requiring protest and appeal. The refusal to pay interest in cases of this character might be a detrimental precedent should claims of a similar character arise or be discovered where this Government might be claimant.

Respectfully yours,

C. S. FAIRCHILD,
Acting Secretary.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The committee will notice that in this communication from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury it is expressly stated (and in fact Congress had already adjudged that question by the passage of the refunding act alluded to) that this money was taken in direct contravention of treaty obligations; and he also calls attention to the fact that in similar cases the United States has required not only the refunding of the money but also the interest which had accrued; and he also calls attention to the fact that the refusal to pay interest in cases of this character might be a detrimental precedent for this country in cases arising hereafter. In addition to that I desire to call the attention of the committee to the language of the President of the United States in his last annual message transmitted to Congress. In that message he uses these words:

The claims for interest upon the amount of tonnage dues illegally exacted from certain German steamship lines were favorably reported in both Houses of Congress at the last session, and I trust will receive final and favorable action at an early day.

These claims referred to, and spoken of as having been favorably reported in both Houses at the last session, are the claims embraced in this bill.

It is a fact that before this message was transmitted there had been demands made by the German Government upon our Government for the payment of this interest, and the recommendation is strictly in the line of international comity.

These are the facts in the case as ascertained by your committee, to whom you delegated authority to investigate the matter, and I can best sum them up in the terse words of the gentleman who made the report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the Forty-eighth Congress. He says:

From the facts in the case it appears:

1. The United States, by the treaty of 1827 with the Hanseatic republics, engaged not to grant any particular favor to any other nation in respect of commerce and navigation that should not immediately become common to those republics.

2. That by the treaty of 1858 with Belgium the steamships of that country were exempt from payment of tonnage duties in ports of the United States.

3. That by operation of these treaties taken together, the steamships of the Hanseatic ports were also exempt so long as both treaties should remain in force.

4. That, notwithstanding such exemption by treaty and the proviso in the act of 1862 that "nothing in this act contained shall be deemed in any wise to impair any rights or privileges which have been or may be acquired by any foreign nation under the laws and treaties of the United States relative to duty on tonnage of vessels," nevertheless these provisions were totally disregarded by the United States officers, and large sums of money were exacted from companies thus exempt.

5. That such exactions were made in contravention of the treaty stipulations of the United States has been decided by the Attorney-General, by the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of the Treasury, and, lastly, determined by Congress by the act of June 19, 1878, under construction of which the precise sum exacted has been refunded, and no more (although claim was made as for interest), the United States having the uninterrupted use of such moneys for a period varying from three to fifteen years.

6. That such refund was taken under protest, with a distinct declaration on part of claimants that claims for interest would be urged before Congress.

Another fact should be taken into consideration in connection with this case. That is, that during all this time when our Government, in violation of these treaty obligations, was collecting a tonnage tax from the vessels of the German Government, Germany was allowing our vessels to enter her ports without the imposition of a tonnage tax.

Mr. MORROW. I would like to ask the gentleman what evidence he has that the German Government was not exacting a similar tax from our ships at that time? I do not find it in the report.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I did not embody all the evidence in the report. If I had done so, the document would have been too voluminous. That is not the practice. But I can assure the gentleman that the fact is as I have stated.

It has been said that the United States Government never pays interest because it is to be presumed that it is always ready to pay its debts. If any one will serve for a session of Congress upon the Committee on Claims he will be very likely to discover that in some instances at least, that is a very violent presumption. But, however that may be, the proposition does not apply here, because in this case a demand for a refund was made, and the Government of the United States did not comply with that demand, but utterly neglected to do so. Again, whatever may be the rule between the Government and its citizens, this is a case between this Government and the governments of other countries—because those governments have made the case their own. Now, what is the rule of international law upon this subject? I will detain the committee but a few moments while I read one or two authorities upon that point. In Wheaton on International Law, page 341, it is laid down that—

If a nation has taken possession of that which belongs to another [as we did], and if it refuses to pay a debt [as we did] to repair an injury or to give adequate satisfaction for it, the latter may seize something of the former and apply it to its advantage until it obtains payment of what is due, with interest and damages.

And the rule is laid down by Rutherford in these terms:

In estimating the damages which any one has sustained, if such things as he has a perfect right to are unjustly taken from him or withholden or intercepted, we are to consider not only the value of the thing itself, but the value likewise of the fruits or profits that might have arisen from it.

I have other citations which I will not detain the committee by reading. This claim arises by reason of the operation of a treaty. Mr. Webster, in speaking of a certain treaty, says:

This compact between nations, this treaty, is to be construed and interpreted throughout its whole length and breadth, in its general provisions and in all its details, in every phrase, sentence, word, and syllable in it, by the settled rules of the law of nations.

And I here say that there can be no question that, according to the settled rules of the law of nations, the precedents are in favor of the allowance of interest on a claim like this. We have established precedents ourselves in this respect; and again I will quote from the report:

The practice of the United States in discharging obligations resulting from treaty stipulations has always been in accord with these well-established principles. It has exacted the payment of interest from other nations in all cases where the obligation to make payment resulted from treaty stipulations, and it has acknowledged that obligation in all cases where a like liability was imposed upon it.

The most important and leading cases which have occurred are those which arose between this country and Great Britain—the first under the treaty of 1794, and the other under the first article of the treaty of Ghent. In the latter case the United States claimed compensation for slaves and other property taken away from the country by the British forces at the close of the war in 1815. A difference arose between the two Governments, which was submitted to the arbitrament of the Emperor of Russia, who decided that "the United States of America are entitled to a just indemnification from Great Britain for all private property carried away by the British forces." A joint commission was appointed for the purpose of hearing the claims of individuals under this decision.

At an early stage of the proceedings the question arose as to whether interest was a part of that "just indemnification" which the decision of the Emperor of Russia contemplated. The British commissioner denied the obligation to pay interest. The American commissioner, Langdon Cheves, insisted upon its allowance, and, in the course of his argument upon this question, said:

"Indemnification means a reimbursement of a loss sustained. If the property taken away on the 17th of February, 1815, were returned now uninjured, it would not reimburse the loss sustained by the taking away and consequent detention; it would not be an indemnification. The claimant would still be unindemnified for the loss of the use of his property for ten years, which, considered as money, is nearly equivalent to the original value of the principal thing."

Again, he says:

"If interest be an incident usually attendant on the delay of payment of debts, damages are equally an incident attendant on the withholding an article of property."

In consequence of this disagreement, the commission was broken up; but the claims were subsequently compromised by the payment of $1,204,960, instead of $1,250,000, as claimed by Mr. Cheves; and of the sum paid by Great Britain, $418,000 was expressly for interest.

The propriety of this claim for interest was subsequently submitted to William Wirt, then Attorney-General, for his opinion. Mr. Wirt said:

"I am of the opinion that the just indemnification awarded by the emperor involves not merely the return of the value of the specific property, but a compensation also for the subsequent use and wrongful detention of it in the nature of damages. * * * I am of opinion that the interest, according to the usage of nations, is a necessary part of the just indemnification awarded by the Emperor of Russia." (Opinions Attorneys-General, vol. 2, p. 33.)

An earlier case, in which this principle of interest was involved, arose under the treaty of 1794 between the United States and Great Britain, in which there was a stipulation on the part of the British Government in relation to certain losses and damages sustained by American merchants and other citizens by reason of the illegal or irregular capture of their vessels or other property by British cruisers; and the seventh article provided in substance that "full and complete compensation for the same will be made by the British Government to said claimants."

A joint commission was instituted under this treaty, which sat in London, and by which these claims were adjudicated. Mr. Pinckney and Mr. Gore were commissioners on the part of the United States and Dr. Nicholl and Dr. Swabey on the part of Great Britain; and it is believed that in all instances this commission allowed interest as a part of the damage. In the case of "The Betsey," one of the cases which came before the board, Dr. Nicholl stated the rule of compensation as follows:

"To reimburse the claimants the original cost of their property, and all the expenses they have actually incurred, together with interest on the whole amount, would, I think, be a just and adequate compensation. This, I believe, is the measure of compensation usually made by all belligerent nations, and accepted by all neutral nations, for losses, costs, and damages occasioned by illegal capture." (Vide Wheaton's Life of Pinckney, page 198; also page 205; note, page 371.)

By reference to the American State Papers (Foreign Relations, volume 2, pages 119, 120) it will be seen by a report of the Secretary of State of the 16th of February, 1798, laid before the House of Representatives, that interest was awarded and paid on such of these claims as had been submitted to the award of Sir William Scott and Sir John Nicholl, as it was in all cases by the board of commissioners. In consequence of some difference of opinion between the members of this commission, their proceedings were suspended until 1802, when a convention was concluded between the two Governments, and the commission reassembled, and then a question arose as to the allowance of interest on the claims during the suspension. This the American commissioners claimed, and though it was at first resisted by the British commissioners, yet it was finally yielded, and interest was allowed and paid. (See Mr. King's three letters to the Secretary of State, of 25th March, 1803, 23d April, 1803, and 30th April, 1803, American State Papers, Foreign Relations, volume 2, pages 387, 388.)

Another case in which this principle was involved arose under the treaty of the 27th October, 1795, with Spain, by the twenty-first article of which, "in order to terminate all differences on account of the losses sustained by citizens of the United States in consequence of their vessels and cargoes having been taken by the subjects of His Catholic Majesty during the late war between Spain and France, it is agreed that all such cases shall be referred to the final decision of commissioners, to be appointed in the following manner," &c. The commissioners were to be chosen, one by the United States, one by Spain, and the two were to choose a third, and the award of the commissioners, or any two of them, was to be final, and the Spanish Government to pay the amount in specie.

This commission awarded interest as part of the damages. (See American State Papers, volume 2, Foreign Relations, page 283.)

So, in the case of claims of American citizens against Brazil, settled by Mr. Tudor, United States minister, interest was claimed and allowed. (See House Executive Document No. 32, first session Twenty-fifth Congress, page 249.)

Again, in the convention with Mexico of the 11th of April, 1839, by which provision was made by Mexico for the payment of claims of American citizens for injuries to persons and property by the Mexican authorities, a mixed commission was provided for, and this commission allowed interest in all cases. (House Executive Document No. 291, Twenty-seventh Congress, second session.)

So, also, under the treaty with Mexico of February 2, 1848, the board of commissioners for the adjustment of claims under that treaty allowed interest in all cases from the origin of the claim until the day when the commission expired.

So, also, under the convention with Colombia, concluded February 10, 1864, the commission for the adjudication of claims under that treaty allowed interest in all cases as a part of the indemnity.

So, under the recent convention with Venezuela, the United States exacted interest upon the awards of the commission, from the date of the adjournment of the commission until the payment of the awards.

The recent mixed American and Mexican commission allowed interest in all cases from the origin of the claim, and the awards were paid with interest.

The distinguished tribunal at Geneva, under the treaty of Washington, allowed interest on the claims of the United States against Great Britain as being "just and reasonable."

In discussing the measure for determining damages to be awarded against Great Britain by the tribunal at Geneva, the eminent counsel of the United States, Mr. EVARTS, Mr. Cushing, and Mr. Waite, contended as follows:

"The counsel assume that interest will be awarded by the tribunal as an element of the damage. We conceive this to be conformable to public law and to be required by paramount considerations of equity and justice."

The counsel thereupon cited the then recent decision by Sir Edward Thornton, the British minister at Washington, as umpire of a claim on part of the United States against Brazil, which held that the claimants were entitled to interest by the same right that entitled them to reparation—the interest allowed being $45,077, nearly half the total award of $100,740. The counsel for the United States further relied upon the awards under the treaty of Ghent and the Jay treaty, herein elsewhere referred to, as marked precedents for the allowance of interest.

The counsel on behalf of Great Britain, while objecting to the principle urged by the United States as not being applicable to unliquidated claims, nevertheless admitted its reason or justice as to liquidated or ascertained claims in the following words:

"Interest, in the proper sense of that word, can only be allowed where there is a principal debt of liquidated and ascertained amount detained and withheld by the debtor from the creditor after the time when it was absolutely due and ought to have been paid, the fault of the delay in payment resting with the debtor, or where the debtor has wrongfully taken possession of and exercised dominion over the property of a creditor. In the former case, from the time when the debt ought to have been paid, the debtor has had the use of the creditor's money and may justly be presumed to have employed it for his own profit and advantage. He has thus made a gain corresponding with the loss which the creditor has sustained by being deprived, during the same period of time, of the use of his money, and it is evidently just that he should account to the creditor for the interest, which the law takes as the measure of this reciprocal gain and loss. In the latter case, the principal is exactly the same; it is ordinarily to be presumed that the person who has wrongfully taken possession of the property of another has enjoyed the fruits of it; and if instead of this he has destroyed it, or kept it unproductive, it is still just to hold him responsible for interest on its value, because his own acts, after the time when he assumed control over it, are the causes why it has remained unfruitful. In all these cases it is the actual or virtual possession of the money or property belonging to another which is the foundation of the liability of interest. The person liable is either lucratus by the detention of what is not his own, or is justly accountable as if it were so."

And in pursuance of the principles thus asserted, the exalted tribunal at Geneva allowed interest on the demands of the United States against Great Britain, in the following words:

"And whereas it is just and reasonable to allow interest at a reasonable rate." (See decision and award of the arbitrators.)

In Judge Hale's report of November, 1873, to the Secretary of State, of claims before the American British mixed commission under article 12 of the treaty of 8th of May, 1871, he says:

"The commission ordinarily allowed interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the injury to the anticipated date of the final award." (Executive Document, part 1, first session Forty-third Congress. Part 2, Foreign Affairs, p. 21.)

It can hardly be necessary to pursue these precedents further. They sufficiently and clearly show the practice of the Government of the United States with foreign nations or with claimants under treaties.

Nor has the recovery of interest as against foreign powers depended upon arbitration or joint commissions for recognition of the principle. Such claims for interest have been directly and successfully urged by the diplomatic representatives of the United States as a matter of right under principles of established international law.

The cases are innumerable where claims have been enforced in behalf of citizens of the United States against foreign governments, with interest, and where, too, the damages were unliquidated, and rested even in tort. These cases may be found stated at length in Senate Executive Document No. 18, second session Thirty-fifth Congress. But confining ourselves rigidly to precedents established by the Government of the United States, like case now presented, we find numerous instances.

The United States presented a claim against Portugal for loss by seizure in 1829, at Lisbon, of specie belonging to James Hall and J. Shepherd, citizens of the former government, which was being shipped contrary to law. Restitution was subsequently made, $17,741.98 being allowed to the United States, of which sum $7,652.98 was expressly allowed as interest.

Claims asserted against Mexico in behalf of Jonas P. Levy for illegal duties exacted in 1843-'46, where $3,675 was recovered, including interest. Case of William B. Hatch for overcharge of tonnage duties, where $277.65 was recovered, with interest.

The case against Brazil of William W. Harper, administrator, for fine paid custom-house at Maranham, interest, &c., where $1,130.40 was recovered. The case of John Devereux, for anchorage and tonnage dues unlawfully imposed on the bark Globe, where, including interest, $196.99 was recovered.

The case of Foster & Elliott, for fine exacted on ship Louisiana, at Rio, in January, 1835, where $577.94 was recovered, including interest. The case of Francis A. Gray, for illegal exaction of fine at Rio in same year, where $1,453.94 was recovered, including interest. The case of Hyman Gratz, president of Pennsylvania Insurance Company, for interest (only) on customs duty illegally exacted and previously refunded by Brazilian Government, $506.65 was allowed and recovered.

The United States claimed certain indemnity from the Government of Brazil in the matter of the brig Caroline, which was paid. Subsequently, on review by this Government, the conclusion was reached that the money had been unjustly demanded and received, and in a letter of Secretary Fish to Señor de Barros, of the Brazilian legation, dated Department of State, June 26, 1874, he says:

"I now have the honor to inform you that the President, after a careful examination of the case, has come to the conclusion that the Government of Brazil is not justly responsible for the damages in this case. It is understood that the Government of His Majesty the Emperor of Brazil is of the same opinion respecting it. Under these circumstances the President regards it as the duty of the United States to repay to Brazil the amount thus received by their minister at Rio, with interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum. * * * "

Here the sum of $96,405.73 was accordingly paid, covering the amount originally exacted with 6 per cent. interest thereon, as being a just reparation for moneys wrongfully exacted from a foreign power. (See Foreign Relations United States, second session Forty-third Congress, No. 63, page 95.)

It will thus be seen that no principle is now urged that has not hitherto been repeatedly and successfully enforced by the United States in behalf of its own citizens against foreign Governments.

As to legislative precedents for the payment of interest between this Government and its subjects, I will say in passing I have here a list of one hundred and fifty-two acts of Congress, commencing in 1789, by which such claims have been allowed.

In dealing with this matter we must remember that we are setting a precedent which will be applied in the future to ourselves and our claims against other nations. If we refuse to pay this claim we establish a precedent which in the complications liable in the future to come to all nations may return to plague us.

To sum up what I have to say on this case I again use the words of the report:

The obligations of the United States, construed as they must be in this instance by rules and precedents of an international character, are not and can not be properly discharged without the payment of interest on these claims. This Government must and should uncomplainingly submit to the administration of such rules of international law as it has aided to establish for the determination of rights between itself and other powers. It could not now with propriety and for the purpose of a temporary and pecuniary gain ask other nations to change a rule to which it has long and consistently adhered and by which its citizens have hitherto been repeatedly benefited. As we have said before, the question is one of the highest national importance, as it involves a consideration of national honor, and its determination will sanction a principle to which the United States will henceforth stand committed in the enforcement of its own demands against foreign powers.

Now, if any gentleman wishes to propound any inquiry I will gladly afford any information which I have not already given and which it is in my power to afford. If not, I will ask that the Committee of the Whole adopt the amendment, which I ask the Clerk now to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4, after the word "pay," insert "to the German minister duly accredited to this Government;" and in line 5, after the word "appropriated," insert "to be by him paid;" so as to read:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to allow and pay to the German minister duly accredited to this Government, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be by him paid to the North German Lloyd Steamship Company," &c.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The sole effect of this amendment is to make these moneys payable by the United States to the German minister. This becomes necessary inasmuch as the German Government has taken this matter in hand.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. The object is to enable that Government to make just distribution of the fund.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is to be paid to the German minister, to be by him applied in discharge of these claims; and the bill provides that this money shall be accepted in satisfaction of all claims under these treaties. Unless some gentleman desires further information, I move the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I desire to make an inquiry. At the time of the payment of the principal some years ago was there not embraced in the receipt a provision similar to that now embraced in this bill that the payment should be in full of all claims?

Mr. BUCHANAN. On the contrary, according to the information of the committee—and there can be no dispute about the fact—that payment was accepted under protest.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. One other question. From the gentleman's remarks (to which I listened attentively, though sitting at a distance from him) I did not learn when these dues were collected from these steamship companies—in what year?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Beginning in 1862 and ending in 1875—possibly a little later.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. These payments were assumed by our Government to be due under the law at the time they were collected, were they not?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have already stated that the law which directed the imposition of these tonnage duties provided expressly that such imposition should not be in violation of treaty obligations. The dues were levied under that law, whereas it was afterward discovered that they were in violation of treaty obligations.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Will the gentleman state what adjudication there has been under the law or under the treaty?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Congress, by the refunding act of 1878, passed upon the question and directed the Secretary of the Treasury to refund that amount which he found to have been collected in violation of treaty obligations. Under that act he refunded the principal.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And now this is for the interest. How much does this amount to?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Something over $200,000.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. At what rate of interest?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Five per cent. And we must remember that these duties were paid in gold at a time when there was a high premium upon gold; and when they were repaid there was no premium on gold.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That has nothing to do with the question. Gold was gold.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I know it was; and very hard to get.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That does not enter into the question at all. I was about to ask the gentleman further why 5 per cent. is taken as the rate of interest rather than 4 per cent. or any other rate? What particular reason is there for adopting 5 per cent.?

Mr. GUENTHER. Is not the rate our Government always insists upon from other governments 5 per cent.?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Gentlemen ask why 5 per cent. instead of 4? It is taken instead of the usual rate of 6.

A MEMBER. The usual rate between nations is 6, is it not?

Mr. GUENTHER. No; it is 5.

Mr. BLANCHARD. What was the amount of the principal originally returned to these people?

Mr. BUCHANAN. From one steamship a little over $16,000, from another steamship a little over $17,000, and from another steamship a little over $18,000. I can not give the aggregate amount. One line aggregates $130,800; another line, $130,119. I can not give the exact figures, but am nearly accurate.

Mr. BLANCHARD. This bill carries $200,000, about?

Mr. BUCHANAN. This bill carries nothing. It provides simply that the Secretary of the Treasury shall ascertain when these payments were made and compute the interest upon them and return it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Allow me to ask you how the interest is computed?

Mr. BUCHANAN. At the rate of 5 per cent.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Five per cent. from date, compounded?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I believe it is neither the rule of nations nor of individuals to compound. No compounding is provided for.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not know what the rule is.

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; but it has to be done under the Secretary of the Treasury, in whom, perhaps, the gentleman has more faith than he has in the Committee.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I would have more if I knew what the rule is. It is simple interest, I presume.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is left to the Secretary of the Treasury to compute interest, and the committee had faith enough in him to believe he would compute the interest properly. He certainly will not compound it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Without prescribing any rules to him?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly not. He knows how to compute.

Mr. RICE. I wish to ask the gentleman from New Jersey this question, whether this is not interest on money that was paid contrary to treaty by these steamship companies during the war, when interest was at a higher rate than 5 per cent., and when the Government had to pay more than 5?

Mr. NELSON. It paid 6.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; the Government paid more than 5 per cent.

Mr. RICE. So the interest is to cover years back, and not for the present?

Mr. BUCHANAN. As I have already stated, this began in 1862.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Let me inquire whether it is not a fact that in considering the matter in committee we took what was less than the average interest prevailing at the time?

Mr. BUCHANAN. We did. We erred, if we erred at all, in favor of the United States.

Mr. McMILLIN. Allow me to ask a question.

Mr. BUCHANAN. With pleasure.

Mr. McMILLIN. If I understand this bill correctly, it provides for interest, and for interest only?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It does.

Mr. McMILLIN. The principal has been already paid?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It has.

Mr. McMILLIN. Now there was property taken from citizens of the United States for the support of the Army, loyal citizens, from the years 1861 to 1864, and I will ask my friend to state whether it has not been the policy of the Government from the first to the last in all those claims up the present time not to allow any interest?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The confusion in the Hall is so great I am unable to hear the gentleman.

Mr. McMILLIN. We have been paying claims since the early part of the war, what are known as quartermaster or Fourth of July claims, and we have paid thousands and tens of thousands of them. Now, is it not a fact that the Government has not in a single instance paid a dollar of interest on any one of the those claims?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I did not say anything in regard to them. This is not a question between the Government and its own citizens, but a question between this Government and other governments, and we are following the precedents we have established. We do not desire to establish any new precedents which will return hereafter to plague us.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will state that the Government has not allowed a dollar of interest to any one of its own citizens upon the claims I have mentioned. I was on the Committee on Claims for two years, and we had thousands of claims before us, and interest was not allowed on a single one of those claims. I undertake to say there is not an allowance of interest on any such claim now upon the Private Calendar.

Even when such claims have been due for years, even in cases of arrears of pension, amounts that the Government admits it has owed the citizen for years, no interest has ever been paid; and I want to know from the gentleman upon what principle he bases an obligation of this character and makes it higher and more binding than that of the Government to its own citizens?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have already stated twice, in tones the gentleman from Tennessee could not have failed to hear, the reason, and if he can not understand it it is beyond my power to make him understand it. I place it, sir, upon the principle that by the rules of international law we are bound to pay this interest to the citizens of those other Governments.

I also desire to say—although the gentleman lengthened his question into a quite an extended statement—one thing else. I am bound to say that precedent after precedent can be cited in which we have claimed interest from foreign governments, and notably in the case of the Alabama claims, which I cite as an instance in which we have claimed interest. I refer also to the other cases I have already cited.

And in further response to what the gentleman has stated, I have here in my hand, as I have already said, a list of one hundred and fifty-two acts of the Congress of the United States in which interest has been allowed, the most of it to our own citizens.

Mr. McMILLIN. While upon that subject I will ask the gentleman to state whether the Chinese indemnity fund, when paid, was paid with one dollar of interest upon the fund for all the years it was held in our possession?

Mr. BUCHANAN. My acquaintance with the Chinese is not so extensive as that of the gentleman from Tennessee, and I do not know.

Mr. McMILLIN. I inferred from the confidence with which the gentleman was speaking that he knew all about all matters pertaining to our relations with foreign governments.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have some knowledge, so far as the questions in relation to this tonnage tax upon these steamship companies is concerned; but I do not profess any intimate knowledge of all the affairs of all nations.

Mr. McMILLIN. All I want to get at is what has been the custom of the Government relative to the payment of interest on claims of our own people.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I stated that in my opening remarks on this bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Let me ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question. The gentleman talks about the Chinese indemnity fund. Did we not appropriate a part of the interest accruing upon that fund for the payment of the claims of American citizens against the Chinese Government?

Mr. McMILLIN. I have no knowledge of any such payment.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Well, it is so stated in the digest of international law, which you have on your desk, if you choose to examine it.

Mr. McMILLIN. We took a part of the principal of the indemnity fund and paid it to our citizens.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. No, sir; we took a part of the interest, as the gentleman will find if he chooses to examine the matter.

Mr. McMILLIN. But another question. I wish to ask the gentleman from New Jersey to state whether, when we returned to Japan the money improperly held by us belonging to that Government, we paid them a cent of interest?

Mr. BUCHANAN. If we did not pay interest upon it, and I believe we did not, we stand disgraced in the eyes of the world for such failure. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to the fact that in one instance, at least, his knowledge is at fault, and I ask his attention to this. I have in my hand a reference to two acts of Congress, one of July 8, 1870, which directed the Secretary of the Treasury to make proper payment to carry into effect the decree of the district court of the United States for the district of Louisiana, bearing date 4th of June, 1867, in the case of the British brig Volant and her cargo, in which payments were made with interest to each person who had a claim for any part of the value; and another, act of 1870, where, in the case of another British brig, the Dashing Wave, we paid interest upon the amount. To these cases I respectfully ask the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. McMILLIN. That was simply the interest upon a judgment obligation. The payment of interest upon a judgment decree is admitted.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But it has been admitted by a higher tribunal—that is to say, by the Congress of the United States, composed of the Senate, the House of Representatives, and the President—that this money was illegally and improperly exacted from these steamship companies, and this adjudication by a solemn act of Congress is as binding upon the Government as any decree of any of our courts can be.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman allow me another question? We have there pending a bill that was fixed for consideration this morning, but was set aside by consent and made a special order for to-morrow—what is called the "Fourth of July claims." Now in that bill——

Mr. BUCHANAN. Oh! I understand what point the gentleman wants to make.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let me come to the point. That embraces——

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understand what you mean. That case is not parallel at all. This is a question of international obligation and rests upon a very different principle——

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman is not going to escape in any such manner as that. What I want to know is this——

Mr. BUCHANAN. I did not understand the gentleman's remark because of the confusion in the Hall.

Mr. McMILLIN. I say the gentleman is not going to escape in any such manner as that. I want to ask him a distinct question.

Mr. BUCHANAN. As far as that is concerned, I could have escaped the question by not yielding the floor.

Mr. McMILLIN. Oh, very well; escape if you please. If you feel like it make your escape whenever you like, and I will take the floor in my own right.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee. I have no desire to escape anything.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman yielded so grudgingly——

Mr. BUCHANAN. Oh, no; I beg the gentleman's pardon. I always yield willingly to him.

Mr. McMILLIN. What I want to know is this: There are claims in that bill to the number of three hundred due to American citizens—and I love no citizens better—for twenty years and more. Will the gentleman from New Jersey move an amendment to pay interest on all those claims of citizens for property taken for the use of the Army during the war?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I think I have already convinced every member of the committee except the gentleman from Tennessee that this is not a parallel case, and with reference to the question he now asks me, I will say, "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

Mr. McMILLIN. You decline, then, to answer?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have answered. Will you move such an amendment?

Mr. McMILLIN. The policy of the Government from the beginning has been to pay no citizens interest on their claims.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That may have been the policy of the Government sometimes as to its own citizens, but not as to other governments.

Mr. McMILLIN. I hold the Government of the United States owes no man on earth a higher obligation than it owes to its own citizens.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. And especially those who fought to preserve the Government.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I decline to yield further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey declines to yield. He is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN].

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey has five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. OATES. I confess, Mr. Chairman, I have not been able to obtain a sufficient amount of information to satisfy me how I ought to vote on this bill. I do not know whether, in this case, the steamship companies did as men generally do in their business—account the tonnage dues which they had to pay as a part of their expense, and tax it upon the goods which they exported—or not. If so, then it is like a good many other claims which have been before this House—like, for instance, the claim of a merchant to cotton tax illegally collected from him. In fact, the merchant did not pay it, but the man who produced the cotton paid it.

Now that may be the case here—that the tonnage dues which the steamships had to pay were considered a part of their expenses, and taxed as against the freight which they transported; and in that event in fact the consumer paid it, and not the steamship company. In the absence of information sufficient to satisfy me, and with the knowledge that the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], who is unfortunately absent on account of sickness, understands thoroughly this bill and this claim, and has expressed a great desire to be present when it was considered, I move, if it is in order, the postponement of the further consideration of this bill until this day two weeks.

Mr. McMILLIN. Move that the bill be laid aside to be reported with the recommendation that its consideration be postponed for two weeks.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Unless the gentleman from Alabama has information from the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] that he wishes to be heard I do not think that is a proper motion.

Mr. OATES. I have had that information indirectly.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I have had it neither directly nor indirectly.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I know that the gentleman from New York has expressed a desire to speak on this bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from New York stated to me that he desired to speak on this bill when it came up.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. When was that?

Mr. SPRINGER. It was when the bill was reached in committee on a former occasion, I think two weeks ago.

Mr. McMILLIN. It was reached about the close of the day, if my memory serves me.

Mr. OATES. There is another advantage of postponing the consideration. It will afford gentlemen who desire to get at the real facts and merits of the case an opportunity to investigate it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I hope that will be done. While upon an ex parte statement it would seem that this claim had basis for its allowance, that it was proper to make this payment under the rulings and under the comity that exists between nations, yet there seems to be another side to the question; and until the gentleman from New York, who has been referred to and whom I have heard speak of it, shall be present to present the other side, if there be another side, I think the bill had better be postponed.

Mr. MORROW. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. OATES. I think it would be well for all gentlemen who have amendments to offer to offer them now and let them be pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the Chair understand the gentleman from Alabama to submit a motion to postpone?

Mr. OATES. Yes, sir. I submitted a motion to postpone the consideration of the bill till this day two weeks.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is that motion debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment sent up by the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following proviso to the bill:

Provided further, That the interest therein provided for shall not be paid until satisfactory evidence shall be presented to the Secretary of the Treasury that the country to which the vessels of the companies herein named belonged did not, during the period for which payments were made on which interest is claimed under this act by its laws, enforce tonnage, anchorage, or light-house dues, or equivalent charges on vessels of the United States.

Mr. MORROW. If it is in order I would like to say a word upon that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] asks unanimous consent that this bill be postponed until two weeks from to-day.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I object.

Mr. OATES. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be reported back to the House with the recommendation that its further consideration be postponed for two weeks.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. OATES, and there were—ayes 62, noes 71.

Mr. OATES. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] to act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 103.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN].

The question was taken; and the Chair declared that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Would it be in order, Mr. Chairman, to withdraw that amendment? I do not care whether it passes or not. It was simply designed to guard the interests of the Government a little better; that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. STORM. I object.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to—ayes 63, noes 17.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW], which will be again read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"Provided further, That the interest herein provided for shall not be paid until satisfactory evidence shall be presented to the Secretary of the Treasury that the countries to which the companies herein named belong did not, during the period for which payments were made on which interest is claimed under this act, by their laws enforce tonnage, anchorage, or light-house dues, or equivalent charges, on vessels of the United States."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I accept that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move that the bill as amended be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I think there is some misapprehension with regard to these claims, and I desire to explain again very briefly the basis of them. It is simply this: During the war our Government exacted duties from the steamship companies as tonnage dues which afterward were found to have been exacted contrary to existing treaty stipulations. The exaction was made in the ordinary course of business, and our course toward the steamship companies was in good faith and without any desire to oppress or harass the vessels or their owners. When it was discovered, upon careful examination, that those exactions had been illegally made Congress passed a law authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to refund the duties which had been thus illegally collected, and the Secretary of the Treasury did refund them. This was done four or five years ago. The steamship companies presented bills not only for the dues they had paid, but also for interest thereon from the time of the payment of the dues up to the time of the proposed payment by our Government of the principal. That is, the Government of the United States paid the principal in full at that time, but declined to pay the interest which had accrued.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will the gentleman inform us upon what principle interest was demanded? How is it that the whole claim was not settled then?

Mr. SPRINGER. It was settled. The law passed at that time authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to refund the duties thus collected but not to pay interest. Nothing was said about interest; the law simply authorized the Secretary to ascertain and refund the amount of the dues illegally collected——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that this discussion is by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was putting the motion. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMMOND. Is it not a universal rule that the Government does not pay interest on such claims?

Mr. SPRINGER. The Government has not paid interest in many cases to which I could refer, and the reason there was no interest paid in this case was that Congress took the whole subject into consideration and passed an act authorizing the Secretary to refund the duties illegally collected, but saying nothing about interest. Those duties were refunded to the full extent of the illegal exactions made, and the claim is now, and this bill is solely, for interest which the steamship companies think the Government of the United States should pay upon those dues from the time they were collected until the time of their return.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman from Illinois is the chairman of the Committee on Claims. I venture to ask him whether it is not the settled policy of that committee in dealing with all American citizens who have claims against the Government, even if they have been due twenty-five, thirty, or fifty years, not to allow interest?

Mr. SPRINGER. It has been the custom of that committee, so far as I know, to refuse to allow interest upon all claims due by the United States to our own citizens.

Mr. GALLINGER. But has not that committee reported to this House some bills recommending the payment of interest?

Mr. SPRINGER. It is possible that has been done in some cases.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman will allow me to make a suggestion. We have a statute making permanent appropriation for the refund by the Treasury Department of certain duties paid irregularly or improperly. That is a permanent statute making a continuous and indefinite appropriation. Now, I wish to ask my friend whether he knows of any instance in which the Government in that class of cases has ever paid any interest out of that fund.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not know of any case where the Government has paid interest upon the amount of duties refunded under that law.

Mr. BUCHANAN. We exacted interest from Brazil.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the Committee of the Whole to indulge me a moment longer.

The course of our Government toward Japan has been referred to. I was a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs when that question was investigated and reported upon; and I was one of those who at that time were willing to allow interest; but Congress decided not to do so. During the late war, the Government of the United States, in conjunction with three or four other governments, exacted from the Government of Japan at the cannon's mouth a large sum of money, amounting to $3,000,000, to be paid in silver. That Government paid the money under protest. The amount coming to the Government of the United States, $750,000 in silver, was shipped to this country and turned over to the Secretary of State. That money, silver being then at the premium over gold, was invested by the Secretary of State in 6 per cent. United States bonds. Those bonds were put in the Treasury, and the money received from time to time upon the coupons was invested in other bonds; so that at the time Congress passed the bill to adjust that case the interest which had accumulated amounted alone to over $1,300,000. But the law passed by Congress provided for returning to the Government of Japan only the principal, while the interest was covered into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BUCHANAN. You do not justify that, do you?

Mr. SPRINGER. I merely state this as a pertinent fact in connection with the case now before us.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to inquire whether the President or any other officer of the executive department has recommended the payment of this interest?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Let me answer that question. I have already stated in my remarks of to-day that the President in his last annual message recommended this payment; and I read an extract from that message.

Mr. SPRINGER. I deemed it due to the committee to make this statement. I think the proposition now presented is one of doubtful propriety. I hope we shall settle, and settle definitely, the course which the Government should pursue in cases of this kind.

Mr. GUENTHER. I find in the last annual message of the President of the United States this paragraph:

The claims for interest upon the amount of tonnage dues illegally exacted from certain German steamship lines were favorably reported in both Houses of Congress at the last session, and I trust will receive final and favorable action at an early day.

Now, I want to know whether that language refers to this bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. It does, as I understand.

Mr. GUENTHER. Then the President of the United States has recommended favorable action on this bill.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Chairman, the question whether interest should be allowed on claims of this character is, to my mind, wholly separate and distinct from questions involving merely the obligation which the Government owes to its own citizens. The obligations of our Government to the citizens of the United States are matters resting upon law which Congress itself creates. We by legislation establish for our citizens what those obligations shall be, including the question whether or not interest shall be paid upon claims presented by citizens of the United States to Congress. Claims come here for liquidated and for unliquidated damages; and I believe the rule has universally been to deny interest upon such claims of our own citizens. This has been done in view of the recognized fact that the obligation of the Government to its citizens is solely and exclusively that which the Government establishes by its own conduct and its own legislation.

But the Congress of the United States can not thus legislate upon the relations between the Government of the United States and foreign governments as expressed in treaties. Hence the obligation of the Government with reference to the payment of interest when dependent upon treaty obligations is one which Congress can not ignore. It can not escape the just obligations thus arising.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no treaty requiring the payment of interest in this case. That is not assumed anywhere.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But international law requires it.

Mr. HALL. In order to understand the proper meaning of a treaty, resort must be had to international law; and it is established, I assert, by a large number of precedents that under the principles of international law interest is a just matter of consideration. This Government has recognized that principle, and has exacted interest under circumstances similar to those here presented.

And the sole question is, what is the recognized usage under international law? The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN], who has charge of this bill, has cited and called attention of the committee to innumerable instances in which interest has been allowed; and under that rule, thus recognized universally almost, I can not see how the Government can evade that which has been recognized by the Chief Magistrate of the nation, after investigating and finding out the meaning of the treaties themselves and the rules of international law as applicable to them. I, myself, would hesitate long before I would support a measure allowing interest on private claims of citizens as against the Government of the United States. But this is not a case of that sort.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] called attention to the refunding of sums illegally exacted from importers. That is within the category, namely, a rule established as applicable between the Government and its own citizens importing goods and within the regulations I have suggested.

It seems to me this bill presents a case which stands on its own merits under well-recognized rules and principles, and conforms to precedents in like cases.

Mr. BUCHANAN. In deference to the wishes of gentlemen I now demand the regular order of business.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order of business is the motion that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 102, noes 18.

Mr. SOWDEN. No quorum has voted.

Mr. STORM. If any arrangement can be made by which we shall have a yea-and-nay vote on this bill in the House I hope the point of no quorum will be withdrawn.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am willing to agree to that.

Mr. SOWDEN. On that condition I will withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. MORRISON. I shall renew it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. We do not object to a vote in the House.

Mr. MORRISON. I will not insist upon it if the understanding is we shall have a vote by yeas and nays in the House.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have no objection to a vote in the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. The point of no quorum is withdrawn on that understanding.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that unanimous consent be granted, so gentlemen will be bound in honor that there shall be a yea-and-nay vote on the bill in the House.

Mr. GUENTHER. With the understanding that that vote shall be taken to-night.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I agree to that, provided the vote is to be taken at once.

Mr. LONG. I ask a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONG. If the committee should rise now, what question would be first in order before the House? Are there not several bills pending which will have to be disposed of before we reach this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rises and goes into the House the first business will be the unfinished business coming over from last Friday.

Mr. LONG. I respectfully ask how many cases there are pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed seven bills are pending. Is there objection to the understanding suggested by the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. DUNN. I hope no one will object.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will announce the vote.

The tellers reported—ayes 102, noes 18.

So the bill was ordered to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. LONG. I move that the committee rise.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 107, noes 42.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no quorum, I believe.

The CHAIRMAN. This motion does not require a quorum.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does it not require a quorum to lay aside a bill to be reported to the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The pending motion is that the committee rise.

Mr. SOWDEN. I demand tellers.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does it require a quorum for the committee to rise?

The CHAIRMAN. It does not; but the gentleman from Pennsylvania demanded tellers, to which he is entitled if the House sustains the demand.

Tellers were refused.

So the motion of Mr. LONG was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DUNN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration bills upon the Private Calendar, had directed him to report sundry bills with various recommendations.

CHARLES E. CREECY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before proceeding to consider the report of the committee made to-day, the Chair will direct the Clerk to report the bills which come over from the preceding session of the committee, being the unfinished business.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9930) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims and Supreme Court of the United States to finally determine the case of Charles E. Creecy, assignee in Congressional case No. 71, reported to the House of Representatives by said Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1883.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over informally for the present, retaining its place upon the Calendar. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COLLINS] has charge of the bill and desires that it shall not be taken up in his absence.

Mr. GILFILLAN. I would like to ask if that will carry the bill over until a week from to-day?

Mr. SPRINGER. That will be the effect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will leave it as the unfinished business among the cases reported from the Committee of the Whole House. It will be in order next Friday when the House again comes out of committee.

Mr. GILFILLAN. It will not come up again to-day?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will not.

Mr. GILFILLAN. Then I have no objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. What is the matter with the bill that we can not act upon it now?

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Massachusetts who has charge of the bill asks that this be done.

There being no objection, the bill was informally passed over.

JABEZ BURCHARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee of the Whole House was the bill (S. 570) for the relief of Jabez Burchard.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, this bill was reported from the Committee of the Whole House with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed. I ask the House, since the motion to indefinitely postpone is not debatable, to vote down that recommendation of the committee in order that a brief statement may be made in regard to this bill to show why it ought to be passed, as the vote was taken on it evidently under a misapprehension of the facts. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order being demanded, the question is on the motion to indefinitely postpone the bill.

The question was taken; the House divided and there were—ayes 28, noes 5.

Mr. SOWDEN. No quorum has voted.

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like to ask that this bill be reported. I do not think the House understands the pending question.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the House will vote down the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole——

Mr. TAULBEE. I call for the regular order. Is it in order to have the bill reported?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not at present without unanimous consent; a question is pending, and the House is dividing.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be again reported.

Mr. CALDWELL. I object.

Mr. BURROWS. Let me inquire if the recommendation of the committee is to postpone indefinitely this bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That was the recommendation of the committee, and the question is on the motion to postpone indefinitely.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman who had charge of the bill was not here at the time action was taken upon it in committee, and an explanation that should have been made was not made. I hope, therefore, the House will vote down the motion to indefinitely postpone, so that further action can be taken upon the bill. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. SOWDEN and Mr. BURROWS were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 33, noes 39.

So (no further count being demanded) the motion to indefinitely postpone was not agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now move to postpone further consideration of this bill until next Friday, so that gentlemen may have an opportunity to examine the report and see whether they want to pass the bill or not.

The motion was agreed to.

W. H. POWELL.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (S. 269) for the relief of W. H. Powell, the question being on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. EDEN. I would like to have the bill read.

The bill was again read at length.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I think it due to the House, before the vote is taken, that I should have read from the desk a short extract from the report, showing the items that are covered by the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee are of the opinion that the claimant is entitled to receive from the Government the sum of $498.54, the amount named in the bill, made up of the following items: For original overpayment, $65.76; the amount received by Government on sale of property, $226.50; the amount paid by Powell, as surviving partner, on the judgment rendered upon the bond, $206.28; and that the judgment in the action in the bond should be satisfied, and Powell & Co., and W. H. Powell, as survivor, and their and each of their sureties, relieved from further liability and obligation, of every kind, in the premises.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOLMES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EDWAY A. GRANT.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole House was the bill (S. 267) for the relief of Edway A. Grant.

The bill was reported with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed.

The bill was read.

The question being taken, the report of the Committee of the Whole House was adopted; and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

FREDERICK W. RUGGLES.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole House was the bill (S. 187) for the relief of Frederick W. Ruggles, of Westport, Nova Scotia.

The bill was reported with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed.

The bill was read.

The report of the Committee of the Whole House was adopted; and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

SEWELL COULSON AND OTHERS.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole House was the bill (S. 249) for the payment of Sewell Coulson, and Porter, Harrison & Fishback, for legal services.

The bill was reported with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I ask for the reading of that bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Sewell Coulson the sum of $3,950, and to Porter, Harrison & Fishback the sum of $2,500, for legal services rendered by them (as recommended and approved by the Judge-Advocate-General and Secretary of War) in defending ex-officers and ex-soldiers for acts done by them in obedience to the orders of a superior officer of the United States Army, in Indiana, during the late war.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the report of the Committee of the Whole House that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The question being taken,

The SPEAKER pro tempore stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 45, noes 31.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN].

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I am willing this case shall be postponed for one week.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us dispose of it now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is objection. The tellers will take their places.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 41, noes 75.

Mr. MCMILLIN. No quorum.

The tellers resumed the count.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have no objection to withdraw the point of no quorum if we can have a yea-and-nay vote.

The tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 101.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I call for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were—ayes 32.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Count the other side.

The negative vote was counted; and there were—noes 77.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will the Chair please state the question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is: Shall the bill be indefinitely postponed?

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 82, nays 102, not voting 134; as follows:

Mr. STORM. I object.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, until Monday next.

Mr. F. CAMPBELL with Mr. BINGHAM, until Monday next.

For the rest of this day:

Mr. MCKINLEY with Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas.

Mr. WILSON with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.

Mr. MURPHY with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois.

Mr. DOCKERY with Mr. WADE.

Mr. SAYERS with Mr. BAKER.

Mr. OUTHWAITE with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. LAWLER with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. MCCOMAS.

Mr. HEARD with Mr. STRUBLE.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, with Mr. PAYNE.

Mr. O'FERRALL with Mr. MORROW.

Mr. STEELE with Mr. HERBERT.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I move now that the bill be engrossed and read a third time, and upon that I demand the previous question.

Mr. BURROWS. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURROWS. The gentleman now moves the passage of the bill. I submit that, under the action of the House, this bill must stand recommitted to the committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. Under what rule?

Mr. BURROWS. Under Rule XXIII, clause 7, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rule XXIII, clause 7:

Whenever a bill is reported from a Committee of the Whole with an adverse recommendation, and such recommendation is disagreed to by the House, the bill shall stand recommitted to the said committee without further action by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is well taken, and the bill goes back to the committee.

Mr. BURROWS. Regular order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1536) for the purchase of suitable grounds in the city of Owensborough, in the State of Kentucky, and the erection thereon of a public building for the post-office, United States collector's office, United States commissioner's office, and for the use of other United States officers in said city, and appropriating money for said purposes.

The message also returned to the House the duplicate engrossed bill (S. 2172), restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes; the Secretary of the Senate having, in accordance with the directions of the Senate, endorsed on the House amendment thereto the action of the Senate, agreeing to the conference asked by the House, on the said amendment.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had passed with an amendment the bill (H. R. 9116) to provide for holding terms of the United States courts at Texarkana, Ark., and for other purposes, asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendment, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. EDMUNDS, Mr. WILSON of Iowa, and Mr. COKE.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 995) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

DOCUMENTS RELATING TO AMERICA.

Mr. SINGLETON, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on the Library a joint resolution (H. Res. 252) for procuring a descriptive catalogue of certain documents in Europe relating to America; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Sundry messages, in writing, from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, his private secretary, who also announced that the President had approved bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 356) granting a pension to Lucinda Barrett;
An act (H. R. 429) granting a pension to Harry McElhinny;
An act (H. R. 1860) granting a pension to Frederick Robertson;
An act (H. R. 7696) granting a pension to George W. Robaugh;
An act (H. R. 6817) granting a pension to Thomas Brown;
An act (H. R. 8280) granting a pension to John Patton;
An act (H. R. 9167) granting a pension to Joseph F. Kirkhart;
An act (H. R. 8830) granting a pension to Aaron Garis;
An act (H. R. 7796) granting a pension to James Long;
An act (H. R. 4265) granting a pension to Josiah Mahoney;
An act (H. R. 4103) granting a pension to M. S. Clay;
An act (H. R. 7616) for the relief of W. D. Havely;
An act (H. R. 6314) to increase the pension of James Carlin;
An act (H. R. 5894) for the relief of Elon A. Marsh and Minard Lefever;
An act (H. R. 1171) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the muster and pay of certain officers and enlisted men of the volunteer forces," approved June 3, 1884;
An act (H. R. 8835) granting a pension to Jacob Case;
An act (H. R. 8836) granting a pension to John Miller;
An act (H. R. 9129) granting a pension to Rebecca Wiswell; and An act (H. R. 8623) granting a pension to Mary E. Hedrick.

ALBERT H. EMERY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 929) for the relief of Albert H. Emery.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is first upon the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask for the reading of the bill and the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Albert H. Emery, of Stamford, Conn., in full settlement of all claims, legal or equitable, which he has in any way against the United States on account of the cost of, and the time spent by him, and use of all patents and inventions in designing and constructing the testing-machine built and erected by him for the United States, or otherwise, in any way, on account of said machine, the sum of $200,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which sum is hereby appropriated and made immediately available therefor. Said machine, together with the full right to the use therein of all patents and inventions used in its design and construction, shall belong to the United States.

The following amendments are reported from the Committee of the Whole:

Strike out "$200,000" and insert "$63,161.62."

Also insert the following:

"Which shall be in full of all claims against the Government on the part of said Emery for this invention."

Mr. SPRINGER and Mr. MCKENNA both rose.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] informs me that he desires to offer an additional amendment.

Mr. MCKENNA. Mr. Speaker, I think I am entitled to be recognized on this bill, as I reported it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman if he will be patient.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SPRINGER. For the purpose of making the motion which is necessary to further this bill. The bill was reported——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair decides that the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA] is entitled to be recognized.

Mr. MCKENNA. One moment, Mr. Speaker. The bill was reported from the committee with the recommendation that $200,000 be paid, but the minority of the committee, represented by the gentleman from Virginia and myself, moved to amend by making the sum $65,000, which was adopted. Now, I contend that the movers of that amendment, or substitute, are entitled to make the subsequent motions in regard to this bill.

Mr. LONG. That amendment was accepted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill comes from the Committee of the Whole with amendments. The gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA], in charge of the bill, is entitled to recognition.

Mr. MCKENNA. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question upon the third reading of the bill.

Mr. HAMMOND. I move that the House take a recess until 7.30 p. m.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA].

Mr. SPRINGER. Pending that, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] desires to offer his amendment.

Mr. STORM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 7.30.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Oh, let us dispose of this bill first.

The question was taken on the motion for a recess, and there were—ayes 29, noes 97.

Mr. STORM. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STORM] and the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA] to act as tellers.

Mr. MCKENNA. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 46, nays 134, not voting 139; as follows:

So the motion of Mr. STORM for a recess was not agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. LITTLE with Mr. LANHAM, on this vote.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, with Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania, for the rest of the day.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. CATCHINGS, on this vote.

Mr. OATES with Mr. BRADY, for the rest of the day.

Mr. LAFFOON with Mr. MILLARD, for the rest of the day.

The result of the vote was announced as aboved stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DUNN). The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA] for the previous question on agreeing to the amendment and ordering the bill to a third reading.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 95, noes none.

Mr. LONG. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WISE. I move that the House now adjourn. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the motion to adjourn is always in order.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WISE to adjourn, there were—ayes 34, noes 81.

Mr. WISE. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, only 20 voting in favor thereof.

Mr. STORM. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes 28, noes 108; more than one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, and others called for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. STORM and Mr. MCKENNA were appointed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon ordering the yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE] that the House adjourn.

Mr. LONG (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.). I ask unanimous consent that we now take the ordinary recess until half past 7 o'clock this evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] asks unanimous consent that the House now take a recess, in conformity with the standing order of Friday, until half past 7 o'clock. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and the recess is taken.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past 7 o'clock p. m., and was called to order by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, chief clerk.

The following was read:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., February 4, 1887.

SIR: Hon. H. S. VAN EATON, of Mississippi, is designated to preside at the session of the House this evening as Speaker pro tempore.

J. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr.,
Clerk House of Representatives.

Mr. VAN EATON took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TAULBEE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar for the purpose of carrying out the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. RICHARDSON in the chair.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent that members be permitted to-night to call up bills as has been the custom on the last two Friday night sessions.

Mr. MORRILL. In addition to that, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on any bill be limited to ten minutes, five minutes on each side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER] asks unanimous consent that members be permitted to-night to call up bills according to the custom for several Friday nights past; and pending that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] asks unanimous consent that debate be limited on each bill to ten minutes, five minutes for and five minutes against the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir; I shall object. I am willing that members be permitted to call up bills for consideration, provided that no bill objected to be called up to-night; that if there be objection made to any bill called up it go over without losing its place on the Calendar.

Mr. ROWELL. I will certainly object to that. Last Friday night unanimous consent was given that the same rule which had been followed should be applied to this evening. That was the agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed there is no agreement if any member objects.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not recognize any agreement.

Mr. CONGER. There was such an agreement, and gentlemen will see it if they will consult the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will resume their seats and we will see whether we can agree on an order of business.

Mr. CONGER. On the last Friday evening we were in session before the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WINANS] made the motion that the committee rise, there were a few gentleman who had not been recognized to call up bills, and it was understood, and the gentleman from Michigan will bear me out there was no opposition to the understanding that the same rule followed on that evening should be followed to-night.

Mr. TAULBEE. I am willing to recognize that agreement if it is understood there shall be excluded from it two bills—one granting a pension to Mrs. Logan and the other granting a pension to Mrs. Frank P. Blair. I do not think we ought to attempt to consider those bills without a quorum. If those bills are excluded from the list I am perfectly willing to have such an understanding.

Several MEMBERS. There is no disposition to take those bills up.

Mr. BRADY. I am willing that we shall proceed under the understanding had at a former meeting, that bills shall be called up under the same rule which was followed at that time. It was understood members should be recognized as they were on that list.

Mr. ROWELL. I wish the understanding of the last Friday night we were in session on pension bills shall be carried out. It was understood just before the adjournment that when we met to-night it should be under the same rule which was then followed. I ask that list be followed in accordance with that understanding.

Mr. TAULBEE. There is no objection with the exceptions I have referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed there was a list agreed upon at that time. If the gentleman will now state his motion the Chair will put it to the House. The Chair understands the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER] is that by unanimous consent we shall proceed to consider bills upon the Calendar in the order as they appear upon the list; that is, that they shall be taken up in the order in which they appear on that list. Is that the request?

Mr. CONGER. Yes; that is the request.

Mr. TAULBEE. I object, unless as I have suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands if the two bills indicated are excluded from the agreement the gentleman from Kentucky will not object.

Mr. ROWELL. Then I shall object, as that was no part of the understanding on the previous Friday evening.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the exceptions proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes; I object.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I desire to make a statement. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I suggest, by unanimous consent, that bills may be considered under the five-minute rule. That will give sufficient time for debate.

Several MEMBERS. Not under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the understanding that debate shall be limited to five minutes on each side?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I did not mean exactly that the debate should be under the five-minute rule, but that no member should be allowed to occupy more than five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. TAULBEE. There is objection until the other question is settled.

Mr. STEELE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. RYAN. I should like to know what the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky is; I should like to have him state his objection specifically.

Mr. HEPBURN. I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the title of the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4702) amending sections 4756 and 4757 of the Revised Statutes relating to pensions to certain disabled persons who have served in the Navy or Marine Corps.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. That is a public bill and not a private bill, and I do not see why it is upon the calendar. It does not come under the rule.

Mr. WINANS. I ask it be passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the bill will be passed over.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask that members present be permitted to call up such bills as they desire to be considered according to the list agreed to the last Friday evening we were in session; provided when a bill is reached on which there is an adverse report from the committee, it shall then require unanimous consent.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Let me ask the gentleman from Kentucky what is his purpose? Is it his purpose to exclude the bill granting a pension to Mrs. Logan?

Mr. TAULBEE. It is; and also Mrs. Blair's bill as well.

ANNIE E. GARDINER.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. On the last Friday evening when the House was in session for this business I called up a bill which was made a special order for this evening, and was to be the first bill disposed of. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point that this bill is the first bill in order this evening.

Mr. BUCK. I call for the reading of the RECORD to show what that agreement was.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill called up by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Annie E. Gardiner, widow of John W. T. Gardiner, late a major on the retired-list of the United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of —— per month, from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. MORRISON. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania) was read, as follows:

That having carefully considered the Senate report, they consider the facts therein stated amply sufficient, unanimously concur therein, and recommend the passage of the bill as amended by the Senate.

[Senate Report No. 1378, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2660) granting a pension to Annie F. Gardiner, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant, Annie E. Gardiner, is the widow of John W. T. Gardiner, late a major, United States Army. He was educated at West Point, and appointed brevet second lieutenant July 1, 1840, and served until retired, November 14, 1861, "for disability resulting from exposure in line of duty." He died September 24, 1879.

His widow applied for a pension November 24, 1879, but it was rejected June 20, 1885, on the ground that as the fatal cause of the soldier's death originated prior to March 4, 1861, during a time of peace, there is no title to pension, the law requiring that it must have originated during a period of war.

It appears that the soldier died of rheumatic gout, and it also appears from the certificates of physicians that he was treated for this disease as early as 1852. There are also further statements, which seem to be reliable, showing the origin of the difficulty prior to the fall and winter of 1848-'49. Dr. J. F. Head, surgeon, United States Army, testifies that he was stationed at Fort Snelling in 1849 with the soldier, and he was under his professional care, and had been subject to attacks of rheumatic gout for a year or two before.

This evidence indicates that the disability was probably contracted during the period of the Mexican war; but, however that may be, it would be difficult to give a reason why a soldier should be pensioned for a disability contracted in time of war and not pensioned for a like disability contracted in the service and line of duty in time of peace. Although the action of the Pension Office was legally correct, there can be no reason why, in the discretion of Congress, this widow should not be relieved from the inequitable operation of the rule, especially in view of the probability, from the sworn testimony, that this case may properly be considered within it.

We are inclined to give this widow the benefit of the doubt, and therefore report back the bill, with a recommendation that it do pass, with an amendment striking out all after the word "Army," in the seventh line, and insert "and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month from and after the passage of this act."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Under the general order for Friday evening sessions it is provided as follows:

That on each Friday the House shall take a recess from 5 o'clock p. m. until 7.30 p. m., at which evening sessions private bills granting pensions reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions * * * be considered.

I wish to inquire if this is intended to provide that only bills reported from the Committees on Invalid Pensions and Pensions shall be considered?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the order of the House.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Then, under that order could a bill reported simply by a minority of a committee be considered as a bill coming from either of those committees?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that a bill can not be reported by a minority. It must be by a majority. The minority can file its dissenting views; but under the rules of the House they do not report back bills.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Then under that order, as I understand it, no bill, excepting one reported from the committees named, can be taken up and considered.

Mr. MORRISON. A bill may be on the Calendar reported adversely.

Mr. CUTCHEON. With that understanding I now ask unanimous consent that members present be allowed to call up bills reported by one or the other of those committees.

Mr. MORRISON. I was about to say to the gentleman that an adverse report by a committee, which at the request of any member was placed upon the Calendar, would be the reporting of a bill, and would be entitled, as such, to consideration under the order of the House. I have no objection whatever to your request.

The CHAIRMAN. If it be an adverse report and placed on the Calendar it is subject to be considered under this order.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask unanimous consent that bills be called up by members the same as has been done heretofore, preserving the old list.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. TAULBEE. I object. I would be glad to see that agreement carried out provided all adverse cases were omitted from the agreement.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Regular order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like to ask by way of a parliamentary inquiry, at what point on the Calendar the Clerk is beginning?

The CHAIRMAN. On page 52 of the Calendar, as the Chair is informed.

The Clerk reported the next business on the Calendar to be the bill (H. R. 4712) to place the name of Jacob S. Biddle on the pension-roll.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. WISE. Let us have the report in that case read.

Mr. CURTIN. I assure the House that the bill is all right.

Mr. WISE. I withdraw the demand for the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside and reported to the House favorably?

Mr. WINANS. I object to action upon the bill without having the report read. This bill has been discussed and passed over several times. There are some serious objections to it. This is not the first time it has been before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I understand that the gentleman reporting the bill is not present. I ask, therefore, that the reading of the report be dispensed with and the bill informally laid aside, not to lose its place on the Calendar.

The motion of Mr. CUTCHEON was agreed to.

Mr. BRADY. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk announce the titles of bills as they appear on the Calendar, and if no one calls them up for consideration that they be passed over informally, retaining their places on the Calendar.

Mr. TAULBEE. I object, unless those with adverse reports are omitted from that agreement.

Mr. BRADY. I accept that.

Mr. ROWELL. I do not accept it.

Mr. BRADY. It is just a waste of time reading bills, passing them over informally and doing nothing. We had better adjourn than to waste our time in this way.

The next business reported from the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5927) for the relief of Louisa Kearney.

Mr. BRADY. I understand the gentleman reporting that bill is not present. I ask that it be passed over informally retaining, its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk reported the next business on the Private Calendar as the bill (H. R. 4678) restoring to the pension-roll the name of James Monohan, &c.

Mr. SWOPE. I ask to lay that bill aside without losing its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection.

BETSY A. MOWER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8311) for the relief of Betsy A. Mower.

Mr. IKE H. TAYLOR. I observe that the Clerk has skipped one or two bills preceding that. I hope they will be taken up in their order.

Mr. MORRILL. This is an adverse report, and I move that it be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

MATHIAS WONDRAK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1384) granting a pension to Mathias Wondrak.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mathias Wondrak, late a private in Company K, Twentieth Regiment United States Infantry, who served eleven years in the United States Army and was honorably discharged for disability incurred in said service, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws.

Mr. WINANS. Does this regular order include the consideration of Senate bills?

The CHAIRMAN. It does.

Mr. WINANS. I do not think they have been taken up regularly.

Mr. PERKINS. If no member asks the consideration of this bill I move that it be laid aside informally.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask the consideration of the bill, and call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1384) granting a pension to Mathias Wondrak, having had the same under consideration, concur in the report of the Senate committee hereto appended, and recommend the passage of the bill.

[Senate Report No. 297, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1384) granting a pension to Mathias Wondrak, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

Mathias Wondrak first enlisted in Company D, Fifth Regiment United States Infantry, May 8, 1858, for five years; was honorably discharged May 8, 1863, at expiration of term of service; enlisted a second time August 19, 1863, in Company B, Fourth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry; was discharged for "disability" from Memphis Hospital July 20, 1865; enlisted a third time February 15, 1868, in Company K, Twentieth Regiment United States Infantry; was discharged April 18, 1869, for "disability" at Baton Rouge, La. Declaration for pension filed January 27, 1874, claimant alleging that he was much exposed to wet and cold; and that about February 8 or 10, 1869, while on guard duty at Baton Rouge, La., he became very wet and took cold, resulting in rheumatism, which has continued until this time, and that in consequence of this rheumatism he was discharged from the service at Baton Rouge, La., April 18, 1869, after being in the hospital there for about six weeks.

Claim rejected on the ground that the alleged disability is not shown to be due to the service.

Communication from Assistant Adjutant-General, dated March 30, 1874, and signed J. B. Martin, Assistant Adjutant-General, shows that Mathias Wondrak was discharged at Baton Rouge, La., April 19, 1869, "by reason of old age and disability arising from long service."

Wondrak's statements as to exposure from 1858 to 1863 are substantiated by affidavit of Owen Pheeny, who served with Wondrak in Company D, Fifth Regiment United States Infantry; also by affidavit of Thomas Macken, late a sergeant in Company I, Twentieth Regiment United States Infantry, who testifies to seeing Wondrak in hospital at Baton Rouge in the spring of 1869; also from surgeon's certificate of disability for discharge dated April 26, 1866, signed by William S. Buchanan, assistant surgeon, United States Army, alleging as reasons for his discharge "old age and general debility;" also from certificates and affidavit of A. C. Girard, assistant surgeon, United States Army, dated at Baton Rouge, La., April 18, 1869, certifying to "chronic bronchitis and general debility, the disability originating in the line of his duty;" also from certificate of Capt. A. A. Harbeck, United States Army dated at Baton Rouge, La., March 30, 1869, assigning as reason for discharge of soldier—

"Unfit for active duty because of disability arising from long service."

Also from report of Examining Surgeon J. L. A. Bowen, dated Washington, August 9, 1875, when soldier was suffering from "chronic rheumatism, heart disease, enlarged veins, and stiffness of joints."

In view of this evidence, the committee believe it their duty to report in favor of this bill, and recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask unanimous consent that the Chair proceed to recognize gentlemen whose names are on the list, and when they obtain recognition that they be allowed to call up their bills, at which time it will be in order for any one to object to their consideration. My proposition is that gentlemen be recognized to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I should like to know when this list was made.

Mr. TAULBEE. It was made at a former Friday night session, and there was a tacit understanding that the list should be carried over.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. LYMAN. I desire to inquire what this request means.

Mr. TAULBEE. I think I can explain it. At the last Friday night session unanimous consent was had for the Chair to recognize members alternately on each side of the House, and in order to that recognition a list was made. We could not complete that list, and some of the gentlemen who stood here for recognition were deprived of it. It was the tacit understanding at that time that to-night those gentlemen were to be recognized. The proposition I now make is for the purpose of carrying out that understanding. I wish to say further that my understanding in regard to that list is that there are on it many more names on that side of the House than there are names of gentlemen on this side. And I wish further to state that I have no personal interest in this matter, because I am not in the list; but I would like that list to be respected.

Mr. PERKINS. The chairman of the Committee of the Whole was requested two weeks ago to preserve that list.

Mr. LYMAN. The trouble I have is not with the list, but I wish to make this inquiry. When the name is called and a gentleman calls up a bill, is a single objection sufficient to prevent its consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no such agreement.

Mr. TAULBEE. That is the effect of my proposition.

Mr. LYMAN. Then I object to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

GEORGE BLISS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1783) granting an increase of pension to George Bliss, reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions with an adverse recommendation.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George Bliss, late a private in Company I, Thirty-fourth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $8 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving, to commence from the passage of this act.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. STEELE. Let us hear the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed there is an adverse report on this bill.

Mr. STEELE. I should like to hear it.

The report (by Mr. LOVERING) was read, as follows:

That the beneficiary in the bill is now upon the pension-roll at the rate of $4 per month. He applied for an increase, which application was rejected on the ground that he was "in receipt of a pension commensurate with his disability."

Your committee are of opinion that where a board of surgeons of the Pension Department have examined a claimant and fixed the degree of disability and rate for the same, which finding is affirmed by the Department, it would be a manifest injustice to the hundreds of thousands upon the roll under like conditions should the committee undo the proper work of the Department, reverse its findings, and increase the pension of any one claimant, simply because he comes to Congress asking that the same be done.

Your committee therefore are constrained to report back the bill with the recommendation that it do not pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be postponed indefinitely.

MISS MARGARET STAFFORD WORTH.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2030) granting a pension to Miss Margaret Stafford Worth.

The bill was read.

Mr. ELDREDGE. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE], who reported this bill from the Committee on Pensions, is not present, I ask that it be laid aside without losing its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LUCY A. WASHBURN.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2218) for the relief of Lucy A. Washburn.

Mr. PERKINS. If no gentleman requests the consideration of this bill, I suggest that it be informally passed over.

Mr. TAULBEE. I request its consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the name of Lucy A. Washburn, widow of First Lieutenant Lon Washburn, late of Battery I, Sixteenth Regiment New York Artillery, be placed on the pension-roll at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. WISE. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. LOVERING) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2218) for the relief of Lucy A. Washburn, having had the same under consideration, report back the same, adopting the Senate report as its own, and recommend that the bill do pass.

[Senate Report No. 885, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2218) granting a pension to Lucy A. Washburn, have examined the same, and report:

The claim for pension of Lucy A. Washburn, widow of Lon Washburn, late private of Battery I, Sixteenth New York Artillery, was rejected by the Pension Office, on the ground that there is no record of the incurrence of the soldier's fatal disease in service, or medical treatment for same in service, or from discharge up to a short time prior to his death. The fact of absence of record testimony is one of the most fatal that the applicant for pension has to encounter.

The conclusive evidence in this case is that of his comrades, who testify that with him they were out three days on a scouting expedition; that this soldier led the party; that they were out three days in a continuous rain, part of the time in a swamp; that this man took cold, which resulted speedily in consumption, of which he died, and this they state upon their personal and positive knowledge. And it is in evidence that he was not only sound, but an unusually robust young man when he entered the service. This evidence is from responsible and properly-accredited sources.

The Pension Office has procured from two persons (one a postmaster, who does not give his name) a statement indorsed on the back of an official letter to the effect that the soldier died of "hereditary" consumption, of which others of his family had died. These statements are not in the form of evidence, but briefly and loosely made, and they are the only ones at variance with the testimony that proves the incurrence of the disease and its fatal ending. The cough and its wasting effect are traced from before his discharge to his death.

The committee, after a careful examination of all the evidence, feel justified in reporting the bill favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. TAULBEE. I move to amend the bill by striking out the words "at the rate of $12 per month" and insert in lieu thereof the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. ANN E. LAMBURG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1902) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann E. Lamburg.

Mr. SWOPE. I ask that this bill be passed over informally, not losing its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MRS. M. C. MILES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1627) granting a pension to Mrs. M. C. Miles.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. M. C. Miles, of Lansing, Mich., widow of Marcus H. Miles, late a first lieutenant in the Eleventh Michigan Cavalry.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. WINANS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 1627, report that they have examined the same, and adopt the Senate report, as follows:

[Senate Report No. 784, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The petitioner is the widow of Marcus H. Miles, late a first lieutenant in the Eleventh Michigan Cavalry.

The claimant made application for a pension on the ground that her husband received an injury that resulted in hernia, and which was the cause of his death. The Commissioner of Pensions decided that his death was not a result of his military service. There is no record testimony other than that which identified the soldier in his line of duty.

The surgeon of the Eleventh Michigan Cavalry, Lucius C. Woodman, testifies that he was well acquainted with Marcus H. Miles, and he describes minutely the accident, which occurred from a fall while on a train of cars, and from which it appears that hernia was immediately produced, and for which he was treated then and subsequently by Surgeon Woodman. The colonel of the regiment was present and testifies to all the circumstances and to the subsequent disability of Lieutenant Miles, and to the necessity of placing him on detached service. The Adjutant-General certifies to the presence of these two officers at the time.

The physicians who attended Lieutenant Miles during his disability, and down to the date of his death, agree that he was not able to perform any kind of labor, and that the cause of his death was paralysis of the bladder and suppression of the secretions from the kidneys, owing to nervous prostration and continued irritation from complicated hernia.

The committee report the bill favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ALBERT C. KELLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2286) for the relief of Albert C. Kelley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Albert C. Kelley, late a private in Company B, Fifth Regiment of Michigan Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. WINANS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 2286, report that they have examined the same, and adopt the Senate report, as follows:

[Senate Report No. 1106, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The claimant was a private in Company B, Fifth Michigan Cavalry. He enlisted August 16, 1862, and was discharged May 15, 1865. His alleged disabilities are deafness, erysipelas, lung disease, and general disability. His application for a pension is rejected on the ground that he was deaf before he entered the service and his inability to prove that the other diseases were contracted while in the Army.

There have been two special examinations in this case, at one of which D. M. Greene testifies that he has known claimant since he was two years old; is his cousin by marriage; that he was a little hard of hearing when he enlisted; it was generally known that he was a little hard of hearing; that when he returned from the service he was much worse—quite deaf; was well and hearty when he enlisted, and could do a good day's work of the hardest kind; does not know whether he was disabled in any other way after his discharge or not.

The Surgeon-General's report says the records show that claimant entered the hospital at Newberne, N. C., March 21, 1865, with erysipelas of head and face; and he traces him to different hospitals; April 18, 1865, with bronchitis; April 26, 1865, with erysipelas, and again with erysipelas, soon after which he was discharged.

Admitting that he was a little hard of hearing when he enlisted, he was enrolled as they found him. He came out of the service quite deaf. There is record evidence as above that he contracted erysipelas and bronchitis in the service, and from the effects of these, according to the report of a special examiner, he appears to be dying at the National Military Home, Hampton, Va.

The committee report the bill with an amendment, striking out all after the word "cavalry," in the seventh line, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLARD. I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen may be recognized upon the right and on the left side of the House alternately, to call up bills for consideration in accordance with the list.

Mr. WALLACE. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

WILLIAM BARDEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2353) granting a pension to William Barden.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of William Barden, father of Henry D. Barden, a private of Company E, First Regiment of Wisconsin Cavalry, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. WINANS) was read, as follows:

The claimant is William Barden, and applied for a pension as dependent father of Henry D. Barden, who was a private in Company E, First Wisconsin Cavalry, and who died of wounds received in battle May 13, 1863. The application was rejected on the ground that the claimant was not dependent upon his son at the time of his death, but was able to, and did, labor for the support of his family.

The soldier's legitimacy and celibacy are properly proven. The dependence of the father is established by the testimony of witnesses who date their knowledge of him from 1856, when he was a poor man.

Dr. Samuel J. Osborn, of Oshkosh, Wis., testifies:

"Claimant, being not of robust health, could not work always at his occupation; that his sons helped him before the war; that he had a troublesome cough, and some other ailments, which affiant can not distinctly remember, except that he could not always follow his trade; that what property he had was spent in caring for his wife, who died of cancer in the breast."

Another witness testifies to his knowledge of claimant since 1856; knows that he was and is now a poor man, temperate and frugal; that he well knew the soldier, and believes he largely assisted in the support of claimant and his family; that he sent home a part of his pay while in the service.

The soldier's letters are produced to show that he recognized his father's dependence, and contributed liberally of his monthly pay.

The aggregate of testimony shows that the father has never been a strong and healthy man, and that he has had a continuous struggle with poverty to the present time.

The bill is reported favorably with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WISE. I must object to that bill, Mr. Speaker. The question involved in it was discussed here the other day in the case of Mr. Tiller, and this case is exactly similar.

Mr. WINANS. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is quite different from the Tiller case. The beneficiary in this case was plainly dependent on his son for his support and is entitled to the relief to be granted by this bill, "subject to the limitations of the pension laws." So far as I have knowledge of the case, it seems to be in all respects a deserving one and certainly quite different from the Tiller case, wherein the soldier was not in the line of duty when captured, nor was the parent dependent at the time of the soldier's death.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

JOHN REED, SR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1626) granting a pension to John Reed, sr.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Reed, sr., of North Branch, Mich., dependent father of John Reed, jr., late a private in the Seventh Michigan Cavalry.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the report in that case. I also ask unanimous consent that all the reports may be read in connection with the bills without the necessity of calling for each one.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, and Mr. BRADY. I object.

Mr. WALLACE. It will not make any difference, because I shall certainly call for the report in every case.

Mr. BRADY. We appropriate millions of dollars here without calling for the reading of the reports, but the reports are called for in every pension case, the object being, obviously, to consume time.

The report (by Mr. WINANS) was read, as follows:

Martha Reed, the mother of John Reed (a private in Company G, Seventh Regiment Michigan Volunteers), was granted a pension commencing the 5th day of December, 1862. She has since died, and the accompanying bill is to grant a pension to John Reed, sr., the aged and dependent father of the soldier above named.

The committee report the bill favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. MARY LATHROP.

Mr. WAIT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 10021) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Lathrop. I make the request now because I hardly feel well enough to remain here until a late hour.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and restrictions of the pension laws, the name of Mary Lathrop, widow of Henry Brooks, late a private in Company F, Twenty-sixth Regiment Connecticut Volnuteer Infantry.

Mr. WISE. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. LOVERING) was read, as follows:

The claimant was married to Henry Brooks, late private of Company F, Twenty-sixth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, October 8, 1839. Brooks enlisted August 30, 1862, and was wounded in battle at Port Hudson, May 27, 1863, from the effects of which wound he died July 3, 1863. The claimant was pensioned and continued to draw her pension until January 10, 1877, when she married one Harvey Lathrop, with whom she lived as his wife until his death, January 10, 1879, since which date she has remained a widow.

The evidence before your committee shows that the claimant is now sixty-six years of age, that for several years past she has been a sufferer from palsy and epileptic seizures to such an extent as to render her unable to pursue any calling or perform any labor by which she could obtain a living. Dr. Carleton, who has attended her since 1883, testifies that since his attendance upon her claimant also had a slight apoplectic attack; her walk is very unsteady, and she is gradually growing worse. Her only income is from a trust fund set aside by her last husband, from which she obtains an annual income of $80, the greater portion of which is needed for medicine and medical attendance.

There is no one legally bound to assist her. She has, since the death of Lathrop, been cared for in part by a daughter, who herself is compelled to earn a support for her children by sewing. For a large part of her support she is dependent upon the charity of friends. The excellency of her character and reputation is amply shown.

The provisions of the general pension laws preclude her restoration to the pension-rolls. Congress has on several occasions granted relief in similar cases. From the evidence before your committee it is clear that should the relief asked for in this case be granted, the pension-rolls would not be burdened long with this additional beneficiary.

Believing the claimant worthy of the assistance of the Government for whose preservation her husband laid down his life, your committee report favorably on the accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE HAM.

Mr. RYAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 785) granting a pension to George Ham.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George Ham, late first sergeant of Company D, Second United States Artillery.

Mr. WALLACE. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The facts in this case are set forth in the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, which is herewith adopted, and the passage of the bill recommended.

The claimant, George Ham, enlisted in Company D, Second United States Artillery, December 29, 1859, and that he was discharged at San José, Cal., February 6, 1867, having re-enlisted February 6, 1864. That he made application for pension in 1882, alleging that he contracted rheumatism at Harrison's Landing, Virginia, in July, 1862. The Commissioner of Pensions rejected the claim on the ground that there has been no disability from alleged cause since date of filing his application. The claimant testifies that since his discharge from the service the disease has been continually growing upon him, and that at times during all this period he was unable to perform manual labor, and now the disease is taking firmer hold upon him, and rendering him more unfit to perform manual labor.

Francis Wathier and William H. Cox, comrades, testify that claimant contracted rheumatism at Harrison's Landing, Virginia, about June 29, 1862; that he was unable to get on his horse without assistance, suffering much until after the battle of Antietam, and still suffering as long as affiants remained in the service, being discharged before claimant.

Claimant testifies that he was ordered to the hospital by the company commander, Emery Upton, while at Camp Upton, Virginia, September, 1862, but had the order countermanded at his own request; that he never was in the hospital; was treated for rheumatism by the assistant surgeon attached to Captain Hexiner's New Jersey Battery, at Bakersville, Md., and at White Oak Church, Va. He testifies further that Dr. George W. Church, who treated him for rheumatism in 1867, is dead. Dr. March was of Albany, N. Y., and he is unable to get his testimony; has not called a physician since for that special ailment, and has not published his ailments to his neighbors. He states that it is impossible for him to furnish further evidence in his claim; that it is impossible to find neighbors who can recollect the extent of his disability.

Dr. Knapp, of Ossawatomie, Kans., superintendent of the State Asylum for the Insane, testifies that he has known claimant for twelve years; that he was employed at the Kansas State Hospital for the Insane from 1874 to 1877; that all the time he complained more or less of rheumatism, having frequently prescribed for him in acute attacks of that disease. From his intimate acquaintance with claimant for twelve years, and daily observation for three years, 1874 to 1877, he would rate his disability to perform manual labor at one-half total. He further states that during the time of claimant's employment he complained more or less of rheumatism affecting intercostal, dorsal, and lumbar muscles, on many occasions being obliged to suspend work for a short time on account of painful respiration or inability to stoop. Claimant is a man of irreproachable character, indomitable courage and energy, but, being uneducated, his only resource is manual labor, of which he has been largely deprived by his rheumatic disability. In affiant's belief he often discharged his duties faithfully while suffering a degree of disability which would have caused the average man to abandon his position.

Henry Parker, a neighbor, testifies that he has known claimant since spring of 1874; knows that he has been frequently sick; has waited on him in his sickness, and understood his sickness was rheumatism; attacks were frequent and severe.

Dr. C. A. Wakefield, examining surgeon, Eureka, Kans., December 6, 1882, says he can find nothing to support claim for chronic rheumatism, but is satisfied claimant suffers from some obscure or rheumatic trouble. Based on claimant's statement alone; thinks his disability to amount to one-half total.

In a petition accompanying this bill, numerously signed by soldiers residing in Greenwood County, Kansas, it is set forth—also verified by indorsement on back of his certificate of honorable discharge—that the claimant was present and participated in sixty-two engagements during the late war; that he is the head of a family consisting of a wife and six children, who are dependent upon him for support; that claimant is now forty-seven years old, very poor, and health failing him rapidly; that he is worthy of attention. The presence of his comrades who testify to the increase of his disability is verified by the report of the Adjutant-General. All witnesses are credible and reliable men. No suspicion of fraud; and in consideration of his long and faithful service the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not see in this report any testimony to show that the bill should be favorably considered. I ask that it be passed over informally.

Mr. RYAN. What is the gentleman's objection to the bill?

Mr. WALLACE. I see no merit in it at all. The report presents no testimony, but simply the man's statement of his own case.

Mr. RYAN. Why, if the gentleman had listened to the reading of the report——

Mr. WALLACE. I tried to do so; I tried to find some testimony in support of the application.

Mr. RYAN. If the gentleman had listened attentively, he would have heard the testimony of physicians, and the testimony of the man's neighbors, showing his present condition; he would have heard the testimony of the man's comrades showing that, while he was in the service, he suffered from the disease for which he now asks a pension; that he participated in sixty-two engagements during the war, and is a man of irreproachable character.

Mr. WALLACE. He may be; but his comrades do not seem to be such, or the Pension Office would have allowed him a pension. In view of the estimate which the Pension Office evidently placed on their testimony, I do not think this House should go behind the action of that Department. I ask that the bill be passed over informally.

Mr. RYAN. I move, Mr. Chairman, that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 56, no 1.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Chairman, I will not call for a quorum on this question, although I think this bill upon the report as presented has no merit but is a disgrace to the House. I will allow it to pass, because there may be a contingent possibility that this man ought to receive relief in this way Therefore I will not insist on a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. On the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] to lay the bill aside to be reported favorably to the House the ayes are 56, the noes 1. The motion is adopted.

Mr. WALLACE. I now call for the regular order. If the bill just considered is a specimen of the sort of bills we are to have brought up here upon the call of individual members, I think we had better adhere to the regular order.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen on both sides demand the regular order. The Clerk will read the next bill on the Calendar.

MRS. ELLEN M. BOGGS.

Mr. CURTIN. Mr. Chairman, I am not very well, and I desire to retire from the Hall. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at the present time of the bill (S. 722) for an increase of pension to Mrs. Ellen M. Boggs.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill indicated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] will be read, after which the Chair will ask if there is objection.

Mr. WALLACE. I have been willing to waive the regular order of the evening in the hope that meritorious bills might be presented for consideration. But the first bill brought up is so destitute of merit that if this is to be a type of others——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALLACE. In deference to the gentleman from Pennsylvania I will not urge objection to his proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Ellen M. Boggs, widow of William Brenton Boggs, deceased, late a pay-director in the United States Navy, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the amount now received by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALLACE. I ask that the report be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read, the right to object being reserved.

The report (by Mr. HUTTON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 722) for increase of pension to Mrs. Ellen M. Boggs, have had the same under consideration, and concur in the Senate report, hereto attached, and recommend the passage of the bill.

William Brenton Boggs, deceased, was a pay-director in the Navy for many years, his entire period of service covering a quarter of a century. His record as an officer was without a flaw, while his gallantry was conspicuous.

The committee present, and make a part of their report, the following communication from Admiral Porter relating to this case:

OFFICE OF THE ADMIRAL,
Washington, D. C., December 13, 1880.

MY DEAR MADAM: I regret to hear that the letter I wrote you in regard to your late husband's services has been lost, either in the Naval Committee rooms or in the Pension Office. It will, however, make little difference, as I can tell you pretty much what I embodied in my former communication.

During the period I commanded the Mississippi squadron we had a large "wharf-boat," some 600 feet long, as a storehouse for the squadron. This was set on fire one night in the year 1864, by means of a torpedo, and the flames spread so rapidly that it was with the utmost difficulty those on board escaped to the shore. The different pay officers of the station had all their accounts and the public money on board this vessel.

At the time of the fire your late husband, William B. Boggs, occupied the position of fleet paymaster of the Mississippi squadron, and slept on board the vessel to guard the public papers and money. He was the only one during the conflagration who did not leave his post, but forcing his way through the flames he succeeded in securing his books and papers, and then worked his way to the roof of the wharf, whence he jumped overboard and succeeded in saving his most valuable papers.

This was not done until his clothing was burned off and he was nearly scorched to a cinder. I saw him an hour after the accident, and a more dreadful burning I never witnessed.

For many months his life was despaired of, and when he was able to move about he was so marked that his most intimate friends would scarcely know him.

No doubt his death was greatly hastened by the terrible shock his constitution underwent at that time. I am satisfied that the stern bravery shown by Paymaster Boggs on the occasion entitles his widow to a pension as much as if the action had been performed in battle.

It was not the excitement of battle that sustained him, but a heroic effort to preserve the Government accounts, the loss of which would have compelled the payment of large sums of money by the Department to persons who had no real claim for compensation. I look upon this action of Mr. Boggs as one of the most heroic which came under my observation during the war. It was a case where a man battled with the flames with almost a certainty of losing his life. With all due respect for our legislators, I am of the opinion that the widow of Paymaster Boggs is as much entitled to a pension as the widow of any other officer who was disabled during the war.

I remain, very respectfully and truly, yours,

DAVID D. PORTER,
Admiral.

Mrs. WILLIAM B. BOGGS,
Georgetown, D. C.

I omitted to state in the body of this communication what I said in my former one, that I think that Congress should give you an increase of pension to the amount of $50 a month. Thirty dollars per month is what any officer's widow can obtain whose husband has performed ordinary service. That you can claim without going to Congress, and $50 per month should be given for heroic conduct. I think if Congress can be made to understand all the bearings of this matter they will not fail to do justice in the premises.

DAVID D. PORTER.

The death of Pay Director Boggs left the claimant, his widow, in very straitened circumstances, and the committee, believing her condition to be such as to warrant the proposed increase, recommend the passage of the bill as amended, to wit:

Strike out in line 8, after the word "month," the rest of the section, with the proviso, and insert the following: "In lieu of the amount now received by law."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to ask whether it is customary in all cases to give the widows of pay directors in the Navy a pension of $50 a month?

Mr. BRADY. Not in all cases; but a great many pensions of that amount have been granted to the widows of officers of the same rank as this one.

Mr. WALLACE. What pension is the widow now receiving?

Mr. BRADY. Thirty dollars a month.

Mr. WALLACE. That is the extent to which pensions have been allowed in these cases?

Mr. BRADY. That is the extent under the general law; but there are a number of precedents for pensions of $50 in cases of this kind.

Mr. WALLACE. On what particular reasons?

Mr. BRADY. The increased pension is asked in this case on account of the heroic services of this man, as stated by Admiral Porter.

Mr. CURTIN (to Mr. WALLACE). Oh, my dear friend, in this case you should take counsel of your heart, and not of your head.

Mr. STRUBLE. I would like to inquire the rank of this officer.

A MEMBER. Colonel.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WINANS. I object to the further consideration of the bill. It is likely to give rise to considerable discussion; it certainly can not pass without discussion; and I object to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WINANS] objects.

Mr. WINANS. I insist on the regular order.

RACHEL ANN PIERPONT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2452) granting a pension to Rachel Ann Pierpont.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rachel Ann Pierpont, dependent mother of Thomas W. Bailey, late a private in Company C, Twenty-second Kentucky Infantry.

The report (by Mr. WINANS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 2452, report that they have examined the same, and adopt the Senate report, as follows:

[Senate Report No. 1110, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The petitioner claims to be the dependent mother of Thomas W. Bailey, a private in Company C, Twenty-second Kentucky Volunteers, who died before the expiration of his term of service, at Vicksburg, Miss., of disease contracted in the line of duty, which is confirmed by the report of the Adjutant-General. The application was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground of her inability to prove her dependence.

The evidence shows that Lott Pierpont, the claimant's second husband, was old and physically disqualified for supporting his family; that this soldier son was not married; that before his enlistment he labored for the support of his mother, and divided his pay with her while in the service. Two comrades testify to their intimacy with the soldier; to their knowledge of his sending his earnings to his mother; to the fact of his death; to their assistance at his burial; to their sending his effects to his mother after his death. This testimony is repeated by different witnesses, and in the opinion of the committee establishes the fact of the mother's dependence.

In her petition to Congress she says she is a widow, seventy-five years old, very poor and in feeble health; that three of her sons were in the service; that two of them died from sickness contracted in the line of duty; that the third, with whom she is now living, is disabled; that it is a financial and physical impossibility for her to comply with the demands of the Pension Commissioner.

Your committee report a bill for her relief, with a recommendation that it do pass.

There was no objection, and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES S. FURNISS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2454) granting a pension to James S. Furniss.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James S. Furniss, late a private in Company E, Seventy-fourth New York Volunteers, who enlisted May 5, 1862, and was discharged May 30, 1865.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. WINANS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 2454, report that they have examined the same, and adopt Senate report, as follows:

[Senate Report No. 1117, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The claimant enlisted in the Seventy-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers July 25, 1861; was honorably discharged April 10, 1862; re-enlisted September 5, 1862, and was honorably discharged in May, 1865. His application is for disabilities that include chronic diarrhea, disease of kidneys, and from typhoid fever, hemorrhage of right lung; and his rejection is on the ground of his failure to prove "origin."

The claimant makes a connected statement covering the time from his entering the service until his discharge, giving the dates of his admission to hospital and his transfer from one to another. The Surgeon-General's report corroborates his statement, and names typhoid fever as one of the diseases for which he was treated.

The report of the Adjutant-General verifies his service and his sick-furloughs, but adds, "Nature of sickness not stated; regimental hospital records not on file;" and the report of the Surgeon-General closes with the remark that "the records of the general and field hospital, Third Army Corps, are not on file bearing on this case." The absence of a connected history of treatment from the record is one of the discouragements encountered by nearly every suitor for a pension. While it should be the reliable source of information as to the origin of disease, it furnishes little that is satisfactory, so that the soldier is thrown upon his own resources for such evidences as is exacted by the Pension Bureau.

In this case the files contain the best quality of evidence as to the soldier's soundness and as to his exemplary character prior to enlistment.

Two of his neighbors who knew him before and after his service, who lived near, and were intimate with him—and one of whom is vouched for as entirely reliable—testify as to his broken-down condition immediately after his return; to his kidney disease, chronic diarrhea, and hemorrhages of lung; to his continued suffering and almost total incapacity to perform light labor. Dr. Cramton, of Colchester, Vt., testifies that he commenced treating claimant in 1871; found him in a debilitated condition, suffering with pain and soreness over region of kidneys and liver, torpid condition of liver, and irritation of kidneys; that he is not able to do half the work of an able-bodied man.

The medical board before whom the claimant was ordered to appear by the Commissioner of Pensions report affection of the right lung, severe cough, respiration hurried, diarrhea troublesome. At the date of the examination, April 5, 1882, they say: "He is now entirely incapacitated for manual labor. The disease has been of gradual progress and may have originated from typhoid fever."

The question as to "origin" of disease must be settled on this testimony, which is partly circumstantial. He can not obtain that of comrades, as the Pension Office requires, because, as he says, his regiment was composed of different nationalities, who dispersed to various localities. Furthermore, he was a musician, by reason of which, and his frequent illness, he was separated from intimate association with members of his regiment. It would seem that, inasmuch as he went into the service in a healthy condition, was for months sick and under treatment in hospital, returned to his home in a broken-down condition, and has traced the progress of his disabilities to a period when he is apparently very near the end of his mortal career, the "origin" of his illness must have connection with his service.

So convinced are the committee of this fact that the accompanying bill is reported for his relief, with a recommendation that it do pass.

There was no objection; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. O'HARA. I ask, by unanimous consent, to call up for present consideration a bill (H. R. 8486) granting a pension to Rebecca Morris.

Mr. NELSON and others demanded the regular order of business.

MRS. ADALINE P. LOY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2479) granting a pension to Mrs. Adaline P. Loy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Adaline P. Loy, widow of Joseph F. Loy, late captain of Company H, Fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers.

Mr. WALLACE. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. WINANS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 2479, report that they have examined the same, and adopt the Senate report, as follows:

[Senate Report No. 1203, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The claimant in this case is the widow of Joseph F. Loy, late captain of Company H, Fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers. It was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that the fatal disease of lungs did not originate in the service.

There have been six special examinations in this case. Five out of the six report in favor of allowance. The late Captain Loy was a resident of Green Bay, Wis. A number of the best citizens of that city testify to his prior soundness, to his resignation on account of ill health, and to his coming home sick. To establish the claim it is only necessary to prove the incurrence of disease. On this point the testimony of Gen. Harrison C. Hobart is quoted:

"He was well and intimately acquainted with Captain Loy before and after service; knew him as a brother professional and as a public officer; without hesitation pronounces him as sound, healthy, vigorous at the time he entered the service. 'During the service and at the time of his resignation I was connected with his regiment; met him often, and from personal knowledge state that he was then suffering with a bad cold and hard cough received while in active service under General Butler, in the Department of the Gulf. My attention was particularly called to his condition at that time. This was at Baton Rouge, in the summer of 1862. I was all through the entire campaign with him. After he resigned I remained in service, and subsequently took command of the First Brigade, First Division, Fourteenth Corps, and did not see Captain Loy again until about a year before his death. He was then a sufferer from what looked to me like consumption.'"

General EDWARD S. BRAGG, member of the House of Representatives from the second Wisconsin district, testifies that he knew Captain Loy from 1850, and prior to his enlistment he was a strong six-foot Pennsylvanian:

"I was in a position to know his physical condition in 1860, and I state that it was good. After his return from the Army he claimed to have lost his health in the swamp lands of Louisiana, or, rather, in the northern portion of Louisiana. I saw him in the winter of 1865–'66, at which time his appearance was unhealthy. I do not remember what he complained of, but he attributed his ill health to the campaign in Louisiana."

The committee refer particularly to the testimony of two of Captain Loy's associates in the Army, who knew him intimately. The reputation of all the witnesses, most of whom are personally known to the maker of this report, is of the best, and the evidence is conclusive. It is too voluminous to include in this report, but it is of the same character as the above. Taken in connection with the investigations, five of which support the claim, the committee have no hesitation in reporting the bill favorably, with a recommendation that it pass.

ELENOR C. RANSOM.

Mr. VAN EATON. I ask, by unanimous consent, to make a request. [Laughter.] Inasmuch as I will be sick if I stay here much longer, and as I have never asked to take up a pension bill since I have been in Congress, and never did in my life, I now ask to take up House bill 10795, granting a pension to Elenor C. Ransom.

Mr. NELSON demanded the regular order of business, but afterward withdrew it.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Elenor C. Ransom, of Los Angeles, Cal., who served as a hospital nurse and sanitary agent in the Union Army from February, 1863, to the close of the war, and pay her a pension of $12 a month from and after the passage of this act.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. VAN EATON. None at all. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WALLACE. Is there any report?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to laying the bill aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass?

Mr. VAN EATON. There is none. [Laughter.]

There was no objection; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. MARY A. LOGAN.

Mr. CONGER. My name appears next on the list, and I ask to take up the following bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

Mr. WALLACE. The gentleman demanded the regular order awhile ago. The gentleman from Massachusetts asked unanimous consent and the gentleman objected.

Mr. CONGER. I did it because I was first on the list.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. WALLACE. We will show how much more liberal we are on this side than the gentlemen are on the other side.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3050) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. Logan.

Mr. TAULBEE. I object.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Let the bill be read.

Mr. CONGER. Did not the Chair say the bill would be read, after which objections would be received?

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is fatal to it whenever made.

Mr. TAULBEE. I have no objection to the bill and report being printed in the RECORD, nor would I object to the reading of the bill, but it only consumes time unnecessarily.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask a parliamentary question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. After the Chair has announced the bill will be read and subsequently objection will be received, and the reading of the bill has been commenced, is it in order to interrupt the proceedings until the bill has been read?

The CHAIRMAN. Objection at any time will be fatal. If there be no objection the reading of the bill will be finished. The Chair is informed, however, that the report is not here.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I make the point of order that the reading of the bill having been commenced it should be completed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the objection is insisted upon.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAULBEE. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I make the point of order that the bill should be read before objection can be received, under the statement of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is fatal no matter when made. A call for the regular order is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. CONGER. The Chair said the bill would be read, after which objection would be asked for.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the objection can be interposed at any time, such being the practice in the House.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I make the point of order that it is not in order for the Chair to hear or entertain an objection pending the reading of the bill, because it was ordered by the Chairman that the bill should be read, after which objection would be called for. Now, pending the reading of the bill, I claim it is not in order to interrupt the Clerk and interpose an objection, but that the reading must be completed, and then, in accordance with the statement of the Chair, objection will be called for.

Mr. TAULBEE. On that point of order I desire to say that, if I caught the reading correctly, the bill was read by its title, or rather its title was read, on which I objected, and which objection is insisted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the right of the gentleman from Kentucky to interpose his objection, and demand the regular order. The Chair will again state that such is the practice of the House.

Mr. TAULBEE. I have no objection to the bill and report being printed in the RECORD, if gentlemen desire that.

Mr. ROWELL. I ask unanimous consent that the bill and the report be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to that?

Mr. TAULBEE. None whatever.

Mr. O'HARA. Both reports.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the report of the committee and the views of the minority will also be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CONGER. There have been some affidavits sent to me from the physicians who treated General LOGAN in his last illness, and I ask unanimous consent that they also be printed in the RECORD. They would have been attached to and made a part of the report in the case, but did not arrive in time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. WALLACE. I object.

Mr. CONGER. They would have been printed with the report had they been received in time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Iowa to say that they would have formed part of the report if they had been received in time, and again asks if there is objection to printing them in the RECORD with the bill and report of the committee.

Mr. WALLACE. I have no objection to the printing of the report, but to the printing of any further testimony I do object.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask unanimous consent that we may have the poor privilege, at least, of having the bill giving a pension to Mrs. Logan read.

Mr. TAULBEE. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill and report will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary A. Logan, widow of the late John A. Logan, a major-general of United States volunteers in the late war for the Union, and to pay her a pension from the passage of this act, for and during her natural life, at the rate of $2,000 per annum.

The adverse report (by Mr. TAULBEE) is as follows:

The committee submit herewith lists showing the number and names of major-generals of the regular and volunteer forces commissioned since March 4, 1861, as well as those of rear-admirals of the Navy, as follows:

RECAPITULATION.

Dead	68
Living	60
Total	128

Should Congress pass this bill, and by future legislation maintain that fairness and consistency which should characterize all legislation, the widows of each major-general and rear-admiral whose names appear above, and who leave surviving widows, will be given a pension of $2,000 a year.

Of this rank of officers appointed since March 4, 1861, there are: Major-generals, regular Army, 15; volunteer forces, 127 (less 11, explained above); rear-admirals of the Navy, 128; making a total of 259.

The committee, in the absence of data, believe that it is a fair estimate to presume that fully two-thirds of them have left or may leave widows at their death, which, if correctly estimated, would increase our pension-roll $345,000 annually, when perhaps in the majority of cases, as in this case, no relief from financial embarrassment or poverty is afforded, when it is well known that thousands of poor and aged widows of brave and worthy soldiers all over this broad land are denied the pittance of $12 per month because of their inability to connect the death of their husband with their military service, when in this case no sort of claim is advanced that the death of General LOGAN is attributable to his military service.

Prior to July 25, 1866, the rate of pension of the widow of an officer of the Army above the rank of first lieutenant, on account of service rendered prior to March 4, 1861, was one-half of the officer's pay proper; but in no case could the pension exceed the half-pay of a lieutenant-colonel. The rate of pension to widows of naval officers prior to July 25, 1866, was equal to one-half of the officer's pay while performing shore duty.

As no pensions were allowed to widows of Army officers prior to March 4, 1861, unless the death cause originated during a period of war, and the country prior thereto had lost but a few high-grade officers because of casualties of war, there were but few high-grade pensioners on the rolls at the breaking out of the late rebellion.

Title to pension in cases of widows of naval officers was not thus restricted, and consequently a number of such widows were on the rolls at $50 per month in 1861, where deceased husband held no higher rank than that of captain in the Navy, a rank relative to that of colonel in the Army. Half-pay pensions in this class of cases were continued until July 25, 1866, when, under the act of that date, all ante-rebellion pensions were placed on equal footing with those provided for by act of July 14, 1862, fixing the rates of pensions in all cases arising out of service subsequent to March 4, 1861. That act fixed as the highest rate of pension in rank $30 per month, including lieutenant-colonel, colonel, brigadier-generals, and higher officers in the Army, and captains, commanders, commodores, rear-admirals, &c., in the Navy.

The rates of pensions in rank thus fixed by the act of July 14, 1862, and the act of July 25, 1866, have not been changed by general legislation, with the exception of the rates of pensions to officers, non-commissioned and petty officers of the Navy, or their widows or minor children, on account of service prior to March 4, 1861, which had actually been allowed prior to July 25, 1866, which, under the provisions of the act of June 9, 1880, were restored to the one-half pay basis.

This action was undoubtedly based upon the well-known fact that Navy pensions are paid out of a separate fund, called the Naval pension fund, created by the act of March 2, 1799.

This committee has in a number of cases recommended the increase of the pension of widows of general officers from $30 to $50 per month, and in a few cases has recommended the passage of bills giving an original pension of $50 to the widows of general officers. In all these cases, however, it was alleged that the widow stood in actual need of the increase in order to insure her a comfortable living.

Three special acts have been passed giving the sum named in this bill to widows of general officers; they are the cases of the widows of General Hancock and General Thomas and Admiral Farragut. These officers died while in the service, and had given their whole lives to the service, hence they are not precedents for the passage of this bill.

Following is a list of such high-grade pensions:

List of widows, &c., who were placed upon the pension-rolls by special acts of Congress since March 4, 1861, at $50 per month and upward.

There is no alleged need upon the part of Mrs. Logan; upon the contrary, it is a well known fact that she is in possession of an ample estate, and while the committee entertain the highest regard for Mrs. Logan, both on account of her high character and personal worth, as well as the brave and gallant record of General LOGAN as a soldier, and his useful and spotless record as civilian and statesman, they believe that the passage of this and all similar bills would be in the direction of building up in this country an aristocracy, contrary to the very principles of an equal government for all, for which General LOGAN so gallantly fought in war and so ably contended in time of peace.

This proposition, in our opinion, originated in an emotion arising in a great measure from the sudden and unexpected death of her husband, and is not the deliberate judgment of the people whose servants we are.

The bill as it passed the Senate would continue the pension in case of remarriage, a proposition which is contrary to our whole system of pension laws.

The committee recommend that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CONGER presented the following as the views of the minority:

The minority of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, disagreeing with the report of the committee, submit the following:

JOHN A. LOGAN was one of the most distinguished, if not the most distinguished, volunteer general of our late war. His illustrious services are familiar to every citizen of the Republic, and each and all unhesitatingly join in this exalted estimate.

No man gave his country greater measure of service in her hour of supreme peril, and few gave as great. The universal wail of grief that swept the land from boundary to boundary upon the intelligence of his unexpected death but proves how great he was, and how irreparable the loss.

It is true he did not, like Generals Thomas and Hancock, die while yet in military service, but his wounds received and disabilities incurred in time of war, and his continued sufferings therefrom during all the years since, even to the last days of his fatal illness, are facts of such common acceptance as to make it reasonably certain that his death was the direct result of his military service; thus establishing the right of his widow to the same generous consideration as that already accorded to the widows of Admiral Farragut and Generals Thomas and Hancock.

This committee, by a unanimous report made on March 12, 1886, in recommending a pension of $2,000 per annum to the widow of General Hancock, gave emphatic expression to their honest convictions upon these matters, and to what this minority believe to be the real views and wishes of Congress and the country.

We can see no good reasons for a change of conviction or of practice at this time.

This report is so full, so fair, so conclusive, and so pertinent in every particular to the case under consideration that we copy it herewith.

"The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5841) granting a pension to Almira Russell Hancock, having had the same under careful consideration, respectfully submit the following report:

"General Hancock was an illustrious actor in the critical hours and dark days which overshadowed the history of his country. It will never be disputed that he met all the demands of these great and memorable occasions with a patriotic self-consecration and with a matchless soldiership that was fruitful of good fortune to his country. Recorded results of General Hancock's part in preserving the Union adorn our military annals. Gazetted for skill and gallantry on the earlier battlefields upon which he figured, his record at Gettysburg and in the desperate struggles of the Wilderness is an imperishable and priceless remembrance. Believing in the institutions of his country, he defended them with ardent zeal and at the cost of his blood. On great battlefields, where valor met valor, and where the decisive results of war occurred, Hancock was often an eminent figure. There should be no scant gratitude to a soldier who lives in the annals of war for the Union among its most splendid characters.

"His death was a source of universal public grief, as his life had been a public blessing. It was followed by quick testimonials in his honor throughout the land. Every form of popular and official demonstration attested appreciation of an heroic defender of the Republic. Enemies whom he overcame in battle are his eulogists in company with the men he led against them.

"He has passed into history without challenge of his honor and his success, where honor and success can be successfully challenged if there be flaw in either. Soldiers are judges and critics of soldiers. Before the tribunal of soldiers, Hancock's career is already of final record. Of military success he left abundant memorials. Of his magnanimity Americans he defeated in war are cheerful witnesses.

"His services were all that could be demanded of patriotic endeavor and devotion. As a type of American patriotism General Hancock will live in the history of his country and in the hearts of his countrymen regardless of sectional or party divisions.

"Brave in war, 'tender and true' in peace, his sympathies and active benevolence were to the last days of his life freely and almost lavishly expended in behalf of his sick and suffering comrades, their widows and their orphans. No appeal from them ever fell upon his unlistening ear. The very last effort of his life was the dictation of a letter, which he had not strength to sign, making a strong appeal in behalf of the widow of a deceased officer."

Supplementary to this report are papers which are official statements of General Hancock's services to his country; services which his countrymen recognize as the sufficient and eloquent plea for what General Hancock would have wished Congress to do for his widow.

The nature of the service in which General Hancock was engaged, the constant drain upon his pecuniary resources, made necessary by the position he occupied, and the further tax upon his means by his full-handed generosity to unfortunate comrades, has left his widow in straitened circumstances and to some extent dependent on private liberality. This a grateful country should not permit. This committee can not do better than to quote from the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions of the Forty-eighth Congress, which report was ably drawn by Mr. CULLOM on the bill granting an increase of pension to the widow of General George H. Thomas. This report concludes as follows:

"Although a pension of this amount has only been granted by Congress in one instance, in the case of the widow of Admiral Farragut, excepting the larger pensions to widows of deceased Presidents, the committee believe that the widow of George H. Thomas should receive the greatest possible consideration at the hands of Congress, and that the unusual and exceptional allowance proposed in her case is a fitting and very appropriate recognition of the nation's indebtedness to her most distinguished husband."

Your committee agree fully with the foregoing sentiments, and, considering this one of the exceptional cases in which it becomes their duty to recommend a departure from ordinary precedent and policy, they heartily and unanimously recommend the passage of the bill.

We confess our inability to understand this readiness on the part of the majority of the committee to recognize and reward great merit and eminent service in one faithful officer, and its refusal of like recognition and reward in another of equal merit and equal public service.

Each and every reason adduced for favorable action in the foregoing unanimous report may, with great propriety, be and is hereby reproduced by this minority for similar action in this. In fact, it may be urged with greater force. And we detract nothing from the name or fame of General Hancock when we say that his eminent career was the faithful fulfillment of obligations resulting from his military education and life employment furnished by the Government, while the transcendent achievements of General Logan were the voluntary contributions of his splendid military genius, inspired by convictions of duty and patriotic impulses seldomed equaled and never excelled.

The following is a very brief memorandum of the military history and services of General LOGAN, which is of itself a sufficient warrant for prompt and generous appropriation by Congress for his surviving widow:

The memorandum is as follows:

Grand review, Washington, D. C., May 24.
Resigned and honorably mustered out, August 17, 1865.
First suffered from rheumatism after exposure during the siege of Fort Donelson, and has periodically suffered from it ever since.

We do not believe that the people of this Government are averse to generous recognition of great public service. On the contrary, their liberal donations for the erection of splendid monuments to their illustrious dead and their generous contributions to the surviving families are incontestable proofs of their wishes in the direction of this legislation.

We believe the surviving soldiers, from private to general, will say amen to this act, knowing that this pittance granted from an overflowing Treasury to the widow of their loved comrade and grand commander in no way interferes with or imperils their rights, but rather emphasizes the willing determination of the Government to be just and generous to all its defenders.

We therefore can not concur in the adverse report of the majority, but, consistent with all former recommendations of this committee, true to our convictions of duty, and responsive to what we believe to be the universal demand of the people, we earnestly recommend the passage of the bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent to take up and consider the bill (H. R. 10473); and I wish to state that I am in precisely the same condition as the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. MORRILL. I object, and demand the regular order.

JOHN G. WARREN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2391) granting a pension to John G. Warren.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John G. Warren, late a private in the Eighth Regiment Wisconsin Light Artillery.

The report (by Mr. WINANS) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 2391, report that they have examined the same, and adopt the Senate report, as follows:

[Senate Report No. 1206, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The claimant was a private in Eighth Independent Battery, Wisconsin Light Artillery. His service commenced November 8, 1861, and ended August 10, 1865, and he applied for a pension for disabilities incurred in the service.

There is proof of his soundness when he enlisted. The record report shows that in 1862, from July to October—four months—he was sick in hospital; that in November he was discharged for total disability from chronic dysentery, and that he entered the service again. His comrades give testimony that corresponds with the record.

Junia Hix, of Oshkosh, Wis., testifies to his acquaintance with claimant since 1866; that he leased his farm to him, which he was unable to work; that his health was poor from disease contracted in the service; that he has met claimant each and every year since their acquaintance commenced, and knows he is unable to pursue his daily labors from weakness caused by constant diarrhea and debility; that he knows him to be an honest, upright man. This testimony was given the 9th of January, 1885.

Dr. Smith, of Oshkosh, Wis., testifies that he has doctored claimant at intervals during the past three years; that he is unfit for hard labor; that his affections are chronic and have affected his general health. From the condition he found him in he believes the origin of his troubles dates years back; that he has confidence in his statements.

I. H. Worley swears that he and claimant were brother soldiers. He identifies the times the claimant was ill while in service; testifies to his knowledge of him in the service and ever since, and knows that said Warren is and has been, from the time of his discharge to the present, afflicted with chronic diarrhea, and is now, to all appearance, a sick and enfeebled man. This affidavit is dated August 5, 1884.

A. Morley, a citizen of Oshkosh for thirty years, testifies that he is a near neighbor of claimant's; has known him since 1865, meeting him each and every year since that time; that he has been sick ever since he came out of the Army; that the trouble of which he complains is diarrhea and general disorder of the bowels; that to the knowledge of affiant he contracted his disease while in the Army; that claimant is an upright, truthful man. This affidavit is dated January 3, 1885.

Dr. A. B. Wright, of Oshkosh, testifies that he treated claimant ten years ago for chronic diarrhea and liver complaint; that he can not give a connected consecutive account of his treatment because his books and papers were destroyed by fire; that he knows claimant was a soldier, and that he is an honest, reliable man. Sworn to January 15, 1885.

A. F. St. Sevre Lindsfeld, late surgeon Fifteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, testifies to his treatment of claimant in August, 1862, for cramp and diarrhea contracted in marshes in extreme hot weather.

There is other testimony from like sources and to the same effect as that transferred to this report. In the opinion of the committee the evidence conforms to the requirements of the Commissioner of Pensions, and furnishes a very satisfactory basis for a favorable decision. It may be added that most of the witnesses who have testified in this case are personally known to the maker of this report to be entitled to the fullest credit. The bill is reported favorably with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

BETSY A. MOWER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8311) for the relief of Betsy A. Mower.

Mr. MORRILL. At an earlier hour in the session of this evening that bill was taken up, and an order of the committee made to report it to the House with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. Such was the order of the committee, and the bill will be so reported to the House.

JOHN MORAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8469) granting a pension to John Moran.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Moran, late of Company H of the One hundred and second New York Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. PINDAR) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8469) granting a pension to John Moran, submit the following report:

The claimant, late of Company H, One hundred and second Regiment New York Volunteers, in his declaration for pension, rejected by the Pension Office, claims disability from a gunshot wound of the left leg, received in the early part of April, 1862, by the accidental discharge of a musket while on camp guard, and heart disease contracted at Kalorama Heights, District of Columbia, from exposures at various times in March and April, 1862. The soldier having been in the service for over six months at the time of the incurrence of his disabilities, no proof of prior soundness by rulings of the Pension Office was necessary in the prosecution of his claim.

The records show the soldier sick in Carver Hospital during the months of April, May, and June, 1862, and discharged from service on May 28, 1862, on surgeon's certificate of disability, with varicose veins of both legs.

Samuel McCoy and Laban Raynor, two comrades, testify that the soldier received a gunshot wound while on guard, in April, 1862, and was taken to the hospital for treatment.

Dr. Charles S. Goodrich, surgeon, testifies that the soldier was under his professional treatment for a gunshot wound of left leg and heart disease for some days prior to being sent to hospital. He is unable to state the circumstances under which the disabilities originated, but remembers distinctly his treatment of soldier, as stated, in service, and afterwards sent him to the hospital.

The board of examining surgeons report the soldier five-eighths disabled.

The testimony of a number witnesses shows clearly that the soldier at enlistment was a sound man, and free from the disabilities for which he claimed pension, and that since his discharge he has suffered continuously from varicose veins, resulting from the gunshot wound of left leg, and heart disease, and thereby largely incapacitated for work. This claim was submitted for admission by the examiner, rating the disabilities of claimant at one-half since date of his discharge from service, but rejected by the reviewer.

Your committee believe this claimant is entitled, from the facts, to the relief asked, and recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARCEL GAGNON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2363) granting a pension to Marcel Gagnon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Marcel Gagnon, late of Company A, Hatch's batalion Minnesota Cavalry, at the rate of $10 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. O'HARA) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2363) granting a pension to Marcel Gagnon, have had the same under consideration, and adopt the following Senate report as their report, and recommend the passage of the bill:

The claimant was a member of Company A, Hatch's Battalion, Minnesota Cavalry, and claims disability resulting from scurvy incurred at Pembina, Dak., in February, 1864. He applied for a pension, proved the incurrence of the disease and resulting disability as alleged, and was allowed a pension of $4 a month. In 1885 he applied for increase, and was rejected.

The proof produced in support of his claim from the record shows that he entered post hospital at Fort Abercrombie, Dak., May 24, 1864, with scorbutus; also that in March he was sick with the same disease. His prior soundness is proved by good witnesses, whose credibility has been certified by the Pension Office.

Hugh Campbell testifies that he saw claimant a few days after his return from the army; that he wanted him to work on affiant's farm, but found him completely prostrated by reason of scurvy, and unable to make any considerable exertion; that he has been continuously disabled and is getting worse. This witness is entirely reliable, as the Pension Office ascertained.

The claimant was examined at three different times, twice by the same medical board. In December, 1881, this board pronounced him half disabled. In March, 1885, it rated his disability total. In February, 1886, another board rated him at six-eighths. It is apparent to the committee from the evidence that the man is not getting what is due to him, as admitted by the medical authorities appointed to investigate his case. They identify scurvy, and rate him higher than he is pensioned, while disinterested and reliable witnesses give evidence to show that he is disabled in the manner alleged and to an extent that has not been recognized.

The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

RICHARD B. RIANS.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be permitted to make a very brief statement. Some gentlemen have been heard to-night on account of their age, and I would like to be heard on account of my great youth. I wish to ask unanimous consent in behalf of the consideration of a bill which is not for my district, but I have been appealed to by the old governor of my State and former Secretary of the Interior, Governor Kirkwood, to take up the bill and have it considered. I have been here two nights for that purpose, and am at the head of the list for recognition. I therefore ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (S. 2519) granting an increase of pension to Richard B. Rians, and put it upon its passage.

Mr. WALLACE. Let it be read, reserving the right to object.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Richard B. Rians, late a member of Company D, Thirty-seventh Regiment of Iowa Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving, to commence from the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The report of the committee recommends the striking out of "fifty dollars" and inserting "twenty-five dollars per month," to which amendment I shall not object.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let the report be read subject to objection.

The report (by Mr. CONGER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2519) granting an increase of pension to Richard B. Rians, have considered the same, and find the facts fully set forth in the report made by the Committee on Pensions of the Senate.

They therefore adopt the same, and recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment: In the seventh line strike out the word "fifty" and insert "twenty-five."

The claimant was a private in Company D, Thirty-seventh Regiment of Iowa Volunteers. He enlisted September 1, 1862, and was discharged March 1, 1865. He was disabled by sunstroke and resulting hemicrania, with loss of right eye, which disabilities were admitted by the Pension Office, and for which he has been allowed a pension of $12 a month. This result, however, was reached by degrees. He was first pensioned at the rate of $10 per month. His disability was incurred while guarding a provision train from Memphis to La Grange, Tenn., while posted on top of a tin-roofed car, on an intensely hot day. He performed the service, and was thereby incapacitated for further exertion in the Government or any other behalf. In addressing his petition to Congress for more adequate support he says:

"I was sixty-three years of age when I enlisted. At the age of sixteen I served the United States as a soldier in the war of 1812-'14. My father, William Rians, served the country as a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and I had two brothers and a brother-in-law who served in the war of 1812. I had four sons, two sons-in-law, and three step-sons who served the Union in the war of the rebellion. I am nearly eighty-eight years of age, almost blind, and nearly helpless. I am entirely unable to do anything toward my support and need the constant attention and care of another person."

His subsequent application for increase has been disallowed on the ground that there is no increase of disability.

From an examination of the certificates of the examining surgeons the committee are convinced that he is entirely disabled. It is probably true that much of his present helplessness is referable to the infirmities of age, but it is also true that advancing years, with the disabilities that it is admitted were incurred in the service, render him a proper object for commiseration and relief. Old as he was at his enlistment, he passed a good examination, was accepted, and served well.

The committee think that, being old, blind, and otherwise helpless, he is entitled to favor. If any are of the opinion that sustenance and care should be restricted, on economic grounds, to his present supply, it is presumable that in the ordinary course of events he will not long be a Government charge.

In view of his helplessness and past record, and the rarity of this class of cases, the committee feel that it is only just to favor him.

The bill is reported favorably with a recommendation that it do pass.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GENERAL SPEED S. FRY.

Mr. WOLFORD. I ask unanimous consent to take up and pass the bill (H. R. 6732) for the relief of General Speed S. Fry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Speed S. Fry, at the rate of $100 per month, during his natural life.

The report (by Mr. TAULBEE) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6732) for the relief of General Speed S. Fry, submit the following report:

Speed S. Fry served as a captain in the war with Mexico, and so distinguished himself in the battle of Buena Vista as to receive favorable mention in the report of General Taylor.

He was mustered into the United States volunteer service on October 28, 1861, as colonel of —— Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, in which capacity he served faithfully until January, 1862, when he was promoted to the rank of brigadier-general of volunteers for gallant and meritorious conduct in the battle of Mill Springs, Kentucky. He served as brigadier-general until the close of the war.

He is now on the pension-roll for deafness.

He is now almost totally deaf, broken down in health, is over seventy years old, and almost penniless.

Your committee are of opinion that the rating of pensions for this class of disability is insufficient, and that General Fry is entitled to a higher rate of pension for the few remaining years of his life than that now received by him. They therefore report back the bill with the recommendation that it be amended by striking out in line 5 of the bill the words "one hundred" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifty," and that the bill as so amended do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLFORD. Mr. Chairman [cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"], I hope gentlemen will hear me for just one minute. If ever there was a case where a man deserved a pension of $100 a month, this is such a case. [Cries of "Vote!"] Now I want to give a very few reasons why I think we should not adopt the amendment of the committee reducing this pension. [Renewed cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Very well, as the committee seems unwilling to hear, I will say nothing more, but let the committee vote on the question.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY WOOD.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire on behalf of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH], who has so often presided over the Committee of the Whole at these Friday night sessions, to ask unanimous consent to take up a bill of his. That gentleman has had no opportunity to call up bills, having been in the Chair. I hope that this courtesy will be extended to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7971) granting a pension to Mary Wood.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Mary Wood, of Adair County, Missouri, regimental nurse of the Seventh Missouri Cavalry during the late war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $— per month.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended to amend by filling the blank with the word "twelve;" so that it would read "and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

Mr. WALLACE. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7971) granting a pension to Mary Wood, respectfully submit the following report:

Mrs. Wood was an army nurse, and was with the Seventh Missouri Cavalry Volunteers from September, 1861, to November, 1864, and was wounded in the shoulder. Her services and experience are best stated in a memorial to Congress signed by twenty-four of the officers and enlisted men of said regiment, as follows:

KIRKSVILLE, MO., March 11, 1886.

To the Forty-ninth Congress of the United States of America:

We, the undersigned officers and members of the Seventh Missouri Cavalry Volunteers, would respectfully represent to your honorable body that one Mrs. Mary Wood, a citizen of Kirksville, Mo., was an army nurse in the aforesaid regiment from September, 1861, to November, 1864, by order of Col. Daniel Huston, jr., of the United States Army. Her husband, David Wood, was a member of Company C, same regiment. She was in the battle of Prairie Grove, and all other engagements in which the regiment took part, and while the invalid part of the regiment was on board of a steamer en route for Little Rock, Ark., the steamer was fired on and she was wounded, and the ball still remains in her shoulder, and from this wound she is disqualified from the performance of manual labor. She is poor, and depends upon the labor of herself and invalid husband for support.

We, the aforesaid officers and members of the aforesaid regiment, knowing the foregoing facts to be true, and knowing said Mary Wood, who is sixty-six years of age, to be a woman of good character, would respectfully pray your honorable body to enact some law whereby she may be either placed upon the pension-roll or may gain some relief, or for any other relief which to your honorable body may seem just and proper.

Drs. Burton, Goben, and Grove, the board of examining surgeons at Kirksville, examined Mrs. Wood on April 28, 1886, and report:

"We find a gunshot wound of left shoulder. Ball entered over and probably fractured acromion process, passed down the bicipital groove, and remains embedded in the deltoid muscle, 3 inches from entrance; ball about 32 caliber. One inch atrophy of left shoulder. Motions cramped and impaired one-half. Degree of disability one-half."

Maj. A. H. Linder and Lieut. T. C. Harris, of said regiment, testify April 29, 1886, that the facts above stated in the memorial aforesaid are true.

The fact of the service of claimant, her being wounded while in line of duty, and her present disability therefrom being clearly established, your committee recommend the passage of the bill, with an amendment to insert the word "twelve" after the word "of," in line 7.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN D. FINCHER.

Mr. FUNSTON. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 1768) granting a pension to John D. Fincher.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John D. Fincher, late of Company H, One hundred and thirty-second Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Mr. WALLACE. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1768) granting a pension to John D. Fincher, submit the following report:

A full and complete statement of this case is found in the Senate report hereto attached and made a part of this report:

The claimant was a private in Company H, One hundred and thirty-second Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers.

He was discharged on the 24th day of February, 1863. Prior to his discharge he was in the United States general hospital at Philadelphia sixty days, and in his certificate the surgeon says: "The disease was contracted by exposure and fatigue while performing the duties of a soldier." The surgeon adds that he was discharged for "general debility, which will disable him from performing the duties of a soldier for a great length of time."

The report of the Surgeon-General says: "He entered Saint Aloysius Hospital, Washington, D. C., November 15, 1862, with diarrhea;" that he entered general hospital, Race street, Philadelphia, December 18, 1862, with bronchitis, and was discharged from service February 25, 1863.

The Adjutant-General reports him in hospital at Warrenton, Va.; that he was left sick at Warrenton; that muster-out roll of company, dated May 24, 1863, reports him discharged for disability at Race street hospital, as above.

Comrade Francis M. Thomas testifies:

"That he knew said John D. Fincher since early boyhood; that for at least five years prior to his enlistment he had opportunities of seeing him daily, and that he had no reason to doubt his soundness of health; that he was a comrade of his in Company H, One hundred and twenty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, and that he was taken sick at or near Warrenton, Va., in the fall of 1862, and from there sent to Washington to hospital; that he believes said John D. Fincher still suffers from the effect of his sickness and exposure."

This testimony was given on the 10th of March, 1884.

The claimant alleges that at Warrenton, Va., November 15, 1862, he contracted bilious fever followed by chronic diarrhea and lung trouble.

The examining surgeon identifies chronic diarrhea, but not lung disease; but he says there may be some pleuritic adhesions. The examining board find nothing the matter with him; a circumstance so inconsistent with the whole record of the case as to be inexplicable to the committee. The proof of his former soundness, of his contracting disease, and of its present existence, is so satisfactory as to justify the committee in reporting the bill favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent to call up for consideration the bill (S. 2111).

Mr. BOUTELLE. I rise to a question of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I want to ask under what order we are proceeding here.

The CHAIRMAN. We are proceeding by unanimous consent. Does the gentleman from Maine object?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have risen to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. My point of order is that in the first place it was understood we were obliged to adhere to the regular order of the Calendar. Then unanimous consent was given that gentlemen should be recognized in accordance with a list prepared somewhere by somebody; and I supposed we were proceeding under that. Now I find we are neither proceeding with bills in their order on the Calendar nor in accordance with the list that has been made out. I should like to know in what order we are proceeding.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee declined to agree to any order, and we have been proceeding in regular order, except when unanimous consent is given to a member to call up a measure. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANDERSON] is now recognized.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Does it depend on the question who shouts the loudest?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized. He asks to call up for consideration the bill he has indicated. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

JACOB SMITH.

The bill (S. 2111) granting a pension to Jacob Smith, called up by Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jacob Smith, late of Company E, Second West Virginia Cavalry.

Mr. WALLACE. I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. ELLSBERRY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2111) granting a pension to Jacob Smith, late a private in Company E, Second West Virginia Cavalry, having had the same under consideration, make the following report:

The Senate during the first session of this Congress passed a bill placing claimant's name on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and, after careful examination of the Senate report and papers on file in this claim, your committee concur in the Senate report hereunto attached and report the bill back to the House, recommending the passage of the same.

[Senate Report No. 875, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The petitioner was a private in Company E, Sixth West Virginia Cavalry. The report of the Adjutant-General identifies the soldier as in service from the date of his enlistment, October 9, 1862, to the date of his discharge, November 13, 1865, and says:

"Prisoner of war records show him captured at New Creek, Virginia, November 28, 1864; confined at Richmond, Va., December 7, 1864; paroled at Richmond, Va., February 15, 1865. No evidence of disability; no regimental hospital records, Sixth West Virginia Cavalry, on file."

The petitioner claims that he contracted rheumatism while in prison at Richmond, as shown, and on oath he says, "The prison being cold and damp—in fact, constantly wet and very filthy." This statement is so self-evident that it needs no affirmation, and was almost certain to produce the disability claimed.

The examining surgeon certifies to the existence of rheumatism, which he rates at half total. His attending physician testifies to the same facts, and to the good character of the soldier.

From the statements, medical and otherwise, it appears that the man's joints were stiffened, and that there was a creaking sound of the knee-joints.
